Why Use Hot Pack In Home Canning

"Hot pack" canning is the method now recommended by the United States Department of Agriculture in its latest bulletin on home canning. The advantages of both the old-fashioned open-kettle method and the cold-pack method are combined in the hot pack.

In the so-called open-kettle method the material to be canned is cooked directly in an open vessel as a means of killing the bacteria, and then filled into sterilized jars and sealed immediately. This method is suitable only for fruits and tomatoes, and has certain disadvantages, even with them. One is the necessity for sterilizing the jars before they are filled; another is the danger of contamination during filling, or the incorporation of air containing microorganisms likely to cause spoilage.

The term "cold pack" has been applied to the method in which the material is packed cold into the containers and then processed. The chief disadvantage of this method is that when the material is packed cold a longer time is required for that at the center of the can to reach the temperature of the canner. This is especially true in the case of vegetables that are thick and pasty, such as corn, for they heat through very slowly. Some fruits, however, with a large proportion of added liquid, may heat throug quickly and be successfully canned by this method, but the shrinkage is sometimes considerable.

In the "hot pack" method a short pre cooking of the material is used to wilt and shrink it so as to facilitate packing. An inclosed air is driven out. The material is then filled into the containers boiling hot and processed immediately, either by the water bath, if fruits or tomatoes, or in a steam-pressure canner, in the case of nonacid vegetables. Containers so packed may be sealed without the usual exhaust, and the time required for the material to reach the temperature of the canner is decreased for containers of all sizes.

The World is full o' Sunshine

O. Lawrence Hawthorne

Spring again! That means the time is here for makin' better friends;
People looks a lot more human when the long, cold Winter ends.
This ol' world was made fer laughter, seasoned just a bit with tears,
So I'd like to send a few ol'-fashioned heart-throbs down the years.
I like to see folks happy an' I like to hear 'em sing—
Oh, the time that's best to sow the seeds o' love is in the Spring!

Yes, the world is full o' sunshine, but some folks don't seem to know
That you've got to open wide yer doors if you would find it so.
People ain't much good as neighbors till the grass gets pretty long
An' they has to borrow garden tools! They find there ain't much wrong
In exchangin' bulbs an' lilac roots, and swappin' friendly chat,
'Cause the Springtime makes 'em feel that life was made for things like that.

There's a lot o' satisfaction to be got from growin' smiles;
It ain't long before their sweetness fills the air fer miles an' miles!
There ain't half as many flowers as there really ought to be,
So that leaves a heap o' cheer-producin' chance fer you an' me.
While the Springtime brings us bird songs an' there's beauty everywhere,
I'm right glad that when we're plantin' shrubs we're diggin' graves for care.

Spring is here! The bees is hummin'! Don't you hear that robin sing?
He's describin' with his music all the joy the blossoms bring.
Life is surely wo'th the livin' when yer heart is young an' free,
And yer makin' others happy like you know they'd oughter be.
There ain't no two ways about it, folks that get their share o' cheer
Is the ones that play together in the Springtime of the year.

Drop Cloche From Paris Hat Styles

Small Model Still in Vogue; Large Chapeau Shown for Summer Wear.

The "hat consciousness" idea being broadcast contradicts all our traditions, which have so long been directed to the end of forgetting clothes and of being either sincerely or at least politely unconscious of our dress, including our bonnet, says a fashion writer in the New York Times. Now we are counseled to become keenly alive and observant, especially of millinery, and to evolve from our inner consciousness an appreciation of our type and artistic possibilities. American women are moving constantly further away from the old-time conventions and they are following less the fashions as such, whatever they happen to be, in order to express themselves in terms of their own individuality.

Sometimes there seem to be long periods of monotony in which nothing but the commonplace is reflected in gowns and hats. It seems a stupid inconsistency when the form these things take is unlovely, having no quality of art or grace. When ennui does finally pass, there is compensation for both the milliner who designs and the woman who wears the freshly inspired creations. This season there is much of art significance and definite style in the millinery, more beauty and achievement in color. Artists say that understanding of color in dress is just making itself felt, and certainly it is illuminating the whole world of fashion in woman's dress.

Little Hat a Favorite.

A little hat shaped like an inverted saucepan has been for a surprising length of time the center of the fashion picture. Plain, unflattering, to many exceedingly uncomfortable, with not one line of grace or other distinction than its name, the "cloche" has become and has tenaciously remained in style. Numbers, cheapness and all that goes to make common and kill a mode has had slight effect upon this hat species. Season after season it has been beloved alike of the woman who is exclusive and of her who must be economical.

At the beginning of this spring millinery exhibitions from Paris and at home showed many of the familiar cloche shapes. The first were in felt, in beaver, in stitched satin, silk or cloth, and later in straw, or straw combined with silk. With a slightly varied brim treatment, a bit more elasticity in trimming, the cloche, by that or some other name, still has its friends in this part of the world.

Gradually the tight, round shape has been succeeded, however, by the Gigolo and other variants of foreign authorship, some of them historically reminiscent and picturesque. In each of them the crown is high and in the Gigolo and shapes of similar line and feeling the draped material—whether it is a cluster of folds, a few wrinkles or a soft swathing of the goods—has that appearance of sophisticated simplicity that is very misleading. The effect is really an evidence of skill, and most amateur milliners who try their hand, thinking to have several small hats for the price of one, have only disappointment for their experiment.

The foundation for almost all of the draped hats is square, far more becoming to most women than the round line, and one sees now fewer "moon" faces framed in a halo of cloth or straw.

Among Distinctive Shapes.

The distinctive shapes accepted by American women of fashion come from houses which have combined this year in rescuing the useful, almost indispensable small hat from the dullness of repetitions. Reboux's is a brilliant collection in which are many original designs of every type, from the most practical "outing" shape and "tailleur" to the sort of hat known under the inclusive title of "brimless," which means a toque of one kind or another.

In such and all of these the crown is creased, folded or draped—just so it will not be a plain unbroken surface. One of the first spring models from Reboux has been very successful and is likely to carry on for several months. This hat is built of sangha in oatmeal—one of the latest shades—and is trimmed with a band and two ornamental ends of brown grosgrain ribbon. The crown, high at the back and sloping toward the front, is gathered into a cluster of little folds at one side; and the brim though narrow, is drawn low, shading the eyes, and turns sharply up across the back.

Three clearly defined novelties are illustrated in this model—the shape the use of grosgrain ribbon, and the combination of brown with tan, beige sand or other near relatives.

It is said of Reboux that the crown of every hat from this house, whatever its material, is creased, which appears to be the idea of most millinery designers. Apart from the more or less vagabond hat, the brimless is presented in several models of compelling attraction. In a conspicuously smart design, a turban with high crown softly draped, the fullness swung toward the back, is of green straw. It entirely covers the coiffure, brow and ears, and has two bands of grosgrain ribbon an inch and a half wide drawn around the crown, the first close to the edge and each finished with a tailored bow overlapping at one side.

The straw in the hat is one of the many new materials of this season—delicate as lace, supple and yet wiry. In many of the new shapes these straws are used with grosgrain ribbon to build the hat itself, without a vestige of trimming, as in a rather extreme model from Agnes in which black and green are put together. This hat is of the delicate green straw with black grosgrain silk used at the back, over the crown and along the narrow roll brim at either side. Another brimless model omits the straw and is made together of wide grosgrain ribbon, again in that very fashionable partnership of beige and brown.

Uses Velvet Beret.

Departing from a self-established mode, Reboux makes a velvet beret that is draped low at a rakish angle over one ear, and another hat of opposite type in two-toned satin and grosgrain ribbon, repeating the beige and brown scheme. Countless other styles in the small hat are shown from prominent houses at Paris that have been well received and widely copied on this side.

Camille Roger makes a chic little hat of black felt and tricot, having a square crown with the materials contrasted in sections, so to speak, the very narrow brim rolled upward back and front, and a wee cravat bow to mark the middle of the back. Jane Blanchot makes a small hat all of grosgrain with a modified crown draped with the ribbon, a narrow brim to shade the eyes, and an ornament of fancy feathers in front.

A pretty millinery ensemble from this clever designer has the hat of black straw, the brim bent down at one side, rolling away from the coiffure on the other side. Grosgrain ribbon in black and four shades of pink are drawn around the crown, with a strap end at the back, and this delightful and very modish combination of color is repeated in a scarf that winds once about the throat.

The charm of color monotone is illustrated by Lemonnier in a close hat of draped straw of fine quality called silk alpaca, all in one shade of gray-green.

For the soft silk hat of ribbon or taffeta or even the new summer felts there is a short, stubby hatpin. The crystal and colored glass tops of these pins contribute just the right amount of color and trimming required on such hats.

Marcasite work is combined with sterling silver in earrings in loops, ovals and pendant designs. Onyx, pearls and colored stones are also frequently combined.

Charming sunshades of an elaborate kind are made of fine stuffs. These include taffeta, grosgrain, which is particularly smart this year, chiffon ribbon and lace. Very handsome parasols in the canopy lines brought out last season are covered with taffeta, shirred, finely plaited or ruffled. Many rows of grosgrain, moire or taffeta ribbon are used for some, often illustrating delightful schemes in color. Chantilly lace, both black and white, over the same or another color, makes a bit of elegance in a parasol.

EVERYDAY GOOD THINGS

There is nothing that takes the place of a good salad for a luncheon, dinner or supper dish.

Garden Delight.—Take one each of fresh, green and red pepper, chop fine and mix with one cupful of cottage cheese which has been well seasoned and enriched with butter or cream. Line salad plates with lettuce, and lay on each one-half of a banana cut lengthwise, add salad dressing to the cheese and cover each with the cheese dressing.

Halibut Souffle.—Take one cupful of halibut flaked, one cupful of thick white sauce, one egg beaten stiff, one tablespoonful of lemon juice, one teaspoonful of worcestershire sauce, salt and pepper to taste, one cupful of bread crumbs and two tablespoonfuls of grated cheese. Mix the flaked fish with the white sauce, add the lemon juice, and worcestershire sauce, salt and pepper, then fold in the egg white beaten stiff. Butter a glass baking dish; fill three-quarters full, leaving room for the crumbs and cheese on top. Mix the crumbs with melted butter and the grated cheese. Sprinkle over the souffle, bake in a hot oven fifteen minutes. Serve with a spicy tomato sauce if liked.

Prune Cake.—Take one cupful of sugar, two tablespoonfuls of butter, one cupful of cooked prunes, finely chopped; one-half cupful of prune juice, one teaspoonful of soda, two cupfuls of flour, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one teaspoonful of cinnamon, one-half teaspoonful of cloves, one teaspoonful of nutmeg. Mix in the order given, sifting flour and dry ingredients together. Bake in two layers about thirty minutes. Ice with one cupful of powdered sugar, three tablespoonfuls of butter and enough cream to make of the consistency to spread. The butter should be well creamed with the sugar before the cream is added.

Ox Tongues and Spinach.—The canned tongue and canned spinach may be used for a hurry-up meal. Heat the tongue and place on a platter neatly sliced. Surround with a border of seasoned spinach chopped, garnished with sliced hard-cooked eggs.

Baked Ham.—For each thick slice of ham take one cupful of milk or enough to cover. Cover and bake in a slow oven for an hour or more.

Dishes From Grains.

The coarser foods are quite necessary in our diet and should be freely used at all times of the year.

Scotch Oat Crackers.—Put two cupfuls of rolled oats through the meat grinder, add one-fourth of a cupful each of milk and molasses, one and one-half tablespoonfuls of fat, one-fourth of a teaspoonful of soda, one teaspoonful of salt and one-fourth of a cupful of raisins or nuts cut into bits. Mix well, roll very thin and cut into fancy shapes. Bake twenty minutes in a moderate oven.

Oatmeal Soup.—Take one-half can of tomatoes, one-third of a cupful of oatmeal, two cupfuls of water, one tablespoonful of sugar, one-half of a small onion, pepper and salt to taste, a bit of bayleaf and two tablespoonfuls of peanut butter. Cook one hour, rub through a sieve, add seasoning if needed and serve hot.

Hominy Gems.—Pour one cupful of scalded milk over half a cupful of corn meal, add one-fourth of a cupful of hominy, a tablespoonful of sugar and the same of shortening; mix well, cool, add a yolk beaten thick and a white beaten stiff. Sift in one and one-half teaspoonfuls of baking powder and a little salt; beat well and bake in hot well-greased gem pans.

Corn Meal Gems.—Take one-half cupful of corn meal, add one cupful of flour, three teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one tablespoonful of sugar, one tablespoonful of melted butter, one-half teaspoonful of salt, three-fourths of a cupful of milk and one egg. Boil the milk, scald the corn meal, cool and add the remaining ingredients. Bake in well-greased muffin tins.

Hominy and Pecan Croquettes.—Boil one-half cupful of hominy with a teaspoonful of salt in two cupfuls of water five minutes, then put into a double boiler and cook two hours. Add two tablespoonfuls of shortening, one-half cupful of chopped pecans and a teaspoonful of scraped onion. Cool and shape into cylinders. Beat one egg lightly, add two tablespoonfuls of water, roll the croquettes in crumbs, then egg, then in crumbs again and fry in deep fat. This makes one dozen croquettes.

Rich Drop Cookies.—Cream one-half cupful of butter, add one-half cupful of sugar, one egg well beaten, three-fourths cupful of flour, one-half teaspoonful of vanilla, raisins, nuts or citron. Drop by teaspoonful on butter sheet, spread thinly with a knife dipped in water; decorate with fruit and nuts.

EVERY 20 YEARS COMES ACCIDENT

Statistician Figures Average Driver Can Expect Serious Accident.

The average automobile driver may expect to have a serious accident about once in twenty years.

But one or two per cent of the drivers should thank their special guardian angels if they don't smash a car or run down a pedestrian every six months or oftener.

This is the way drivers classify under today's standards and conditions, according to Dr. Walter V. Bingham, of New York, director of the Personal Research federation.

One of the large problems of highway safety, he says, is to recognize incorrigibles before they do any damage, and to banish them from the steering wheel.

Pick Out Repeaters.

Accident "repeaters" cannot be picked out by outward physical appearance, psychologists agree. There probably are just as many blonds among them as brunettes. They have no distinctive facial characteristics, or other earmarks.

"How, then, can you determine who will be predisposed to accidents before the subject begins driving?" The question was put up to Doctor Bingham, who was chairman of the committee on causes of accidents reporting at Secretary Hoover's recent safety conference, and also to Dr. F. A. Moss, professor of psychology at George Washington university and secretary of the same committee.

"There are personal factors which can be revealed by psychology laboratory test of the applicant for a driver's license," answers Doctor Bingham. "You can determine exactly how long it takes to act after an emergency is perceived.

"The average driver, we have found, requires about one-half a second in emergency to take his foot off the accelerator and put it on the brake. This means the car traveling at thirty miles an hour would go about twenty-two feet before the driver acted.

"Some types of nervous disorders unfit a person to drive, while others have no such effect. One eminent psychologist says that a person suffering from acute melancholia is one of the safest of all drivers, because he takes extreme precautions against accidents."

Extensive Tests Made.

Doctor Moss has made extensive tests into the personal factors which cause accidents. One of his tests was a simple device of "What's wrong with this picture?" to determine a perception of danger. He has applied the standard intelligence test to drivers also.

A high grade of general intelligence is not necessary to be a good driver, he demonstrated, but a subnormal mentality makes a dangerous driver. He found taxicab chauffeurs with the minds of seven-year-old children, and they were having trouble.

"A small number of people become chilled and quite helpless from fear when confronted by sudden emergency," says Doctor Moss. "We have located them in tests on students in the university."

"It is possible, also, to judge one's eye and hand co-ordination by tests. This is important in passing cars and driving up to curbs. These tests are quick and practical and will locate dangerous traits.

"Women are no more dangerous as drivers than men, given equal practice. They have no distinctive psychological tendency to accidents."

The influence of fatigue on automobile accidents, according to these authorities, is marked. A tabulation of 28,444 traffic accidents in New York state last year showed that more than twice as many accidents occurred during the evening rush hour as in the morning rush hour.

AUTOMOBILE GRAVEYARD GOOD INVESTMENT

At Vintage, near Lancaster, Pa., Morris Roseman started an idea to work eleven years ago. It was to buy all the old automobiles he could get, dismantle them, and when anyone wanted parts to a certain machine, which was out of date, they would have to come to him. The idea was a success from the start. There are always over 400 old cars on hand in his "graveyard" as shown in this photograph at Vintage. His idea made him rich.

Watch Batteries Closely to Obtain Best Results

Every automobile owner knows that unless he oils his motor regularly and keeps his radiator filled for cooling, his engine will 'burn up' and refuse to do its work. He realizes, too, that unless the gears and bearings are lubricated periodically they will be out of commission in short order.

It is a peculiar fact, however, that many of these same motorists ignore the storage battery until it dies an unnatural death. They seem to think it will take care of itself. But if it is accorded as careful and regular attention as the car, many battery ills may be prevented.

Storage batteries are like human beings in that they must have 'food' and 'drink' regularly or they will weaken and their lives be shortened. By 'food' is meant the current which must be put back by the generator.

Regular inspection will tell you the condition of your battery. If it is undercharged the specific gravity of the electrolyte will be 1,250 or less; if it is overcharged it will be over 1,300, and the battery will show signs of excessive heat and spraying.

The most common and ruinous abuse of the battery is to let it go 'dry.' The electrolyte solution must always completely cover the plates in all cells.

Pneumatic-Tired Trucks Hang Spare Under Frame

On many pneumatic-tired trucks the spare tire can best be carried under the frame behind the rear axle, as shown. The objection to this mounting is the difficulty of keeping the tire from chafing against the parts of the carriage with which it comes in contact. A good method of preventing this trouble is to bolt two hard-wood blocks, cut as indicated in the detail, to the carrier. Two heavy leather straps are wrapped around the tire and carried at diagonal points to keep the tire on securely, and a heavy chain with a padlock is used to prevent theft.—G. C. Douglas, Raleigh, N. C., in Popular Magazine.

Motor Cars on Farms in Middle-Western States

Survey of farm-home conditions in sixteen middle-western states reveals that more than 50 per cent of the women in the district drive automobiles. On the other hand, more than 67 per cent still draw water from wells or pumps outside the house, and less than 28 per cent have sinks with drains in the kitchen. Less than 18 per cent of the homes surveyed had bathtubs; there were washing machines in more than 40 per cent of the homes, and in nearly 17 per cent the washers were run from the farm-power system. Only a little more than 11 per cent of the farm wives kept any kind of record of their expenditures.—Popular Mechanics.

Other Man Drives Your Car Better on a Hill

It invariably happens that when you let some one else drive your car he makes it perform better on hills than you can. There is no mystery to this. It's just a matter of feeding gas properly, and the stranger at the wheel does the right thing without knowing why he does it.

When you are thoroughly familiar with your engine you are likely to feed it too much gas at the wrong time. The stranger proceeds on the assumption that the engine will be equal to the hill and when it begins to slow down he gives it more gas.

Bruce C. Green, farmer of Monroe township, was elected president of the Grant county farm bureau as successor to Louis L. Needler, who will go to Indianapolis to take up his duties as secretary-treasurer of the state federation.

To provide a marker for an historic Hoosier spot, a movement has been started to erect a replica of the original Fort Wayne on the bank of the Maumee river a short distance from the site of the old fort. Prominent citizens of Fort Wayne have discussed the proposed building, and a similar proposal has been made to the Fort Wayne post of the American Legion.

Formal presentation of their gift of $500,000 to the building fund of the James Whitcomb Riley Hospital for Children in Indianapolis, in fulfillment of their pledge made last January, was made by the Ball brothers of Muncie, philanthropists whose gifts to charitable and educational and benevolent institutions in the past several years have totaled millions of dollars.

A six weeks' annual school for librarians and assistants of libraries at high schools of Indiana is being held in the senate chamber in Indianapolis. The school is under the direction of the state library and historical bureau and is under the direct supervision of Miss Della F. Northey of that department. According to Miss Northey, 48 students have enrolled for the work.

Purdue university paused in its bestowal of honorary recognition upon distinguished alumni to confer signal recognition upon Loyell L. For four years 28 Purdue faculty members have co-operated to give Martin regular university instruction in his home.

Cutworms have invaded the extensive peppermint fields of St. Joseph county and threaten the 1926 crop. Acting under instructions of E. C. Bird, county agricultural expert, the growers are making desperate efforts to eradicate the worms. Conditions are such that peppermint will, as in the case of the 1925 yield, command unusual prices. Practically 90 per cent of the mint grown in the United States comes out of the St. Joseph valley.

A complete tieup of Gary's $10,000,000 building program occurred when the local building contractors' association and all building material dealers declared a lockout against organized labor, the lockout resulting from the unions' action in refusing to work on jobs where factory glazed window sash is used. The lockout order is city-wide and affects every union, tying up the city's record building program as a result. Two thousand men are affected.

The question whether children shall be permitted to play baseball and other games in the public square of Hartsville, has divided the people of the town in two factions. The problem has been an issue since John Coffey, a member of the town board, resigned because the board repealed an ordinance prohibiting children playing in the square. Members of the Community club, who have planted flowers in the square, wish the children barred so as to maintain a beauty spot.

The seriousness of the horse situation is revealed in a survey recently by Jesse Wood, Martin county agricultural agent. Sixty-one of 100 farmers answered inquiries showing that 90 per cent of horses and mules were over ten years of age. Their usefulness declines at ten years. Twenty per cent were between five and ten years and 20 per cent under five years of age. Only 25 colts were expected this year on 16 of the 61 farms. The survey showed that the 61 farms had 112 mules and 178 horses.

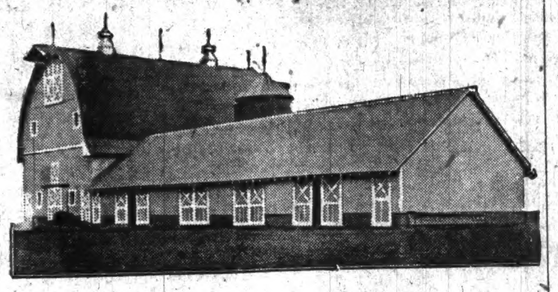
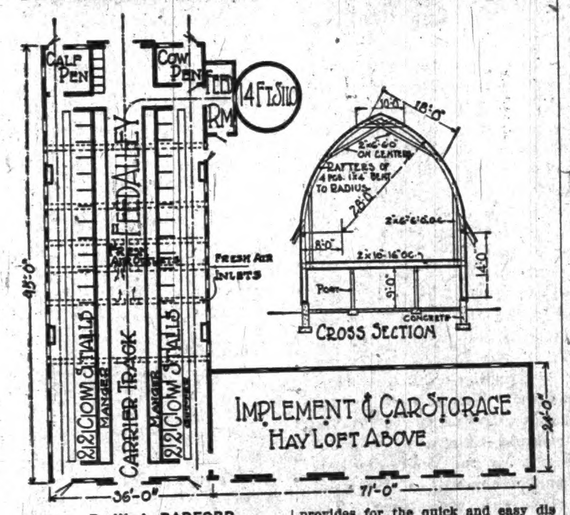
Modern Dairy Barn Provides for Live Stock, Feed and Implements





By W. A. RADFORD

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all problems pertaining to the subject of building work on the farm, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as editor, author and manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on the subject. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 1827 Prairie avenue, Chicago, Ill., and only inclose two-cent stamp for reply.

On the dairy farm there are three things for which suitable housing must be provided if the farm is to be a successful paying proposition. These are the stock, the feed and the implements. No one of the three can be safely neglected, for neglect in any case means waste which eats up the profits. Therefore one or more buildings must be provided to care for them and these buildings can be very effectively worked into a single group as has been done in the case illustrated.

This building is an "L" shape. One wing is a dairy barn for housing the stock, the other is an implement shed for the protection of all implements and tools, and above each is a loft for the storage of feed supplemented by the silo placed at a corner of the dairy barn. While the greater part of the loft space is above the dairy barn wing, the space under the roof of the implement shed has been well and economically used as a hay loft.

The dairy barn portion of this building is of the conventional type. It is 95 feet long and 36 feet wide with stalls for 44 cows and a cow pen and calf pen in addition. The stalls are arranged in two rows. Back of each row there are litter alleys next to the outer walls of the building. These alleys have cement floors with drainage gutters to facilitate the work of keeping the stalls in a clean sanitary condition. An overhead carrier track provides for the quick and easy disposal of litter.

A central feed alley runs down the center of the barn, serving both rows of stalls. It, too, is provided with an overhead carrier track, so that the work of feeding may involve as little manual labor and time as possible. The stanchions and mangers of this barn are of the most approved modern steel construction and every piece of equipment throughout is of the same standard. The calf and cow pens are at the far end of the barn near the feed room and silo. The silo is connected with the barn proper by the feed room and from it the carrier track extends down the feed alley.

This barn communicates with the implement shed through a small door while in the front of the shed are two small doors, one at each end, and four wide doors admitting implements, wagons, cars, trucks or tractors.

At the back of the implement shed a series of windows admit light through the rear wall, while the walls of the dairy barn are very fully supplied with windows so the stock may have an abundance of sunlight in their home. Ventilation is completely cared for by means of foul-air shafts equally spaced along the side walls and emptying through the roof ventilators. There are four of these shafts of such size as to assure clean sweet air in the barn at all times.

These units are all of frame construction. The dairy barn is built with the usual horizontal siding, while the implement shed has siding run vertically and the silo is of wood staves. All are built on solid concrete foundations and are roofed with a composition roofing material. They are kept well painted all the time so that they make a neat, attractive appearance and are protected from the decay which, unless guarded against, is equally as destructive as fire.

Price of Land Should Govern Cost of Home

Many home builders at the outset of construction work after the purchase of a lot for the new home are confronted with a serious problem, according to leaders in the building world.

The question so often asked is, "What value house should I build?"

In answer to that question experts will say that the safe rule is that the cost of the building should approximately equal five times the value of the land on which the house or building is constructed.

While there are exceptions to this proportion, it forms a medium line of departure, applying most closely to business property whether the building is a cheap $5,000 one-story brick or a $3,000,000 skyscraper on a higher priced location.

On a street whose traffic conditions allow the prediction that the territory will grow there are still other exceptions. Here the price of the building may be increased in a larger ratio, but the element of time must be considered.

Steel Window Frames Need Special Putty

Home builders employing the steel casement windows lately developed in answer to the demand for a window suitable to current trends in residence architecture are cautioned by representatives of the Detroit Steel Products company to see that workmen in charge of the installation understand steel window glazing.

For the glazing of steel windows a special steel sash putty is provided. This may be procured from any building supply dealer or first-class hardware store.

Its price is the same as that of other putty, the only difference between it and ordinary putty being that there is less oil in steel and sash putty. The oil in putty does not evaporate freely, the greater part of it being absorbed by the wood, of which all sash was formerly composed.

Naturally, steel absolutely impervious to such action, does not take up the excess oil. In consequence, common putty will not dry for weeks, and even months, if applied to steel casements. Steel sash putty, however will dry in the usual length of time.

Simplest Gutter Is of the "Hung" Type

Gutters for the collection of water from the roof are of various types, the simplest type being the hung gutter, which is a semicircular trough supported every few feet by metal strips on the under side of the projecting eaves. Downspouts receive the water from the gutters and carry it to the earth or storage container.

The importance of these construction features being established, the next step is to consider the materials to be used for them. If the architectural design calls for them and the additional expense isn't a consideration, downspouts and gutters of copper are generally considered to be the best. However, zinc is coming into general favor.

Stain for Shingles

Red cedar shingle roofs should be properly treated with a reliable creosote stain. Shingle sidewalls may be stained in a wide range of shades. Certain silver grays are popular to produce quickly a "weathered" effect. Soft nonglare white, light gold, moss green, brown, deep brown, reddish brown, walnut tones—all these and more are to be had in finest quality

SCARLET FEVER WITHOUT RASH

IN THE early days of medicine diseases were named from their more obvious and common features. So any illness in which the patient had a fever and a bright scarlet rash on the body was called "scarlet fever." Before these days, any illness in which the patient had a fever, as shown by the skin feeling hot and dry to the hand of the attending physician, was called a fever. Fevers were divided into groups, according to their duration, as continuing fever, intermittent fever, relapsing fever, etc.

With the invention of the clinical thermometer, it became possible for the doctor or nurse to determine whether there was any fever and how much, although even now the thermometer is not an absolutely accurate guide. But an increase of temperature is found in many conditions and to say, today, that a patient has a fever means little.

When fevers began to be divided and classified, naturally the next most prominent symptom was taken. So scarlet fever was recognized by its bright red rash, typhus fever by the stupor or mental dullness which its victim showed, typhoid, which for many years was confused with typhus, by the fact that the stupor was like typhus but not so deep.

But symptoms are largely a matter of individual peculiarity. So until the cause of a disease is found and recognized, it is not possible to recognize any disease with accuracy.

Since scarlet fever has always been identified by the rash, the generally accepted rule has been, no rash, no scarlet fever. But it has long been suspected that many cases, in which no rash appeared, were really scarlet fever but that the rash was absent on account of some individual peculiarity. The discovery and positive proof that scarlet fever is due to a minute germ or plant, growing in the throat, has made it possible to decide, in doubtful cases, just what any particular infection may be and we now know that there may be cases of true scarlet fever with no signs of a rash.

In a recent issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association, Doctor Stevens and Doctor Dochez of New York describe an epidemic among the nurses in the Presbyterian hospital. In many of these cases, sore throat, fever, inflammation of the kidneys and all the other usual signs of scarlet fever were present, without any skin rash whatever. Tests of the blood showed that the germ now recognized as the cause of scarlet fever was present in all cases.

DOING JUSTICE TO POTATOES

THE potato is an original American. Before Columbus' voyage in 1492, the then civilized world knew nothing about potatoes. Not only the sweet potato or yam but also what we now erroneously call Irish or white potatoes were unknown as food. It is claimed that the celebrated English explorer, Sir Walter Raleigh, first among Englishmen, discovered the potato on Roanoke island. It was planted and grown by the Virginia Indians. So that Sir Walter was probably the first Anglo-Saxon who ever tasted the delights of a boiled or baked potato. Such delicacies as French or German fried, potatoes au gratin and O'Brien were still to come.

Sir Walter brought back some potatoes to England on one of his voyages. They were not received with enthusiasm at first. Like tobacco, tomatoes and Indian corn, other exclusively American plants, it took years for Europe to adopt them. Like most new foods, potatoes were accused of being responsible for all sorts of diseases. They were said to cause leprosy and rheumatism, just as tomatoes, for years, were suspected of causing cancer. Pure nonsense! Doctors now order tomato juice for babies instead of more expensive and less effective orange juice, as we know that tomato juice, either fresh or canned, has more vitamines in it than any other substance.

In the Eighteenth century potatoes were taken up as food and grown in large quantities both in this country and Europe. In Ireland especially, they were grown in large quantities and used for food so generally that an epidemic of potato rot in Ireland in the middle of the last century caused one of the worst famines that country has ever known.

For the last 25 years food faddists have been whacking the potato at every opportunity. They contained a large amount of starch; they caused fat; they should not be included in any diet. Much of this is nonsense.

So it is a pleasure to see How to Live, the bulletin of the Life Extension institute, do justice to the potato. It is one of our most valuable foods. It does contain starch but the human race has lived largely on starch of some kind for 5,000 years. Starch does form fat, but so do all foods taken in excess. Potatoes are 75 per cent water. They are alkaline and if eaten in moderation are a wholesome and valuable food. Fat is due to too much food and too little exercise, not to eating or abstaining from any one food.

ISRAEL ENSLAVED IN EGYPT

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 1:1-14.

GOLDEN TEXT—The Lord will not cast off His people.—Ps. 94:14.

PRIMARY TOPIC—A Wicked King Is Cruel to God's People.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Israelites Become Slaves.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Israel Oppressed by a Despotic King.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Modern Forms of Oppression.

I. The Increase of the Chosen Seed (vv. 1-7).

This miraculous increase seems only to have begun after the death of Joseph and the passing of his generation. After this Israel quickly grew into a nation. This amazing increase "is expressed as is usual in Hebrew by a climax of verbs: where fruitful is taken from the vegetable world in which the increase varies from the multiple to several hundredfold; increased (spawned—swarmed) is borrowed from the finny tribes in which the rate of increase rises to many myriads; multiply is a general word referring to number; and 'waxed exceedingly mighty' is a similar phrase alluding to the strength which numbers confer, composed of verb and adverb repeated and therefore well adapted to complete the climax."—Murphy. This increase can only be accounted for by admitting the hand of the Almighty to be in it.

II. A New Dynasty Appears (vv. 8-10).

Joseph's elevation as prime minister in Egypt was during the reign of the Hyksos kings. Being of Semitic origin, they were not hostile to the Hebrews, but when "there arose up a new king which knew not Joseph" (v. 8) their troubles began. This affords a striking illustration of God's providence in history. His purposes include the means to carry them out. The amazing growth of the Israelites excited the envy and fear of the king (vv. 9-10). Fear was twofold—

1. In case of war they might join the enemy and fight against them.

2. Lest they should remove from the land, thus cutting off a vital source of revenue and also exposing to danger the eastern border of the land.

III. Measures to Check the Growth of Israel (vv. 11-22).

These measures with their outcome expose the folly of world wisdom (I Cor. 3:19). If they could have eliminated God from the affairs of men their policy would have been a good one, but it proved to be altogether vanity. The greatest mistake a man can ever make is to leave God out of his calculations. God had promised that His people should become mighty in power as well as great in numbers.

1. Placed under cruel taskmasters (vv. 11-14).

The first measure he adopted was to put Israel into cruel bondage by afflicting them with heavy burdens. Cruel taskmasters were placed over them, who forced them to labor in building treasure cities and all manner of service in the field. They exacted of them hard service, but this measure was ineffectual for "the more they afflicted them the more they multiplied and grew." This rapid growth resulted in more intense burdens being heaped upon them. The Egyptians meant this for evil to the Israelites, but God blessed it to their good. It was part of His plan for them (Gen. 15:13, 14). Indeed, the righteous may expect such treatment of the world (II Tim. 1:12; Heb. 12:6). Prosperity and adversity constitute God's teaching and discipline. While their burdens were heavy and their sufferings very intense, they had the consolation that it would not last forever. The presence of Joseph's dead body was a guaranty that they would one day be delivered. Though the Christian's burden may be heavy and his sufferings keen, he has the guaranty that they shall not last always.

2. The authorized murder of the male infants by the midwives (vv. 15-21).

This measure also miscarried as the midwives feared God and chose to obey Him. Because they refused to destroy God's people He gave them homes and children and the joys thereof.

3. The drowning of the male children in the river (v. 22).

The king having heretofore been baffled, he now gave the heartless command to cast the male infants into the river. This mandate seems to have been given shortly before Moses was born. This plan likewise failed, and the very child who ultimately upset Pharaoh's throne, was sheltered and nurtured in his own palace.

BILLY BROWN BEAR

"Heigh-ho, heigh-ho, it's my birthday, it's my birthday," said Billy Brown Bear.

"You don't mean to say so?" asked one of the other bears.

"Yes, I do, for it is," said Billy Brown Bear.

"It is not just one of my usual yearly birthdays—it is something very fine and different.

"What do you mean, Billy?" asked the other bears.

But just then the keeper came along and he said to some one who was walking with him and talking with him:

"A brown bear gets his full growth when he is six years old.

"See this fine fellow?"

The friend of the keeper nodded his head.

"Well, this fellow," continued the keeper, "has just about got his full growth. Yes, I'd say he was a full-grown bear now.

"He is six years old."

The bears all growled rather softly and the keeper gave them some nice bran mush for a little meal.

Then he went on.

"Didn't I say so?" asked Billy Brown Bear.

"Yes, you most certainly did," said the other bears.

"Yes, it's more than my first, second, third, fourth or fifth birthday," said Billy.

"To be sure," said the others, "it is more than that."

"Not only is it my sixth birthday," continued Billy proudly, "which is a year more than my fifth birthday, but it is the great day upon which I am considered a full-grown bear."

So all the bears growled, wishing Billy Brown Bear "Many Happy Returns of the Day."

But the polar bears scarcby turned up their noses and paced in their yards with their heads held high, for they did not believe in being friendly and pleasant.

"Heigh-ho, heigh-ho," said Billy Brown Bear once more, "I love to feel I am a full grown bear at last!"

And to show how big he was he stood up on his hind legs and he certainly looked like a full-grown bear, all right!

People passing by him stopped and looked at him and admired his beautiful brown fur and his height and his pleasant, friendly looks.

He was very happy, too. Then the others sent a Zoolet to the Zoolet society and hoped that Billy Brownie would use it in Natureland News.

You know they put the lines of the Zoolets very far apart so they will be very easy to read.

This was the Zoolet they sent in honor of Billy Brown Bear's birthday.

Many happy returns of the day,
Billy Brown Bear's on his way.
He has reached his sixth birthday,
And is full grown, so they say.

He is fine and he is tall.
He is anything but small.
He will laugh but never bawl.
He is never mean at all.

Many happy returns, Mr. Bear,
Of your fine full growth we're now aware.
We cannot help at your stature stare.
You're our own fine Billy Brown Bear.

"You must not hurt your kitty, Bobby."

"I'm not," said Bobby, protestingly, "but I've got to get her away from the fire. She's beginning to boil."

Where Bad Eggs Go

Eggs that are worthless so far as food value goes are not wasted by the large dealers, but are covered with kerosene after being broken, treated with boric acid and sold to tanneries for use in one of the first processes of making leather. The shells are removed by sieves and the egg mixture is placed in a revolving drum with the raw hides to make them pliant.

Old Record Tells Story of Treason

Infamy of Benedict Arnold Matter of Record in Orderly Book.

An orderly book from the headquarters of George Washington, kept between the dates of September 26 and November 1, 1780, and containing the first official entries of the treason of Benedict Arnold, in addition to the records of the trial of Major Andre as a British spy, has recently been obtained by the New Hampshire Historical society.

The book, which was kept by Col. Alexander Scammell, adjutant general of Washington's army, after announcing the discovery of the plot, goes on to congratulate the soldiers of the Continental army that this is the first case of treason in the American forces, though many were expected, due to the partisan nature of the struggle. The providential discovery of the crime also is argued as prrof that the "Liberties of America are the objects of divine protection."

Speaking of the findings of the board of officers that tried Andre, the journal relates that the major was apprehended while on his way to New York in a disguised habit, and while in the possession of papers containing intelligence for the enemy. The findings close with a recommendation to General Washington that Major Andre be executed as a spy in accordance with the usages of war. A later entry carries Washington's orders for the execution as follows:

"The commander-in-chief directs the execution of the above sentence in the usual way this afternoon at five o'clock."

Benedict Arnold, the Revolutionary traitor to the United States, has some apologists today, but they are not among the residents of St. John, N. B., which town in Canada he and some other New York royalists helped to found back in 1783. Arnold's memory is not held high by the descendants there, who recall that his haughtiness and high-handed methods exasperated the other royalists. He was actually hanged in effigy at one time and driven from the community. It is said he indulged in sharp practices and swindling. He was also accused of incendiarism in connection with some richly stocked stores.

In the light of the sacrifices that were made, and of the heritage that was passed down to us, it is indeed a "Glorious Fourth" that we celebrate today. It is reminiscent of the expression of a courage, a faith in the people, a devotion to country, and a sacrificial spirit that has not been excelled in the history of the earth.

Divisions of Declaration

The Declaration of Independence may be said to be divided in three parts. In the first, the Colonists set forth their philosophy as to the right and duty of a people to throw off a government which has become despotic; in the second they rehearse a long series of grievances to show that British government in the Colonies had become so; and in the third they actually declare themselves "free and independent states."

WEST POINT YIELDS RELICS OF INTEREST

Found on Camp Site of Patriot Soldiers.

Many unique relics of the Revolution have been unearthed in the site of the original camp of the Continental forces at West Point. After lying buried for a century and a half these objects today throw an interesting light on the life of the old garrison.

Hundreds of relics of the old camp have been discovered. The commonest of these are the buttons from the uniforms of the soldiers, which make it possible to identify the regiments encamped here. One of the most interesting of the finds were the tools and materials used in manufacturing buttons, which form a primitive button factory.

The buttons were cut from bone by means of a cutting tool some six inches in length. This cutter made it possible to bore out buttons from a hard substance. It was turned by means of a carpenter's brace. The buttons were usually made from pig bone. A number of pieces of bone have been found which had been carefully sawn into thin strips for the purpose. These bone buttons were covered with cloth.

Another interesting find were several lead pencils. These were made by hammering a lead bullet into the form of a pencil. One of these is pointed, while a hole has been bored at the other end, so that it could be worn about the neck. Some of the pencils have been twisted to give the writer a firmer hold. The pencils, which are of a variety of forms, still write fairly well.

A ragged army through the vision slips,
The while from naked feet the slow blood drips
One looks on me, and in his eyes the gleam
Summons the pioneer's slow-moving team
Yet straining westward while the red sun dips
Below the prairie's rim, and then tall ships
Of Baltimore and Glo'ster; sail, and steam.
Our fathers shirked no task, however great.
They wrested from the tyrant liberty
From nature, and the savage, high estate.
They left a splendid heritage; shall we
Now disavow that vision of our sires,
Or see and heed and light us now new fires?

—R. E. Alexander in Grit.

World's Only Five Ring Circus Coming

Yoo-hoo! Skinnay! Lookit, lookit!

World's first and only five ring circus coming this way! A hundren double-length railroad cars loaded with the ten thousand wonders of the Ringling Brothers and Barnum & Bailey combined shows that will give performances at Fort Wayne, July 15.

Never has there been more than three rings in the past Now the famous brother showmen have fixed it so folks at the ends of the tent can see just as much as those who sit near the middle. Imagine five big circus rings in a row with stages set in between That means that five companies of performing horses, twenty-four in a group, are presented at one time. The same is true with the elephant actors—five herds all performing stunts at one time.

Big acts are the rule in the great new circus of 1926. Aside from the five troupes of liberty horses, two hundred others, each ridden by an expert in costume execute drills and splendid maneuvers on the mammoth hippodrome track. Thirty additional ones are of the high school type, while a score of superb thoroughbreds leap hurdles and barriers of record height. The number of trained horses alone carried for this season's program reaches the astounding total of three hundred and fifty.

The equines but share honors in the twenty-two displays. In addition to them are the eight hundred aerialists, bareback champions gymnasts and high-wire artists. These embrace the world's foremost men and women stars including a host of recently imported foreign features. Some of these number families of nine, eleven and fifteen in an act. A hundred of the world's funniest clowns enliven the more than two hours of circus program. The tournament is the most dazzling yet devised. The menagerie has been increased to more than a thousand rare animals. The tent which houses them is almost as large as the big-top of other seasons. The 1926 main-tent seats over 15,000 people.

Young Boy Gets Leg Broken.

The first accident of the band concert season was last Wednesday evening, when Clayton Herrick ran across the street in front of an automobile driven by Paul Krise, resulting in the little fellow's right leg being broken just above the knee.

A number of children were playing, and not thinking where he was Clayton dashed into the street near the Meek barber shop and was struck by the car. The driver stopped almost instantly and Roy Wade, seeing the accident, hurried out and pulled Clayton from under the car. He was taken into the Cochran Restaurant and Dr. Shook was called and his grandparents, Mr and Mrs Orange Herrick soon appeared on the scene and he was taken home. The break being above the knee is attributed to the bumper,

Clayton was taken to his home near Fort Wayne Sunday evening and is getting along fine. He had many callers among his little friends from St. Joe and was showered with many fine bouquets.

No one was to blame for the accident but it would be well to afford protection on concert nights as the street is crowded.

Mrs. Alice Lewis of Auburn, led in prayer, and Mrs. Jennie Sechler of St. Joe read a poem written by Samuel W. Widney in 1851.

In Custody Of His Father

Kenneth Ryan of Auburn was fined $10 and costs and sentenced to the state reformatory for a term of one to eight years in Judge Endicott's court Monday.

Ryan, an associate of William Little, Douglas Detrick and Claude Ladd, who had previously been in court, pleaded guilty a few days ago to a charge of stealing automobile tires and the court had his case under advisement

As in the Ladd and Detrick cases, Judge Endicott suspended the reformatory sentence, but made conditions to keep Kenneth out of bad company. He was given into the custody of his father, George F. Ryan of near Spencerville, and he is not permitted to visit town excepting in the company of his father.—Star.

Sudden Death of Mrs. Vina Fish.

The death of Mrs. Vina Fish, Saturday evening, came as a great shock to St Joe citizens. After only a few minutes illness, death came as a result of hemorrhage of the lungs. Mrs. Fish was in her usual good health. She was living with the Wm Henly family and Mrs. Henly heard her coughing, going up-stairs to see she met her mother coming down and in a dreadful condition. Mr. Henly was called and in a short time she had the second, death resulting in a very short time.

The funeral was held from the Lutheran Church, Tuesday afternoon. The obituary will appear next week.

HOME, DAD AND THE BOY

By FRANK H. CHELEY

The Bluffer Dad

THE world is full of them.
He bluffs his boy,
He bluffs society,
He bluffs his God.
He even fools himself into believing he is "as good as the average."

He doesn't know anything about the boy-business—and is afraid somebody, among them his own son, will find it out.

"When it comes to being a real Dad, he either skids or skidoos."

He doesn't seem to realize that you can't bluff a boy for long, and that in the eyes of a real boy a hypocrite is abominable. A boy will forgive his Dad for almost any other shortcoming.

He is constantly one thing and expects his boy to be quite another—and then laments the boy's failure from the house tops.

He does one way and directs the son along a different path.

He doesn't know that the life one leads is the lesson one teaches.

What a Bluffer Dad is, proclaims itself so loudly that the son never hears anything he has to say.

He is a poor, deluded mortal and needs to see himself as others see him.

Give Army Surgeon Credit for Parody

Fairly Certain That Dr. R. Schuckburg Was Author of "Yankee Doodle."

"Yankee Doodle!" Who wrote it? Every civilized land has a national anthem, a national hymn and a national song. Our anthem is "The Star-Spangled Banner"; our hymn is "America," but to set the blood a-tingling we turn to "Yankee Doodle."

But, who wrote "Yankee Doodle"? The query persists after much research as to tune and words.

To Yankees, the important thing of this song is the sentiment, the wording to the tune. The tune itself runs far back of the landing of the Fathers and one might as well try to find the composer of the ancient Swedish spring song, "Var Vindar Friska," or any chanson of the French peasants.

It seems certain, however, that the first application of words with American meaning to the Yankee Doodle tune was made at what is now the city of Rensselaer, N. Y., across the Hudson from Albany, and that the verses were written at a place in the rear of a famous old Dutch farmhouse and fort, known as Fort Crailo, in the southern part of the city, overlooking the near banks of the Hudson.

The old house, at least its oldest part—or perhaps a still older house preceding it on the same spot—was doubtless one of the points attacked by the Indians during the so-called Esopus war, extending from 1655 to 1664, and so called because the trouble first arose in the town of that name, whence it spread widely north and south.

The French in Canada had built Fort Carillon, later Ticonderoga, on Lake Champlain, and Gen. James Abercrombie was sent under Sir William Johnson to reduce it. He stopped in Rensselaer and made Crailo his headquarters. In what is the present back yard some of his staff were quartered in cantonment, and in one of the tents, which local tradition says stood where the well now is, the surgeon of staff, Dr. R. Schuckburg, wrote the first American words of parody to the ancient and immortal tune.

Parts of old Fort Crailo bear scars which tradition says are bullet marks, and if this is so, the Esopus war doubtless was the occasion.

The tune has been recognized by people from all parts of Europe as very ancient, in fact, as a folk tune, and this, no doubt, is the secret of its vitality. Kossuth claimed it as a national Magyar dance tune; a visitor from the duchy of Brunswick said it was an old nursery rhyme of that state; a distinguished Spanish professor of music said it closely resembled the Eastern sword dance of St. Sebastian, in which case the Moors may have brought it up from the East into Spain.

It was well known in England under Charles I, and was seized upon by satirists to lampoon Cromwell in a doggerel beginning:

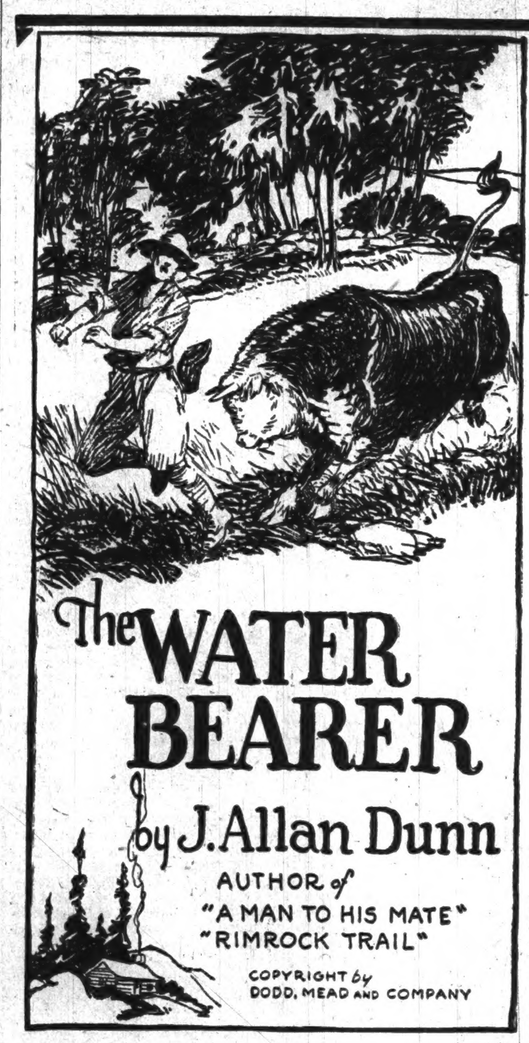
Nankey Doodle came in town,
Riding on a pony,
With a feather in his hat,
Upon a macaroni.

The word "Doodle" is defined in dictionaries of that day as "A sorry, trifling fellow," which the cavaliers regarded Cromwell as being. A macaroni was the knot used to fasten a military feather to the hat.

Patrick Henry, Thomas Jefferson and George Washington comprised the trio known as "the tongue, the pen and the sword of the Revolution."



AN UNUSUAL STORY which deals largely with the adventures of a young New Englander, an engineer, engaged in water development in the West. He comes into contact with various exciting phases of the life of the country and eventually has an opportunity to show the stuff that is in him when he is put up against the difficulties and problems of a gigantic enterprise involving the water supply of a large city. A stirring narrative by one who knows his West and has written some of its most fascinating tales.

The Water Bearer

By J. ALLAN DUNN

Author of "A MAN TO HIS MATE" "RIMROCK TRAIL"

© By Dodd, Mead & Co. WNU Service

BAXTER

Synopsis.—Idly fishing Hermanos creek, in California, Caleb Warner, civil engineer, and a New Englander, is witness of the end of a coyote pulled down by two wolfhounds, urged on by a girl rider. Admiring the hounds, he introduces himself, and learns her name is Clinton. With western hospitality she invites him to the ranch to meet her father. At the Clinton home Warner learns his new friend's name is Betty. He is welcomed by her father, Southern Civil war veteran and owner of Hermanos valley. Warner tells them something of his ambitions and his feeling that he is destined to be a "Water-Bearer."

"Thees knife is for all the enemy of El Nido." He patted the hilt of the weapon with a nod of complacency and a keen look at Caleb, who was wonderingly amused. Was the man half crazed? Did his twisted brain consider the stranger he had been ordered to escort as a possible menace to El Nido?

"The puma was an enemy?" he asked.

"Sí senor. Eet lay there on that bough that overhangs the stream, the sycamore. On that bank, on the turf, below, play la senorita Betty. Her mother is then dead one year, la senorita she is two. Dios! She is in charge of Maria an' she, thees Maria, has tie her by one long reebbon to the trunk so she shall play weeth her flowers an' not fall een the creek. May the Mother of God forgeev Maria! An' me also, Luis Padilla! Senor, I am in love with Maria, we are to wed. I hav' leave my work, I hav' follow down the canyon to talk weeth Maria! We hav' a leetle quarrel, jus' to make up. She run a leetle way from me. I follow. In the wood we make up. Sí. An' we forget the senorita.

"Dios! Of a sudden Maria scream an' point. There is the puma on the bough. Eet crouch to spreeng. The leetle one look up an' laugh at the great cat. An' I make to leap. Then I am young an' very queek, senor. Sanctissima Maria, eet is muy bueno, eet is ver' good that I am!"

Now Padilla was rolling a cigarette with a murmured, "eef you permit, senor," riding out of the water up to the little plateau where the thing had happened with a face as suddenly void of emotion as if a light had been switched off behind a shade, intent only upon inhaling the smoke of his cigarette, seated with one leg across the saddle horn. Caleb and the Don had followed him. The last puff taken, Padilla flung away the wisp of the cigarette end into the stream with a savage gesture and slid to the ground. Again he was in his role, now giving pantomime to aid his words in conjuring up the happening.

"Eet is by the mercy of the Good God that Maria tie the child, senor. I could not reach the leetle senorita in time but I reach that reebbon an' snatch her back—so! Jus' as that puma spreeng. I see heem above me, all spread. He blot out the sun an', as I snatch back the baby, he yell, like El Diablo himself. His eyes shine, his teeth, I see his red mouth, I smell the steenk of his breath, I try to dodge as he strike an' I too strike, weeth my knife. He come on me like the fall of the cleef. We roll over like two beast. Senor, I cannot tell jus' what happen. Eet is not the one who fight who can tell the story. Maria, she did not see. She hol' the baby in her arm, an' she see only the end.

"But I know I am all blood, my blood an' the blood of that lion, hot. The smell of eet make us both mad. I theenk he has empty my belly. Dios, he claw me like thees!" And Padilla raked himself down his shrunken side with suggestive fingers. He slash my face one time when I dodge. One time I am down an eet is growin' all dark. He take my arm like a dog take a bone. Senor, I hear those teeth on my bone. An' I stab, I steek, I cut! We roll into the creek. Me, I theenk I am almos' gone that time, but the water bring me back. Eet flow from me red with my blood. But eet flow red from the puma also. Senor, he is dead—muerte!

"When I get better I find the vaqueros who breeng me back to El Nido take also the body of that lion. They hev' for me that skin. Senor, eet is not much good, that skin. My knife has spoil' eet. But there is enough to make two little rug'. One for Maria, one for me. Those rug' each in our two room'—Maria an' mine—beneath the crucifix. When we pray we kneel on those rug an' we never forget our oath."

Again the fire of his speech suddenly died out and he rolled another cigarette.

"You are not married to Maria?" asked Caleb.

"No, senor. That was seventeen years ago. We wait. Eet was the great fault of Maria, also of me, that we leave la senorita. Senor Clinton did not punish. He geev me praise an' offer me money which I do not take. But we—we punish each the other. We punish that love which make us careless. We take the oath to God and the Mother of God that we watch always over the senorita. Some day perhaps she marry, then Maria an' Luis marry also, eef she is marry the good man who take care of her. But—eef any man try to harm the senorita, I Luis Padilla, who keel the puma, I am still strong an' I still hav' this knife!"

Once more he half drew the steel from the sheath and thrust it back. Then he caught the horn of the saddle with one hand, twisted the fingers of the other in the mane of the mustang, set foot in stirrup and, as the brute swung in a plunging half-circle, held himself close-pressed to its withers before, with a lithe move, he made the saddle.

"We mus' go along," he said. "The senor mus' not lose his train."

Those were the last words he spoke until they reached the station a few minutes before the train pulled in. He waited until Caleb mounted the platform, then, with an "Adios, senor," was gone, mastering the curvetting mustang and leading El Don.

Caleb, in the smoker, concluded at last that the Mexican's fidelity, tinged perhaps, by some injury in the fight from which he had never recovered, some slight lesion in his brain from the strain and excitement, had made him a monomaniac concerning the safety of his young mistress. He possessed a jealousy that he shared with Maria. It was an obsession with both of them.

"I'd hate to be the man who had Luis Padilla on his track," he told himself, wondering if the ample Maria would also be transformed into a whirlwind of avenging fury. Here was a sample of the wilder West. It was a far cry to New England. Somehow the experience did not strike him as altogether incongruous, far-fetched.

And he had learned the age of Betty Clinton.

CHAPTER III

Cox

Hold up your right hand, with the thumb and forefinger well apart. Do the same with your left and bring it up above your right, so that the tips of the forefingers join, but those of the thumb are a little apart. The oval gap represents the great bay of Golden, a mighty harbor, deep enough for all the navies of the world to swim in, a noble anchorage for commerce, dotted here and there with islands. Far to the northeast, near the knuckle of your left forefinger, a river flows in, tapping two mighty valleys, too far away to serve Golden with water.

Opposite Golden, across the narrow strait where bay meets sea, looms the great mount of Sereno, covered with redwoods that extend back of it, up to the northern boundary of the state, a region, half exploited, of great beauty, vast logging prospects, partly developed, of small, rich valleys.

Looking to the sea, to Sereno, across the bay to the mainland, Golden queens it over an unsurpassed panorama. On Semaphore hill, where ships were signaled in the earlier days, Caleb Warner shared the apartment of Ted Baxter, on the top floor of an ambitious apartment building.

Caleb, with none too large a capital, would have chosen a less expensive, less pretentious dwelling, but he had come there first as a guest of Baxter and now they divided two bedrooms, a bathroom and a tiny sitting room, at equal expense. In the old Columbian days the two had become fast friends. It had been to a large extent the attraction of opposites. Caleb, studying with enthusiasm, taking his games seriously, Baxter, handsome, irresponsible, generous, blessed with an array of superficial qualities that made him a universal favorite. And with a tendency to dissipation that Caleb fancied he had somewhat checked.

But that was years ago and he found Baxter fairly embarked upon the pastime of spending all the money he could get hold of in the pursuit of amusement—"getting all the fun he could out of life"—he styled it. Caleb fancied he inherited this facility from his mother, a widow who spent her time at fashionable resorts, West and East, as fashion demanded, who tried to forget her age and who let her son, to a great extent, travel his own path while she followed hers. Mrs. Baxter held the command of the Baxter estate. She made her son a fairly liberal allowance but kept the larger portion for herself. Ultimately, it seemed, it would come to Baxter, if his mother remained unmarried.

The two met perhaps four times a year, all told, for brief acquaintanceship. The relationship between them seemed annulled. Mrs. Baxter drew the line at having her son appear at the fashionable resorts where she was stopping. That was a tacit understanding between them. Doubtless the widow objected to having a twenty-six-year-old child inject himself into her realm of arrested maturity. She had deliberately set back her clock of life. The presence of Ted corrected Time with too obvious a hand.

Caleb reached the apartment a little after noon and found his friend still in bed. Baxter surveyed him with a grin that turned into a yawn.

"Nice time for you to be coming home," he challenged. "Where's your New England conscience? Stopping out all night! Give an account of yourself, you reprobate. Never preach to me again. You're degenerating, Cal, my son. Have a gin fizz? I was out to the Beach last night. With a peach. With two peaches, in fact, and another caballero. The party gathers again this evening and I'm flat. What time is it? I think I'll get up. We'll have lunch at the club. Cox is in town. The man I've wanted you to meet. One of the Big Siege Guns of the coast."

Baxter regaled Caleb with an account of the trip of the night before along the beach, visiting every boulevard resort. The "peach," it appeared, was a blond stenographer who was a "thoroughbred sport and a winner." By which Caleb tacitly understood that the young lady had acquiesced in every suggestion of Baxter's without demur. Caleb broke the tale to make his own change of clothes, to shave and take his bath. Baxter ordered luncheon at the club over the telephone, to be ready in half an hour, then switched to the garage for his car to be brought round in twenty minutes.

While they waited he rounded on Caleb and demanded a statement of what he had been up to.

Caleb told his story. He saw no reason why he should conceal anything and yet he had some reluctance to describe his visit at El Nido in detail. He did not fancy that Baxter would see—or would have seen—the place and its people in the same light that he did. His reservations betrayed him. Baxter seized upon the mention of the girl with a whoop and quizzed him to the limit.

"You sly fox," he cried. "A beauty with chestnut tresses, riding like a centaur after borzois, chasing a coyote—and catching Caleb Warner! She has you on the hip, Caleb. Romance has blossomed in your sterile Massachusetts soul. Sir Galahad and the Princess of the Hidden Valley! It's a moving picture.

"I've heard of the Clintons," he rattled on. "Seen the girl, too, at the dog show, though I don't remember the chestnut locks. Next time you go a-fishing, my wandering gallant, I go with you."

"Here's your car," said Caleb dryly, looking out of the window.

Baxter gave him a bantering look and dropped the subject.

The club known as The Altruists is situated downtown, an institution grown from an early membership of writers and artists, with two big rooms and free-and-easy privileges, to affluence and influence.

It was full of good-natured men sharing a camaraderie that was new to Caleb's conception of club life. And with them all Baxter was hail-fellow-well-met. A dining-room steward sought him out and informed him that lunch would be on the table in ten minutes.

"We'll look around a bit," said Baxter. "And I must get you a card. Later we'll have you up for membership." He led the way to a great room with a gilded ceiling and many tables and cozy corners beneath it. The walls were covered with cartoons drawn by the artists of the club, commemorating past and current events, caricaturing the bright lights among them. Baxter nodded to every one in the room, it seemed, and it was well filled. There was a general air of badinage, the members reminded Caleb of grown-up boys in recess from school.

They worked their way through to a lounge for cigarettes and Baxter pointed out celebrities.

As they settled themselves at the places reserved for them, Baxter indicated a group of men at a round table not far from them.

Padilla's story indicates that he is an unknown quantity to be reckoned with. What sort of factor is Baxter?

Dog Trainers Differ in Methods of Work

Most dog trainers deny the truth of the saying that you can't teach old dogs new tricks. The facts appear to be that a dog more than two years old is more easily taught than the average puppy because he is more capable of understanding what you wish him to do.

Many an intelligent dog is spoiled by too insistent efforts to correct minor faults in the early stages of his training. His spirit is broken before he has an opportunity to learn things worth while. Many dog trainers, in handling hunting-dogs, or even watch-dogs, insist that they should not be taught little tricks, such as sitting up and begging for food, or jumping through one's hands. The objection is that the trick dog comes to look for signals from his master and is less likely to act on his own initiative. On the other hand, many trainers take an opposite view and think that learning tricks is good discipline and helps in a dog's general mental development. —Fred C. Kelly, in Hearst's International-Cosmopolitan.

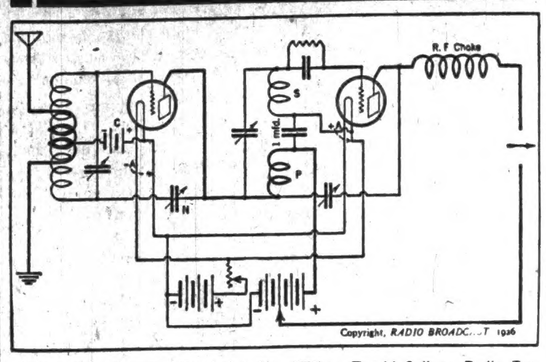
RADIO



Circuit Specially Developed for Use With a Toroid Coil as Radio Frequency Coupling Device.

We have seen and heard a great deal about the toroid coil during the last few months, and much space has been devoted to the publication of data for the inclusion of these coils in already existing circuits. Few writers have gone to the trouble of describing circuits which have been especially designed to make use of the toroid inductance, however. The Radio Broadcast Magazine's "Lab." circuit is one of the few examples where special attention has been paid to this matter. A series of articles on the "Lab." circuit appears in the Radio Broadcast Magazine, from the pen of Keith Henney, the director of the laboratory of that publication.

"The great advantage of the toroid coil," he says, "lies in its restricted field. This means that energy from the coil is not likely to expand about the coil itself and interlink with other fields, and by the same token it is difficult to get energy into the coil. For this reason a circuit in the neighborhood of powerful broadcasters is not so likely to be disturbed by local signals except those arriving at the receiver through the proper means—the antenna. The fact that the field is restricted indicates that the coils may be placed closer to metal end plates of condensers, closer to wires carrying radio frequency currents of wrong phases, and even closer to each other without the many troubles incident to interstage coupling.

The Advantages.

"The use of toroids makes possible the conservation of space, the maintenance of the resistance of circuits at their lowest point, the reduction of 'pickup' from external sources, the prevention of interstage coupling by stray electromagnetic fields, and naturally makes neutralization of high-gain amplifiers a much simpler problem. All of these things are possible, of course, provided that proper precautions are taken, and provided that the experimenter does not play with an inherently unstable or unbalanced circuit."

In the circuit diagram which is reproduced here the toroid coil is employed as an interstage coupling device, and is shown as P and S. The ordinary primary of the toroid is left disconnected, the P and S as marked on the diagram consist of the secondary winding of the toroid divided. "Determining the proper place to tap the coil is a question of utmost importance, and the correct ratio of the P and S windings is found by the following formula," writes Mr. Henney:

$$N = \frac{\text{Sq. Root of } 55{,}000}{Rp}$$

In the formula N is the turn ratio while Rp is the plate impedance. The plate impedances of various tubes with 90 volts on the plate and a negative 4.5-volt bias on the grid, are as follows:

Type Tube	Impedance	Turn Ratio
12	18,000	1.75
199	22,400	1.57
201-A	13,000	2.00
112	6,000	3.00
High-mu	30,000	1.35

(90 volts B, 1 volt C)

Not a Difficult Operation.

Neutralization in the Radio Broadcast "Lab." circuit is accomplished by the Rice method, and this is not a difficult operation if due care is exercised. It is best for the fan who intends seriously experimenting with the "Lab." circuit to start with a type 199 tube, for this latter will be found easier to neutralize than the 201-A type. Those fans who have tried a 201-A in the Browning-Drake will readily agree on this point.

By reference to the circuit diagram it will be noted that the secondary coil of the antenna tuning circuit has a center tap. It is important that the tap be taken more or less exactly at the center turn, otherwise trouble will be encountered in the neutralization process.

The size of the various tuning condensers employed depends on the coils used. The standard coils usually take a 0.0005-mfd. tuning condenser. The condenser connected across the primary and secondary of the toroid coil has a maximum capacity of 0.00025 mfd. The one connected from the plate of the detector tube to the primary of the toroid coil is the regeneration control condenser, for the capacity feedback system is employed. It is a 15-plate midget condenser. The ordinary three-plate neutralizing condenser will be found satisfactory for N. Any satisfactory tuner may be employed in the antenna circuit. A Samson choke coil was found satisfactory in the plate circuit of the detector tube, but this may be wound at home if necessary. The output, which may be connected to any good audio amplifier, is indicated by an arrow on the diagram.

"C" Battery One of Most Valuable Accessories

The "C" battery is very often disregarded in wiring up radio receivers. Whenever this is done one of the most important parts of the entire receiver is omitted. Its true worth in the circuit is not generally appreciated, but the fact is that the "C" battery pays a greater dividend in money saved and satisfaction given than any other accessory or part of the receiving system. It increases the operating life of the "B" battery, it increases the amplification of each tube in the circuit, it makes possible the use of higher plate voltage, it increases the load-carrying capacity of the tubes, it greatly reduces distortion from overloading, and it improves the quality of the output of the receiver. And all these things the little "C" battery accomplishes without itself furnishing any appreciable current, so that all are practically obtained without cost.

From an economical point of view the greatest gain derived through the use of a "C" battery is in the increased life of the "B" battery. For the higher values of plate voltage and with the proper adjustment of the "C" battery voltage, the useful life of the "B" battery is practically doubled. Even with the increased life of the latter a little "C" battery will outlive several sets of "B" batteries. But suppose that it will outlive only two sets of them. Then during the life of the "C" battery two sets of "B" batteries will have been saved. The cost of these saved "B" batteries might have been $12, whereas the cost of the "C" battery which effected this saving might have been only 75 cents, a saving of $11.25. Hence, from this point of view alone it is decidedly worth while to include the "C" battery in the receiver.

But this is not the only advantage. The greater amplification per tube will make the set more sensitive and will bring in more stations, and the increase in the load-carrying capacity of the tubes will give more volume without introducing noticeable distortion. The latter gain results in greatly improved quality of the output, and this is one of the most important advantages of using a "C" battery. Without the "C" battery the tubes will overload quickly and result in harsh quality in the loud speaker; with a correctly adjusted "C" battery and a sufficiently high plate voltage loud speaker volume of pure quality may be obtained.—New York Herald-Tribune.

What Will Be Found Inside "Dry" Battery

A "dry cell" battery consists, briefly, of a cylinder of zinc containing a rod of carbon. Between the carbon rod and the cylinder is placed a mixture of crushed coke, graphite and manganese, this mixture being saturated with a solution of zinc chloride and sal ammoniac. The top is sealed with an asphaltum compound and connections to the carbon rod and zinc cylinder made externally, the entire cell being inclosed in a cardboard cylinder. The voltage of this cell on open circuit is approximately 1.5 volts. This cell becomes rapidly exhausted if required to furnish a continuous current, but is useful in delivering small amounts of current intermittently.

When you drop a nickel in, the machine is set in operation so that you can tune in on any desired broadcasting station for a limited time. Poultrymen Want Standards Alike

Ask Immediate Steps to Afford Federal Recognition and Protection.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Poultrymen representing the "accreditation and certification" movement in the Middle West met recently in Chicago, where they passed resolutions requesting the United States Department of Agriculture to "take immediate steps to afford federal recognition and protection to the work now being carried on in the different states under the general terms of the Manhattan plan."

Manhattan Plan.

The Manhattan plan was adopted last summer at a national conference at Manhattan, Kans. In accordance with this plan, uniform rules and regulations governing the accreditation and certification of breeding flocks, baby chicks, and commercial hatcheries are being established in all states. In the past there has been a great difference in the standards to be met by poultrymen in the various states before their flocks and hatcheries were eligible for accreditation or certification. This not only served to retard the progress of the industry, but it unfairly shielded some poultrymen in the states having less stringent rules than others. The public has come to regard the words "accredited" and "certified" as indicative of superior quality, but due to lack of federal or state supervision many flocks and hatcheries were advertised falsely as being "accredited" or "certified."

Urge Co-operation.

It was also resolved at the meeting to request poultry and farm journals to co-operate in the campaign against misleading advertising by breeders and commercial hatcheries that had not met the state requirements for certification and accreditation.

"The department is thoroughly in sympathy with the movement for uniform state requirements," says Dr. M. A. Jull, in charge of poultry investigations for the United States Department of Agriculture, "but can only lend its moral and advisory support at present, as no funds are available to enable the organization of an inspection service to co-operate with the states in establishing uniform accreditation and certification in the United States."

Ducklings Fattened for Market Are Always Best

The ducklings to be marketed should be fattened for two weeks before killing on a ration made of three parts, by weight, of corn meal, two parts of low-grade flour or middlings, one part of bran, one-half part of beef scrap, with 3 per cent grit and 10 per cent green feed. Feed this mash three times daily, or use a mash of three parts corn meal, one part low-grade wheat flour, one part bran, 5 per cent beef scrap and 3 per cent oyster shell, with the green feed and grit added.

The green feed is sometimes left out of the ration during the last seven days of fattening, as it tends to color the meat and may produce a slightly flabby rather than a firm flesh; however, it is easier to keep the ducklings in good feeding condition on a mash containing green feed.

Crops in Orchards

Potatoes are the best crop to grow in an orchard. The tops cover the ground at the time of the year when the ground most needs protection from the hot rays of the sun. Winter grain crops leave the ground unprotected during the hottest period so that it dries out. The tree roots do not obtain much of a grasp on the earth and, if the ground dries out down to the roots, the trees will do well to keep alive. Then new trees must be purchased and set out.

Cows Need Some Grain

A good cow should have some grain when on thin early pasture—or scant midsummer grasing. Take only a fair producer that gives, say, 35 pounds of milk a day. This amount requires her to eat 150 pounds of grass. She can get that much only when the pasture is pretty lush. At other times a little grain not only keeps up the milk flow but also keeps up the cow so that she will produce her best when the feeding later improves. Corn ... excellent grain

Cultivating Often Kills Early Weeds

All Seeds Need Moisture, Air and Warmth.

The success or failure of a crop is often determined by the preparation of the seed bed and the early cultivation. The beginning of proper cultivation is in the careful preparation of the seed bed because it is hardly possible to get the soil in proper condition after the seed have been planted.

"Three things are necessary for the germination and growth of all seed," says C. R. Hudson of the farm demonstration division at North Carolina State college. "These are moisture, air and sufficient warmth. The first two are secured through good preparation of the seed bed while the warmth may be influenced by the same process. If the soil has been gradually deepened year after year by careful plowing, breaking the land should always be followed by harrowing or disking given, if possible, within 24 hours after the plowing. Then the soil needs to settle so that the seed bed will be hard after which another harrowing is given to re-establish the mulch."

Cultivation after the seed are planted is not only to keep down weeds and grass which would take up the moisture and plant food and shade the crop, but, also to keep the top soil open to make more plant food available and to give help in warming the soil. Weeds are more difficult to eradicate after they have grown an inch or two above the soil. Mr. Hudson urges the use of the weeder or harrow immediately after rains as one of the most effectual and economical cultivations that may be given.

Maintaining the soil mulch is one of the important things during the summer. If the soil crust is kept loose, very little other cultivation is needed.

Soy Beans for Cattle

Further use for soy beans, rapidly forging to the front among farm crops, has been found in the cattle feeding trials at the agricultural experiment station at Purdue university. Whole soy beans may be used to take the place of cottonseed meal as a protein supplement in a ration of shelled corn, silage and clover hay in fattening two-year-old steers for market. Soy-bean hay also made a satisfactory substitute for both cotton seed meal and clover hay when used with silage and shelled corn.

Trees Need Thinning

Most trees need thinning, rather than pruning, which means cutting off many small limbs or twigs. On old sod-bound trees, pruning often resolves itself into a matter of maintaining the balance between the feeding and fruiting parts of the tree. Some farmers do this by excessive top pruning, others do it by liberal feeding, either with nitrate in some form or with manure. Fifteen or twenty cents' worth of nitrate will give the owner much more fruit, and better fruit, than cutting branches out of the top.

Constipation! How to Keep Bowels Regular

To Dr. W. B. Caldwell, of Monticello, Ill., a practicing physician for 47 years, it seemed cruel that so many constipated men, women, children, and particularly old folks, had to be kept constantly "stirred up" and half sick by taking cathartic pills, tablets, salts, calomel and nasty oils.

While he knew that constipation was the cause of nearly all headaches, biliousness, indigestion and stomach misery, he did not believe that a sickening "purge" or "physic" was necessary.

In Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin he discovered a laxative which helps to establish natural bowel "regularity" even for those chronically constipated. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin not only causes a gentle, easy bowel movement but, best of all, it never gripes, sickens, or upsets the system. Besides, it is absolutely harmless, and so pleasant that even a cross, feverish, bilious sick child gladly takes it.

Winona Season Opened

The thirty-second annual Chautauqua Season at Winona Lake, opened last Sunday. Even a casual glance at the program gives evidence that the contracted talent for this year, if not the best, will measure up with anything that has ever appeared on the Winona platform.

The Park has never been more beautiful; the carload of shrubbery, a gift of Wm. A. Peterson a year ago with the addition of several new flower beds and reseeding of sections of the lawn, brings expressions of appreciation from the scores of summer visitors who are arriving daily.

A clean Bill of Health has been given to the place by the State Board of Health after a personal visit from Dr. Wm. F. King.

Sunday, the 20th, witnessed the opening of the Women's School of Missions. Compared with the twenty-two other seasons that this convention has met at Winona there never was a larger attendance than that of this year.

From every advantage, inspirational, educational, recreational, or a place to relax and rest, Winona has no peer.

John McCormack scheduled for July 14, will not appear, as his remarkable reception in the Orient necessitated the extension of his engagement there.

EARLY PATRIOTS A BAND OF IMMORTALS

None of Signers of Declaration Betrayed Trust.

On the 151st birthday of the nation hundreds of orators throughout the land will place before their audiences pictures of those 56 men who on July 4, 1776, affixed their names to the Declaration of Independence and thus laid the foundation stone of a state which commands the admiration and respect of the world.

That giant of eloquence, Daniel Webster, perhaps has presented their characters and achievements more

The Drafting of the Declaration of Independence by the Representatives of the Thirteen Original States Which Were the Foundation of the Present United States of America.

luminously than any before or since his day. "They are dead," he said in his eulogy of the last signer, Charles Carroll of Carrollton, "but little there is of the great and good that can die! To their country, they yet live in all that perpetuates the memory of men on earth; in the recorded proofs of their own great actions, in the offspring of their intellect, in deep engraved lines of public gratitude and in the homage and respect of all mankind. They live in their example and in the influence which their lives and efforts, their principles and opinions now exercise and will continue to exercise on the affairs of men not only in their own country, but throughout the world."

In the individual sense, the members of that immortal congress were the most remarkable political body which the annals of the world can show. In each the fiery zeal of the patriot was tempered by the inherent virtues of the man. Not one of those 56 heroes betrayed his trust, a phenomenal record in the pages of history. All the signers stood firm. Some were imprisoned and died as the result of their sufferings, many were impoverished and many stood within the shadow of death. All were tempted, just as all felt the menacing wrath which seemed powerful enough to grasp and crush them. Not one died with a stain on his name.

MARKED EPOCH IN HISTORY OF WORLD

First Written Constitution Was in Connecticut.

TWO decades after the landing of the Pilgrims and 30 years after the first settlement at Jamestown, the first constitution framed by a people for themselves in the history of the world was adopted at Hartford, Conn., on January 14, 1639. Here is the preamble:

"For as much as it hath pleased Almighty God by the wise disposition of His Divine providence so to order and dispose of things that we, the inhabitants and residents of Windsor, Hartford and Wethersfield are now cohabiting and dwelling in and upon the River Connecticut and the lands thereto adjoining, and well knowing where a people are gathered together, the word of God requires that to mayntayne the peace and union of such people there should be an orderly and decent government established, according to God, to order and dispose of the affayres of the people at all seasons as occasion shall require; does therefore associate and conjoin to be as one publike state of commonwealth; and do for ourselves and our successors and such as shall be adjoined to us at any time hereafter, enter the combination and confederation to gather, mayntayne and preserve the liberty and purity of the gospell of our Lord Jesus, which we now profess, as also the discipiyne of the churches, which, according to the truth of the said gospell, is now practiced amongst us, as also in our civil affaires to be guided and governed according to such lawes, rules, orders and decrees, as followeth."—Chicago Journal.

Story of Kitty Knight

During the War of 1812, the British soldiers received orders to burn houses in the occupied territory of Maryland. It was at this time that Kitty Knight said to the soldiers who warned the people to leave their houses: "I shall not leave; if you burn this house, you burn me with it." This defiant reply was reported to the officer, who came in person to see her. He was struck with admiration at her courage and spared her house and the one next to it.

JOHN WIDNEY CHILDREN HOLD FAMILY REUNION

The John Widney family reunion was held Sunday, July 4th, at the country home of Mr. and Mrs. Hollis Dilley on the old farm site of the Widney estate, located about a mile and a half northeast of St. Joe. The day was ideal for such a meeting, and about forty gathered to celebrate the day at the "old home."

The usual big dinner was served at the noon hour, after which a program was rendered appropriate to the day, and the occasion, consisting of patriotic and sacred songs, interspersed with short talks by several of the older ones, but the instrumental music and the well rendered and timely readings given by Miss Ruth Bowen of Fort Wayne were well received and deserved special mention. The old officers were retained for another year, and adjournment was taken to meet again next year.

The early history of the Widney family dates back to May, 1836, at which time Samuel Widney, Sr., together with his family, located on the above mentioned farm. John Widney, his son, was a mere boy at that time. At this early date there were but few pioneer families settled in this part of Northeastern Indiana, and it was a common sight to see tribes of the wild American Indians traveling westward through the dense forest on their way to new and better hunting grounds, and often times they would camp on the banks of the little creek for the night, but they were peaceful and no harm came to the new white settler from the native red skins in those early days.

Samuel Widney, Sr., came from Concord, Franklin county Pennsylvania and was among the first settlers to enter government land in this part of the county, at the price of $1.25 per acre. There were no roads or bridges, only trails through the woods that wound around on the higher graund to avoid the swamps and low lands, and their marketing and buying of provisions was done at Fort Wayne, their nearest trading point, which was only a small town at that early date.

Soon after the organization of the county Samuel Widney, Sr., was elected probate judge, which gave him the distinction of Judge Widney, and when Concord township was laid out it was given the name "Concord" after his old town in the east, and as he was a charter member of the Concord Methodist Protestant church, it was given the name, "Concord," because of his being one of the main pillars of the church at that time.

A map was drawn of the Widney corners, showing the way it appeared sixty years ago, giving the location of the old log house and barn, the jog in the road and the old frame school house as it stood in the corner of the then big woods, which gave way years ago to fertile fields, and is now a part of the big and well known Widney orchard.

Time has brought a great change to the corners, as it has done to many other old time community centers.

I Have Done My Best

BY O. LAWRENCE HAWTHORNE

If I can say that I have done my best today—
Have made the most of opportunity,
If I have acted always in a manly way
And met those problems life presented me,
To me belongs tonight the victor's right to know
A certain satisfaction and content.
I do believe that I have done my best, and so
I view with pride today's accomplishment!

But let me not forget that what today was good
Will never meet the test tomorrow gives.
Perhaps today I did the very best I could,
But great success is won by him who lives
In constant striving toward a higher, better goal;
And so I pray that every morning sun
Will stimulate a new ambition in my soul
Until I do the best that can be done!

PERPETUAL CALENDAR BEING MANUFACTURED

H. S. Bowman of Chicago called on The News and friends last Saturday, and as you remember before he returned to Chicago last summer, he had patented a perpetual calendar running for a period of 100 years. As he had completed his model and the article was ready for the market, a way of disposing and manufacturing was his next problem, and knowing that this could be accomplished by putting this end of the business up to manufacturers of novelties and small articles, Bert took the idea of returning to his work on the Chicago Tribune, and then make a disposition of these two things that he was now ready for, and upon his visit last Saturday he showed an entirely new style of calendar, made of polished brass, and in many respects an improvement over his first idea so that now the article is being marketed, and he will soon begin to realize some revenue from his investment of time and money. Here's hoping that sales will demand the capacity of the manufacturers.

At the age of 35 years Mrs. Fish joined the Evangelical church at Hicksville, in which she was an active member until she came to St. Joe six years ago, when she joined the Lutheran church, in which she was an active member until her death.

Mrs. Fish was the mother of six children, two of whom are deceased, Grace in infancy and Mrs. James Mohr, who died October 23, 1923. She is survived by three daughters, Mrs. Ira Sherrick of Auburn, Mrs. F. F. DeLander of Durand, Mich., and Mrs. Wm. Henly, St Joe, Ind., and one son, Ross Mohr, of Elkhart, Ind.

Besides the above mentioned are one sister, Mrs. Alice Coburn of Hicksville and one brother, Charles Wiers, also of Hicksville, and fifteen grandchildren and nine great grandchildren.

When the angel of death departed,
And took dear Mother home,
It left us broken hearted
With tears to shed alone.
While we are sad and lonely,
One consolation comes to mind
That all her trials are over
And forever left behind.
Let us change our tears of sadness
To tears of joy instead.
We shall make them tears of gladness,
For in Christ she is not dead.
Let each of us be happy
That Mother is with God
And live a life so we can meet her
In the heavenly home above.

The funeral services were held Wednesday afternoon at 2 o'clock from the Lutheran church, with Rev. A. K. Mumma of Harlan, officiating, Elza Kinsey, director. The burial was made at Hicksville.

Colorful Dresses for Summer Wear

Gayest Flowers Adorn Milady's Apparel; Cottons Show Prints.

Gayer than a field of California poppies, summer frocks are making their appearance upon the streets. You simply can't get them too colorful. Great splashy designs in the most vivid of effects. Glowing blossoms more exotic than any which ever grew in tropical forests. Bakst at his best outdone, and Greenwich Village batiks pushed in the background, declares a fashion writer in the Philadelphia Record.

But with it all they are never garish. They never shock the eye. With all their riot of color they are somehow soft and altogether lovely. Perhaps it is the exquisite texture of the fabrics used which accounts for much of this softness in effect.

At last the tight little felt hat has met its Waterloo. One simply cannot wear a tiny dark-colored felt with one of these frivolous blossom-strewn chiffons. So felts have widened and taken on pastel shades. They refuse to be beaten. Wide felts in such luscious shades as gladioli pink, golden wheat, raspberry glace and lovebird green are among them, simply trimmed with a band of twisted velvet. There is also the dashing phantom red, which appears in larger felts, but more often in hemp or tagal straw.

How the Color Was Named.

By the way, did you know how this very bright red came to be called "phantom"? It would seem to be anything but a phantom with all its vivid color. But it got its name because Lon Chaney wore it in a thrilling "movie." By such things as this are colors born and made. Everybody went to Florida to win a fortune, and Florida gold, coral sands, Miami rose and palmetto green became leading colors. The astute lady has only to study the daily news to know what color is to be next in favor.

Perhaps that is why we have all colors just now strewn over our pretty frocks. There is no event of importance happening, so fashion smiles upon them all, just to be on the safe side.

Printed crepes are quite as popular as the filmier materials. These are shown in small Dolly Varden and English chints patterns or in extremely bold design. Patou sponsors a printed crepe which is being used a great deal for sports and morning dresses in this country. They are made up on simple lines, frequently with a jabot of plain color. Some of these prints are plain at the top and patterned in large designs below the waist.

The jabot is an excellent idea of the printed model. A number feature a most distinctive jabot. It appears to be really a sort of collar, coming from the back of the neck and spreading out, reverslike, at either side of the front. Usually, it borders a V piece at the front and meets in a point at the center of the very low waistline.

Accents by Plain Colors.

Printed crepes and georgettes are accented a great deal by plain colors. This must be done with much artistry or the whole thing is spoiled. It is so easy to make a lovely flowered frock look common if too much plain material is used or if it is applied the wrong way. Models which are simply trimmed with a half-inch of material in the predominating shade achieve much distinction. This band may outline the apron front, the lower edge of the skirt, the bottom of the jabot or the panels.

Again lace is seen as the note of contrast. A charming afternoon frock of flowered chiffon in tones of red, green, blue and cream had a very full skirt edged with two inches of black chantilly lace. The black brought out the colorings most delightfully.

One of the outstanding prints of the season is the polka dot. And in these red undoubtedly leads. Red coin dots were introduced by Lanvin very early in the season. Tan on navy is a conservative choice for the older woman, and red on white for her smart daughter. Martial et Armand created a costume called "Pour les Petits Pois." It is a coat of ottoman worn over a white crepe polka-dotted frock.

Black coin dots on white is another favorite, and in this season of black and white smartness they are seen a great deal. A white crepe, with large black dots showing on the lower part of the puff sleeves; as a band on the skirt and as a dashing tie, is very smart. Ties which are little less than scarfs sometimes furnish the printed note with no other aid.

Black and white in huge flower patterns is another silk greatly the vogue. An overskirt of plaited material open at the front is a pleasing finish. Black and white is never anything else but distinguished wherever it is seen. And the older woman is showing her knowledge of the mode by adding a collar, cuffs and trimming bands of polka-dotted silk. Black dots in varying sizes are also seen a great deal on a white ground. These range in size from a quarter to a French pea.

The French pea is considered a good size for dots in many of the newest models. There are fewer combinations of colorings shown than last season, but many exclusive shops have sports frocks dotted in several colors. Very striking, and one might suppose very bizzarre, is the frock which uses three-cornered designs in all sorts of colors. These completely cover the ground and seem to merge one into the other, although each is sharply defined. But extreme as they are, they are both smart and good to look at.

For Morning Dresses.

Even cottons are showing prints, and the most adorable little morning frocks of printed dimities and cotton crepes and English broadcloths are shown. As a rule these are at their best in tiny flower prints or in wee designs of exceptional quaintness.

Many smart women at Cannes and various other resorts are introducing the fashion of a printed top with a plain skirt. The skirt may be plaited and separate or it may be attached and plain.

There are several French houses featuring the suit with the blouse of printed silk, which makes a coat suit much more elaborate than a plain blouse. Here, too, the skirt may be separate or attached. Many of them are very trim little one-piece frocks when the coat is removed. Two bands of the skirt material across the printed blouse relate the two and completely save that cut-off appearance which so many coat suits have when seen without the coat.

Goupy, which is one of the newer houses, is especially fond of the suit worn with a printed blouse. One suit of heavy crepe in powder blue has a blouse of georgette printed in a blue, mauve and yellow pansy design. The powder blue of the skirt is repeated in collar, ties and cuffs, which also tie.

Madeleine Vionnet, who aims at youthful effects, has done some enchanting things this season, all with that certain subtle simplicity that is her chief characteristic and charm. One particularly beautiful wedding gown is made of crepe georgette cut from shoulder to hem in repeated V lines, creating in the skirt bias panels that flare and drop to different points around the bottom and form large, irregular scallops. The interesting lines in the gown are marked with strass beads and there is no other trimming. The veil of fine silk net has an edge of point d'Alencon and falls to the end of the train of crepe, that is lined with satin.

An original and extremely graceful wedding gown from Cheruit is cut all in large godets, with a simple, half high bodice, long sleeves and with both the train and veil made of the same material as the dress, fine, soft chiffon. Lace is used a great deal, some wedding gowns being made entirely of sheer blond lace, Chantilly or any of the novelty laces over taffeta, crepe or satin, and some have lace flounces added to the skirt. It is very modish at the moment to gather lace quite full in two or three flounces straight around the skirt, and to trim the edge of the veil with the same lace.

EVERYDAY GOOD THINGS

A new roll much in vogue at present is prepared just as one does Parker house rolls, and when folding the rolls add a small section of orange freed from membrane and seeds. Place in the tins to rise and just before going into the oven pour over a mixture of orange juice and powdered sugar. Bake until brown.

Hermits.—Take three-fourths of a cupful of sweet fat, add one-half cupful of sugar, two well-beaten eggs, one teaspoonful of soda dissolved in a tablespoonful of sour milk, one teaspoonful each of cinnamon, cloves and nutmeg and one cupful of currants. Mix well with flour to roll; sugar well before cutting into cookies.

Oatmeal Cookies.—Take three cupfuls of oatmeal which has been ground and toasted until slightly brown, add one-half cupful of sugar, one cupful of water or cold coffee and one cupful of shortening, one-half teaspoonful of salt and flour to roll. Bake in a quick oven.

Sugar Cookies.—Take two cupfuls of sugar, one cupful of shortening, one teaspoonful of soda and two teaspoonfuls of baking powder sifted into one quart of flour, four well-beaten eggs and a teaspoonful of vanilla. Roll, cut out and bake quickly.

Coconut Cookies.—Take one cupful of shortening, one and one-half cupfuls of sugar, two eggs, one cupful of grated coconut, one-half cupful of sweet milk, one-half teaspoonful of soda, one teaspoonful of cream of tartar, one teaspoonful of vanilla, two eggs and one cupful of coconut. Roll and cut, bake in a quick oven; use as little flour as possible.

Coconut Macaroons.—Cream one tablespoonful of butter with one-half cupful of sugar, add one beaten egg, one and one-half cupfuls of browned and ground oatmeal and one-half cupful of coconut. Drop by spoonfuls on a buttered sheet and bake in a hot oven. This recipe makes twenty-four.

Pies and puddings should cool slightly before covering with a meringue; if put in hot the meringue will be covered with dots of liquid.

The Balanced Ration.

To know the relative value of different foods and different dishes, will keep one from serving one day a menu in which all dishes are high in food value and the next day a menu altogether of the less nutritive dishes. It is preferable to take the day as a unit in planning menus rather than a single meal, for in this way it is easier to keep the fuel standard about the same each day.

Concentrated foods which are mostly in the protein and fat groups, should be combined with the starchy foods. One part protein to three parts starchy foods is the most common proportion.

Cheese, a highly concentrated food without waste, when combined with rice, macaroni or potatoes, makes a good main dish and is highly nourishing.

Sugar in the form of candy is another concentrated food and should not be eaten on an empty stomach as it is sufficiently satisfying to spoil the appetite for a meal. Eaten at the close of a meal when we enjoy a little sweet we are not likely to overeat.

Soups having stimulating properties put the stomach into better condition to digest the food which follows. A cream soup is best to precede a light meal. A clear soup which has little nutrition but is an appetizer is good for a heavy dinner.

There is no limit to the variety which a little planning may produce in the line of cocktails. Left-over fruit juice of various kinds, boiled down to a thick sirup, adds flavor. Lemon ice, bits of banana and pineapple with a few grapes for a garnish makes an especially well-flavored one.

The average grown person who is normal would feel and be much better to cut down on the food consumed at least one-third. To spend more time in masticating the food, so that the digestive apparatus need not overwork, would be another great advance in keeping the body fit.

One of the finest breakfast foods for young and old is the clean whole wheat right from the granary. Soak it overnight, then cook slowly on the back of the stove for several hours until the grain bursts and is surrounded by the soft jellylike substance, which indicates that it has been well cooked.

Salads and vegetables should always have place in the dinner and luncheon menus, and in the spring and summer are especially important.

Crisp, tender vegetables stimulate the appetite by their crispness and tenderness.

INDIANA BREVITIES

Rev. John W. Reed, seventy-two, a Christian minister, died at his home near Logansport. He had served charges in northern Indiana for 40 years.

Four robbers held up the Indiana club, near West Baden, and escaped with more than $6,000 in jewels and cash. Torture methods were applied to two club attaches, and five guests were robbed, including two women whose rings were torn from their fingers.

A toy machine gun in the hands of a small boy caused a fire loss of about $260,000 at the "Tribe of K" store in Gary, a large concern handing office supplies, photographic goods, candy, fireworks, stationery and similar stocks. A spark from the gun flew into a box of firecrackers.

Refusing to give up his pretty neighbor, Irene Anderson, and return to his wife and two little children, Lew Goldman, thirty-two years old, building contractor of Gary, decided to poison his sweetheart and then take his own life. As a result Goldman is dead at his home and Mrs. Anderson is in a serious condition.

South Bend school children do not have to remain idle through the summer vacation. Instead, they may, if they desire, take up the study of the Bible, classes having been organized and conducted by the St. Joseph county council of religion in the public school buildings. The roster includes 735 names.

Three new important links, of approximately 70 miles, were added to the Indiana state highway system by the highway commission. The new links are: Rockport to Evansville by way of Newberg, Hatfield and Yankeetown, approximately 25 miles; Booneville to Winslow, approximately 25 miles, and Petersburg to Vincennes, approximately 20 miles.

The closing of the regular term of Evansville college raised a problem of providing blood donors for St. Mary's hospital there. Dr. W. C. Caldwell, staff surgeon, is seeking a score or more persons who are willing to sell their blood for $25 a pint, to be used in transfusions. While the college was in session the hospital had more volunteers than it needed, according to Doctor Caldwell.

Charles T. Jewett, former newspaper editor of Terre Haute, and his son, Jackson Jewett, charged with printing obscene literature, changed their pleas from not guilty to guilty when arraigned before Judge John P. Jeffries in Circuit court and each was fined $10 and costs and sentenced to serve six months on the Indiana State farm. The sentence and fine were suspended in the case of the son.

Mrs. Charles O. Rosen of Hammond has been appointed an assistant probation officer in Lake county, to fill the place left vacant by the death of Mrs. Lucille Meyers. Mrs. Meyers was shot and killed by a Hammond man while on an errand of investigation to his home. Mrs. Rosen will look after the probation work in Hammond, where she has been employed by the chamber of commerce.

Six Indiana university coeds have been elected to Tau Kappa Alpha, honorary debating fraternity. This is the first time in the history of the local chapter that girls have been admitted to membership in this organization. The girls are: LaVonne Hutton, Peru; Dorothy Benner, Fort Wayne; Ethel VanCleave, Crawfordsville; Mrs. Pearl Lee Vernon, Bloomington; Truly Fosbrink, Vallonia; Lillian Pearson, Scottsburg.

Inmates of Indiana's penal institutions make more than thirty kinds of articles, ranging from flags to men's clothing, shoes and furniture, for sale on the public market, according to Henry A. Roberts, state sales agent. Mr. Roberts, who was appointed to the newly-created office recently, has an office in the statehouse, where he keeps samples of the goods made by the men of the Indiana state prison, the reformatory and the state farm. Every able-bodied, physically fit and mentally competent inmate of all penal institutions is placed in the various trade schools behind the walls, and taught some useful occupation.

Alarmed at the increased use of dynamite in Indiana streams by Hoosier fishermen, the state conservation department announced it had thrown all its forces into the field to stop the law violation. "Next to pollution, there is nothing so destructive to fish in our public waters as the use of dynamite," George N. Mannfeld, superintendent of the fish and game division of the conservation department, declared. He deplored the fact that there were so many poor sportsmen "who fish by discharging explosives in streams or lakes." One hundred dollars reward awaits the person who gives information which will lead to the arrest and conviction of the law violators, Mr. Mannfeld announced.

Many fruit trees were uprooted and small farm buildings unroofed and otherwise damaged by a terrific wind storm that passed over Blackford county south of Hartford City.

State police officers do not have the legal authority to enforce the prohibition law and no member of the department will arrest any party on any liquor charge whatsoever, except when found operating a motor vehicle, under the influence of liquor, under a new order to the members by Robert T. Humes, chief of Indiana state police bureau.

THE CHILDHOOD AND EDUCATION OF MOSES

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 2:1-10; Acts 7:22.

GOLDEN TEXT—Train up a child in the way he should go and when he is old he will not depart from it.—Prov. 22:6.

PRIMARY TOPIC—The Baby Moses.

JUNIOR TOPIC—A Little Girl Helps.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Training for Life's Work.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Blessing of a Religious Home.

I. Moses' Parentage (v. 1).

Both father and mother were of Levitical stock. Being from the same tribe, they had a common bond of interest and sympathy. Amram had the good judgment to choose for a wife a woman who possessed sympathies and ambitions in harmony with his own.

II. Moses' Birth (v. 2).

Two children were born to Amram and Jochebed before Moses—Aaron and Miriam. However, Moses was the first one that his mother was assured was to be the deliverer of the chosen people. There was something striking about this child which caused her to believe that it was sent of God. She saw that he was a "goodly child." In Stephen's speech (Acts 7:20) he asserts that the child was "exceeding fair," or fair to God. No doubt his mother believed him to be the deliverer of his people and instilled that truth in his mind from childhood. Because of this belief she had confidence that somehow God would save him from the cruel hand of the king.

III. Moses' Preservation (vv. 3-8).

Though Pharaoh's edict was in force, his mother's faith was such as to cause her to ignore it and hide Moses for three months. The hiding of the child was not because of fear, but because of faith (Heb. 11:23). It was her faith which made her brave to ignore the king's edict. Though Moses' mother had faith, she did not ignore the proper use of means. Pharaoh's plan was that every male child should be destroyed, but God had planned otherwise for this child. Perhaps the story of how Noah and his family were saved in the ark suggested to his mother the expediency used, namely, the ark of bulrushes. Doubtless she was familiar with the place where Pharaoh's daughter came to bathe, and believed that somehow through her the child would be saved. She placed the ark at the particular place where it would attract attention. It is interesting to note the steps as pointed out by another, by which God's plan was carried out.

1. The mother's wit.

She placed the baby at the proper place and at the opportune time. Then, too, Miriam was no doubt stationed as a watch to aid in the affair (v. 4).

2. A faithful sister (v. 7).

Had Miriam not been faithful, humanly speaking, Moses' life would not have been preserved and properly nursed and educated at the proper time. This should be a worthy example for every sister, causing her to exercise watch and care over her brother.

3. A woman's curiosity (v. 5).

This strange object among the flags attracted the attention of Pharaoh's daughter and she directed her maids to bring it to her.

4. A woman's compassion (v. 6).

When the ark was brought and opened the baby wept. That woman has lost her feminine instinct who is unmoved with compassion at the cry of a lonely, motherless baby.

5. The baby's tears (v. 6).

The tears aroused her womanly instinct, and at the suggestion of Miriam the baby's mother was hired to nurse her own child. No one can nurse a child so well as its own mother.

IV. Moses' Education (v. 9).

1. Moses was first educated at his mother's knee.

During this time his character took form. Here his mind was filled with the Word of God and he was made acquainted with the Jewish hopes and prospects. In these early years no doubt the indomitable purpose was fired to suffer affliction with the people of God rather than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season (Heb. 11:24-26). Seeing by faith the destiny of her child, Jochebed made good use of her time.

2. At the Egyptian court (v. 10).

It was here that he became acquainted with all the wisdom of the Egyptians (Acts 7:22). This was of great importance. It peculiarly qualified him to be the lawgiver and historian of his people.

Our Present Lot

HOW TO KEEP WELL

Editor of "HEALTH"

(©, 1926, Western Newspaper Union.)

THE CONTROL OF RICKETS

RICKETS is a disease common among babies, due to lack of food or of the right kind of food. It has been known for over two hundred years. It is found among babies all over the world and especially in the crowded slums of our cities. Three things are generally credited as the causes: insufficient food, bad air and lack of sunshine.

In the poor little babies whose mothers are unable to nurse them, and who, as a result, are fed condensed milk, some form of prepared baby foods or too much starchy foods, all of which are lacking in the fresh, living substances we now call vitamines, rickets is apt to develop and, in the majority of such cases, does develop. The long bones of the arms and legs, as well as the ribs and breast bones, instead of hardening as the child grows, are soft and bend easily. At the ends of the bones, ridges or knobs form. The bones of the skull are thin like parchment, due to the fact that the bones do not have enough lime in them to harden. The child is feverish, restless, sleeps badly and sweats profusely. The head is unduly large, the teeth appear late and the child does not learn to walk or, if it has already begun to walk, it walks with a feeble tottering gait.

If the child is untreated, it grows into a weak, puny, pale child, often deformed by its bowed legs and bent chest. If it is given mother's milk, properly modified cow's milk and, most important of all, fresh fruit juice, it soon recovers. Cod liver oil was for years the sovereign remedy in rickets, because, as we know now, it contains a large proportion of vitamines. Orange juice or any fresh fruit juice is of great value. One of the most effective remedies is tomato juice, either fresh or canned.

Fresh air and, above all, sunshine are also important. It has recently been found that food of any kind is most effective if exposed to sunlight or, failing that, to the ultra violet ray light.

This infant disease is found in the poorer quarters of all our large cities. In 1923, the United States children's bureau started an experiment to see how completely this disease could be wiped out. New Haven, Conn., was selected because of the large number of negroes and Italians, two races particularly susceptible to this disease. All the children suffering from rickets as well as all those whose condition showed that they were susceptible, were given cod liver oil, orange juice and sun baths, with the result that those in charge of the experiment have not only cured many actually ill but prevented many cases which would otherwise have occurred.

TO CONTROL MALARIA

IT is now agreed by all authorities that malaria is caused by mosquitoes. It is also known that quinine or its salts or various preparations will cure malaria in the individual. But prevention is so much cheaper than cure that the efforts of all our health boards and officers are centered on the destruction of mosquitoes as the only hope of wiping out malaria.

To undertake to kill all the mosquitoes in the country or even in those sections where mosquitoes are abundant would be impossible. But what can be done is to destroy their breeding places and so prevent the production of millions of young mosquitoes. Careful study of mosquitoes has given us as complete and accurate knowledge of the habits of mosquitoes as the experienced live-stock breeders have of horses and cattle.

Mosquitoes breed almost entirely in stagnant water. That is why swampy sections have always been infested with malaria. Draining the land, filling in low tracts and cleaning up sections where water collects and stands are among the effective methods of mosquito control. Where water cannot be drained off, spraying crude oil on the water forms an oily film on the top, which prevents the mosquito larva from developing and so increasing the number of these pests.

This is work that cannot be done by the individual, except as he can keep his own back yard free from puddles, tin cans full of water, uncovered cisterns and rain barrels and other places where mosquito "wigglers" can grow. The real work of mosquito control can only be done by the state by experts paid out of special tax levies for this purpose.

In a recent issue of the American Journal of Public Health appears the report of the committee on mosquito control which was appointed by the American Public Health association. This report showed that in the 48 states various methods for mosquito control were being generally carried out in 11 states, particularly in 19 states, and that nothing at all was being done in 17. The states which are doing the most are naturally those in which the mosquitoes were most numerous and malaria most common.

New Jersey, Mississippi, Texas, Florida, Alabama and Georgia are spending considerable amounts and doing much work to protect their citizens from the danger. This work brings its own reward. No mosquitoes, no malaria.

ETIQUETTE CODE FOR CAR DRIVER

Many Forget Golden Rule While Operating Auto Along Highways.

Good manners in motoring should be given consideration by thousands of drivers who pride themselves on their etiquette at home, in offices and while visiting but who forget the Golden Rule while operating a motor vehicle, suggests David Van Schaack, vice president of the National Safety council, who advises:

Motorists should make allowances for both other drivers and pedestrians. The driver who splashes water or mud on other people has a peculiar sense of humor. Automobilists should give proper warning, not only to other motorists and pedestrians but even to animals, which are valued by their owners.

Use Horn for Safety.

The horn shouldn't be used for anything save safety purposes. Don't signal thusly to attract the attention of people inside houses. Remember, some folks sleep at all hours of the day, some are sick or nervous and your honking may annoy them.

Your headlights should receive the proper attention so they won't cause inconvenience and danger to other people.

Brakes that squeak annoy people diving along the streets through which you are driving. Have your brakes tested and adjusted regularly.

Trying to steal a few feet of space, instead of remaining in the proper position, not only annoys and inconveniences other folks, but is dangerous.

Don't try to hog the road. Other motorists have just as much right to our streets and highways as you.

Concentrate on your driving. Look where you are going. Stay in line.

Eschew One-Arm Driving.

It is poor etiquette and reckless driving to be a "one-arm motorist." Save your demonstrations of affection for a more appropriate time and place.

It is bad taste to try to flirt while motoring. Don't think that because you are in an automobile you are privileged to attempt to vamp every pretty girl who passes your machine.

Retain your poise even if you get into an accident. Of course, the other fellow always is to blame. Swearing at the other party is not only decidedly poor etiquette but bad judgment. Both of you may get hurt or land up in a police cell.

Being a bluffer in a poker game may sometimes win the pot, but trying to bluff the other driver into thinking you have the right-of-way and are going to beat him across the street, may result in an accident. He, too, may be a bluffer.

When riding in somebody else's car, don't be a back-seat driver. Give him a chance to drive.

In the old days children were seen but not heard. Give them a chance to cross the street or they may be neither seen nor heard.

It is not good taste to engage in a dispute with a driver of a commercial vehicle. His vocabulary of cuss words is often used while out driving and in extreme cases his strong-arm methods may result in convincing you that it is best to always be a gentleman.

Proper Way to Keep Gas Tank Cap When Filling

There appears to be no good reason why a motorist should stop for gasoline at a filling station, then drive away leaving the fuel tank cap to topple off the running board, trunk rack or wherever he happens to have laid it. The first thing the average cap owner does when he removes the cap is to put it where he is likely to forget it. Sometimes he leaves this for the attendant to do.

Why not make a habit of putting the cap in a coat pocket?

If milady happens to be driving, and has no pocket, why not lay it on the floor of the car?

It is excusable to forget to put the cap back on the tank, but not to lose it.

Carburetor Easily Hurt by Using Cotton Waste

In cleaning your engine, it is a wise policy not to use waste. Very often the lint of cotton waste sticks to the various engine parts and when the engine hood is put down is sucked into the carburetor. When this occurs, the flow of fuel is made irregular and sometimes stopped altogether. On many occasions the cause is not readily found and much time is wasted in blowing out the fuel line only to find the trouble in the needle valve of the carburetor.

Instead of waste, it is much better to use some clean piece of old cloth which has a soft finish and does not give off the lint that is so objectionable in the case of waste.

What holds true in the case of waste lint is also true with road dust and dirt. Under ordinary conditions the engine hood and the engine underpan serve to keep a great majority of the dust and dirt out of the air intake to the carburetor. Sometimes drivers are prone to raise their engine hoods in hot weather because of the belief that permitting a free exit of air through the sides of the hood will prevent the engine from overheating.

Easy to Pull Out of Mudhole

Two blocks of wood, some short pieces of chain, and a few eyebolts will supply you with material to build yourself a sure cure for getting stuck in mudholes. As shown in Fig. 1, the wood blocks are cut as large as possible and yet clear the mud guards, and then the eyebolts are fitted at each corner. The chains can be fitted at one end with snap hooks. At each revolution of the rear wheels, the back of the car is raised up about eight inches and moved along about two feet, finally getting the car clear of the mud.—Popular Science Monthly.

Attaching Wooden Blocks to Rear Wheels to Aid in Getting Out of a Mudhole.

More Attention Should Be Paid to the Magneto

Do not think because the magneto gives you such faithful service that it never has troubles of its own. You probably give it a drop of oil in each oil lead once a week. But the distributor should be cleaned occasionally, using a brush or a piece of cloth dipped in gasoline. The dust which accumulates on it will soon short-circuit it, causing the engine to miss explosions. Dust sometimes accumulates inside the distributor, which must be removed for cleaning. Another trouble is pitting the platinum points of the circuit breaker. When this occurs no current can run at all. If this trouble is suspected run a strip of fine (not coarse) emery cloth between the points a few times. Do not attempt to file them. If circuit-breaker gap is out of adjustment, do not attempt to remedy it yourself.

Height of Chassis Over Road Is Very Important

Hanging a chassis at a height to give an all-over road clearance of ten inches is most satisfactory on the greatest possible variety of road conditions, engineers declare as a result of prolonged tests. The roadability of any car depends to a great extent of the distance of the weight center from the road surface. If the car is set too high, this elevation of the body weight makes it top-heavy and taking sharp turns is hazardous while handling the car is harder. If the car is too low to the ground axles and other projecting points strike the higher road elevations and are a handicap in deep snow or ruts.

SECRETARY INSPECTS CROSS COUNTRY CAR

The ordnance department, in conjunction with the equipment boards of the infantry, field artillery, cavalry and corps of engineers, have erected this type of cross-country car, to provide light vehicles with a high degree of mobility. The service test of this type of car is sufficiently advanced to permit its standardization by the War department for issue to organizations heretofore equipped with motor cycles and light trucks. In the front seat can be seen Secretary of War Dwight F. Davis, and in the rear Maj. Gen. John L. Hines, chief of staff, and Maj. Gen. Fox Conner, deputy chief of staff. The demonstration was made in Potomac park over very rough ground.

RADIO

Dr. C. B. Jolliffe of the Radio Laboratory of the Bureau of Standards, With a 250-Watt and a Type "N" Electron Tube.

By DR. ALFRED N. GOLDSMITH

The quality of reproduction of music in the home depends on many elements at the transmitting and receiving stations. Acoustic synchronizing, or the accurate re-creation in the home of the sound waves produced in the studio, is the determining factor in the enjoyment of radio programs. Few people realize the very important part played by vacuum tubes in the receiving set.

From the standpoint of securing real musical results in the home tubes must meet a number of difficult specifications. While high-grade tubes do, as a matter of fact, meet such specifications, it is by no means uncommon to see the entire circle of broadcast transmission and reception broken and tone quality ruined by the use of unsuitable or unreliable vacuum tubes.

Considering, first, some of the electrical constants of the tubes and without going into the technical details of the matter, vacuum tubes have a certain characteristic which is known as the amplification factor. If the amplification of the tubes used in the receiver is too small, weak and unnatural sounding signals will result. If, on the other hand, the amplification is too great in its relation to the design of the receiving set, the receiver may "oscillate" or produce squealing or howling notes which cannot be conveniently eliminated or controlled.

Internal Impedance.

Another important constant is what is known as the "internal impedance" of the tube. Roughly speaking, this is a measure of the opposition of the tube to the flow of plate current through it. It is the factor which limits the current drawn from the "B" battery. If the internal impedance is too small there will be an excessive drain on the plate batteries without corresponding advantage and plate battery renewals will be uncomfortably frequent. On the other hand, if the internal impedance is too high, weak signals of unsatisfactory character will be produced and tone quality on the average loud speaker will be distinctly unsatisfactory. Accordingly, internal impedance of vacuum tubes must also be held within carefully considered limits.

The elements inside of modern vacuum tubes are close together, and they, in conjunction with the wires leading from them to the contact pins in the base of the tube, constitute what are known as electrical capacities. In other words, there are minature condensers formed by the filament, grid and plate, the capacities of such condensers residing inside of the tube. It is a fact that in many highly efficient circuits these internal tube capacities definitely influence the electrical behavior of the set. Receivers which are "neutralized" or "balanced" against tendency toward oscillation (howling) are necessarily so balanced for a particular tube. If the internal capacity of tubes varies too far receivers which would otherwise properly function will begin to produce uncontrollable noises, generally of a buzzing or whistling nature, whereupon the musical enjoyment of the audience is destroyed.

The Filament.

Inside the vacuum tube is a glowing element called the filament. It is a sort of reservoir from which streams a current of electricity in the form of a myriad of tiny electrical charges called electrons. These pass from the filament to the plate inside of the tube and their flow is definitely controlled by the grid element between the filament and the plate, which acts as a sort of electric valve, turning on and off the flow of current through the tube and presumably in accordance with the shape of the sound originally produced in the broadcast studio. This, in general terms, is the process whereby the original signal is reproduced in the home. It is clear that an essential portion of this process is the emission of a sufficiently copious stream of electrons from the filament. If the stream is reduced to a mere trickle the signals will become weak and distorted. In this case, even for a low volume of sound in the home, there will be rattles and distortions in tone quality.

Vacuum tubes used as amplifiers require a high vacuum. Unusual and apparently extravagant precautions must be taken to extract gases from the bulb and even from the metallic elements inside the tube and the very glass itself. The presence of gas in the tubes shortens its life and causes it to be "noisy."

The delicate elements inside of a vacuum tube, if jarred, will vibrate. Some makes of tubes are peculiarly sensitive to mechanical disturbance and easily produce a "ringing note" if the receiving set is touched or tapped. Particularly is this the case if the tube sockets are not effectively cushioned and elastically supported. Vacuum tubes which produce a loud and prolonged ringing note when tapped will not give the same satisfaction as "non-microphonic tubes" which are free from this defect. In any case the vacuum tube mounting should be appropriate.

Suitable Batteries.

A brief mention of the importance of suitable batteries in good condition in their relation to tone quality is pertinent. When the "A" or filament batteries of a receiver run too low the tubes will not light up fully and the signals, besides being weak, are frequently distorted or scratchy in quality. A run-down condition of the "B" or plate batteries similarly causes a noisy or weak signal with distorted quality, or may even give rise to disagreeable howling sounds. The "C" or grid battery also plays a great part in the production of high-quality music.

The best rule is to select reliable tubes, each suited for the particular purpose to which it is to be put in the receiver, and then not overwork these tubes nor neglect the upkeep of the batteries feeding the tubes.

RADIO WAVES

Place the heated soldering iron in an asbestos-lined preserving jar to keep it hot when working on your aerial.

To space turns evenly on coil tubes, guide the wires with a comb, being careful not to strip the insulation.

Antenna and ground leads to the set should be as far apart as possible. Keep one at right angles to the other if you can.

When the batteries are fully charged and the volume gives out, have tubes tested. They may need revivifying or replacing.

Ammonia or soda water, quickly applied, will prevent damage from acid dropped while taking a hydrometer reading of the "A" battery.

If your two-step amplifier as a whole causes distortion, try a .001 mfd. fixed condenser across the plate and grid of the last transformer or use a power tube in the last stage.

When the sealing wax at one of the binding post's clips on a "B" battery does not afford full coverage, melt a little of a stick of the wax to make the whole "B" battery envelope air tight.

Shielding of sensitive sets increases selectivity. Line the cabinet with copper or brass sheeting to keep unwanted energy from coils, but keep the shield out of the field of the radio-frequency instruments.

When your set won't tune to the short wave-lengths, try disconnecting the aerial at the point where it enters the house and using as an antenna the piece remaining. This cuts the fundamental wave-length of the antenna system, which also includes the ground.

Winding of Coils

To space wires on coils the correct distance, start the coil with thread and wire, at the same time applying considerably more tension to the wire than when no thread is used. After the coil is wound and the end of the wire fastened, the thread may be unwound

THE COLLARED PECCARY

"I must make a speech," said the Collared Peccary to one of his brothers.

"Why must you?" asked his brother.

"Why must you?" the others in their yard all asked.

"It doesn't seem to me that you are any too eager to hear the speech," said the Collared Peccary, grunting.

"Oh, yes," said his eldest brother, "we want to hear it, to be sure."

"But why do you say that you must make it?"

"That's what we all want to know," the others squealed.

"Because," said the Collared Peccary, "I want to tell you all what a very bad reputation we have."

"What's a reputation?" asked one of the others.

"It's what people or creatures think of us," answered the Collared Peccary.

"When they think well of us and say good things about us we have a good reputation, and when they say and think bad things about us we have a bad reputation. See?"

The others grunted.

"And so," continued the Collared Peccary, "I must tell you all so that you will tell those who understand,

"I Must Tell You All."

if you get the chance, that the reputation we have been given is not true."

"It will be rather hard to tell only those who understand us, as it will not be easy to get the chance," said the other members of his family. "There aren't enough who understand us."

"Try when you can," said the Collared Peccary. "And now let me make my speech.

"Let me tell you that we are supposed to be very dangerous, yes, very dangerous indeed. We may be a little scrap dangerous, but not the way we're made out to be.

"No, we're really hardly dangerous at all. We're nice wild swine, we are. We must do all we can to let people know that we have been given a bad and untrue reputation."

"We will all do so," they squealed.

The Pig-Tailed Monkey was talking in his zoo home, quite a distance away from the Wild Pig or Peccary family. "I have a terrible name," he said.

"Why did you ever get such a name?" asked the Margot, or Barbary ape, a monkey cousin.

"I suppose because of my tail," said the Pig-Tailed Monkey. "And, too, because I am a monkey, so they added on monkey to the rest of my name."

"Yes, I suppose that is the reason," said the Margot, grinning. "Some monkeys have such fine long tails they can use with which to climb and to help them in many ways. But we are rather famous for not having long tails."

"That's so," said the Pig-Tailed Monkey. "You're tail isn't what some would call a tail, is it?"

"Some wouldn't think it much of a tail, that is true," said the Margot.

"Of course, I have a little tail like a pig's tail in many ways," said the Pig-Tailed Monkey, "and so I suppose it is really fair enough to have such a name, but it is rather terrible, isn't it?"

"Listen," said the Margot. "It would be terrible if you were a pig and not a monkey, but to be a happy, cheerful, clever monkey in a different thing indeed from being a grabbing, grunting, squealing, mud-loving pig."

"That's so," said the Pig-Tailed Monkey. "I have a lot for which to be thankful, haven't I?"

"I should say so," said the Margot.

"Well," said the Pig-Tailed Monkey, "I won't think about my name any more. I have been thinking about it and you see I have been sad."

"Yes, you've been looking dreadfully sad," said the Margot, and added proudly: "After all, tails are not the only things in life."

"I won't think about my name any more," said the Pig-Tailed Monkey, grinning once more, "but will rejoice because I am a monkey and not a pig."

Great Personages of the Bible

By REV. LEONARD A. BARRETT

Mary the Virgin

MARY THE VIRGIN was of royal descent from David. She was also a blood relative of Elizabeth, who was the wife of Zacharias, the priest. It was an unwritten law that only members of the royal families were permitted to unite in marriage with the priests. Though of royal blood, she was poor. Evidence for this is seen in that Joseph was a carpenter, which trade did not bring large financial returns; and also from the value of the gift Mary and Joseph offered as a sacrifice when they brought Jesus into the temple. The sacrifice consisted of a pair of turtle doves and two young pigeons, a small gift as compared with those of the wealthier class of her day.

One of the most interesting experiences in the biography of Mary was her attitude of mind and heart when she was informed by the shepherds of the important place her son would occupy in the future history of her nation. To her the information came as a great mystery. She could not comprehend why she should be regarded with such special favor. The writer of her biography informs us that instead of giving expression to her feeling in wild excitement and overstrained nervous tension, she remained eloquently silent. "Mary kept all these sayings, pondering them in her heart." No one but a mother knows the secrets which she hides away in the sanctuary of her heart.

Not only was the prophecy concerning Jesus locked up in Mary's heart; She also treasured there the mystery which surrounded her child Jesus. She could not altogether adjust herself to His dual nature. Truly He was her son, but He was also the Son of God. Pathetic is the incident for Mary when she discovered that after leaving the temple she had lost her Son. She sought for Him diligently, but nowhere could He be found. Upon returning to the temple, hoping that she might find Him in the crowd, imagine her consternation when she discovered that Jesus, though but thirteen years of age, was occupying a distinguished place in the temple. He was arguing with the intellectual men of His day upon matters of the law. Even more mysterious was the reply of Jesus when Mary spoke to Him about His absence, "Knew ye not that I must be in My Father's house." After this incident, He returns to the humble home in Nazareth, but Mary, perplexed and bewildered, "kept all these things in her heart."

A mother's pride and confidence in her son is beautifully portrayed through an incident which occurred in Cana. The occasion is a wedding feast and the refreshments which were furnished for the feast had given out. Mary interceded with Jesus in behalf of the guests and the embarrassment was relieved by the first miracle which Jesus performed. The confidence which Mary had in her Son is expressed in her command to the servants, "Whatsoever He saith unto you, do it."

Upon another occasion Mary, motherlike, desired to speak with Jesus, doubtless upon a subject of vital concern to herself, but which Jesus felt was not as important as the work of preaching and healing. While Jesus was speaking to the crowds of people, Mary stood outside waiting for an opportunity to speak with Him. When Jesus was informed of her wish, He made a reply to His followers which was a frank declaration of His spiritual mission. Motherlike, Mary again "Kept all this in her heart."

At the crucifixion, the concern which Jesus had for His mother is very beautiful and tender. He provides for her future care and gives her a parting assurance of His love and devotion. But Jesus, her Son, whom she perhaps never did thoroughly understand, was being crucified. Again, the only place where Mary could safely hide her sorrow and her pain was in the sanctuary of her heart.

This attitude of Mary, of hiding things in her heart, stands out as a very unique characteristic of her nature. The only safe place of sure retreat is the human heart.

The wisdom of the heart is many times more valuable than the wisdom of the mind. "Out of the heart are the issues of life." The lamps of courage, sympathy, and strength are lit within the temple of the heart. The real man is always, "the hidden man of the heart."

King Honors Proofreader

In recognition of his fifty years' work as proofreader and stereotyper at the British National Institute for the Blind, John Andrew Ford, who has been blind since youth, has received a message of greeting from King George. To Mr. Ford belongs the proud record of having written the whole of the Bible in Braille by hand—a task which involved some 21,000,000 blows with a hammer.

Made High Grade

The teacher in the Franklin (N. H.) kindergarten asked one of her young pupils what the eyes were for and was promptly answered "To see with." Another was asked what the nose was for and the answer was correctly given. Then she asked the little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Watts, "What are your ears for?" The child replied, "To keep clean." She got a 100 mark.—Boston Globe.

BARES PURCHASE OF INDEPENDENCE HALL

Letter Tells of Sale of Building to City.

N INTERESTING letter, written in 1816 by Robert Wharton, then mayor of Philadelphia, to William Finley, treasurer of the commonwealth of Pennsylvania, concerning the purchase of Independence hall, known in those days as the State house, is in the possession of the Rosenbach galleries.

It reads as follows:

"Mayor's Office,

"Philadelphia, May 31, 1816.

"Sir—Having this day on behalf of the Mayor, Aldermen and Citizens of Philadelphia, paid into the Bank of Pennsylvania to the credit of the Commonwealth the sum of Twenty-three thousand, three hundred, thirty-three dollars and thirty-four cents, being one-third part of the purchase money for the State House and the square of ground on which the same is erected, and the large clock, the property of the State, remaining within the State House, I do myself the honor to transmit herewith and deposit with the State Treasurer the receipts of the cashier of the Bank of Pennsylvania for said sum, agreeably to the seventh section of the Act of the General Assembly of this Commonwealth, passed at their last session, entitled, 'An Act Providing for the Sale of the State House and State House Square in the City of Philadelphia.'

"Independence Hall," From a Woodblock by Herbert Pullinger.

"Very respectfully, yours, etc.,

"ROBERT WHARTON, Mayor.

"William Finley, Esqr., Treasurer of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

"P. S. Please to acknowledge the receipt by return of mail."

On that date an act providing for the sale of the property was passed. As a result of that act, the historic letter quoted above was written.

Robert Wharton, the author, was mayor of Philadelphia for some time. It was during his administration that, on January 16, 1801, large numbers of hungry sailors marched to City Hall under the flag and made an appeal to Mayor Wharton, who succeeded in dispersing the mob without fatalities.

Signing the Declaration

The Declaration was adopted by the congress on July 4. On that day only John Hancock, the President, and the secretary signed it. Nearly a month later, August 2, a parchment copy was signed by all the delegates present. Two members of the congress who arrived in Philadelphia later were permitted to sign the document.

RECIPE FOR THE FOURTH

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

Take the early morning and some children, together with a fair sprinkling of firecrackers, and serve gaily and noisily as a first course.

Take the middle of the day and a hot sun and a brass band and a picnic and plenty of people, and serve good and hot for the second course.

Take the evening and a cool breeze and fireworks and everyone out-of-doors; serve tired but happy for the third and last course.

Liberty Bell to Remain at Home

Days of Wandering of Symbol of American Liberty Over.

In legend and song, in sacred peregrinations throughout the land whose freedom its voice proclaimed, the Liberty bell has become endeared to the hearts of the American people as one of the most cherished symbols of the spirit in which the nation was founded. With the ushering in of the present year its broken voice was faintly heard, perhaps for the last time, by millions of radio listeners. Its days of wandering are over, for the announcement has been made by its custodians that it is never again to leave its home in Independence hall, Philadelphia, where it now reposes in reverential state, in the one hundred and seventy-fourth year of its life, as a bell and the one hundred and fifty-first of its devotion to the cause of American liberty.

Some of the legends that have been woven around the history of the bell have faded before the white light of modern historical inquiry. We now know that the bell did not ring on the 4th of July, 1776, but on the 8th of July, when public proclamation of the signing of the Declaration was first made, and we know that there was no white-haired veteran bellman in the steeple awaiting on that day the cry of "Ring! Ring!" from a little eager boy hurrying from the statehouse through the crowded streets. This familiar legend has gone to join the numberless other voluntary offerings of pure romance—the things that might have happened, but did not. But the Liberty bell needs no embellishments of fiction, however patriotically inspired—its own true story is one of historic inspirations and thrills that reverberate throughout all the fateful periods of the nation's life.

A Song for Lexington

The spring came earlier on
Than usual that year;
The shadiest snow was gone,
The slowest brook was clear,
And warming in the sun
Shy flowers began to peer

'Twas more like middle May,
The earth so seemed to thrive,
That nineteenth April day
Of Seventeen Seventy-five;
Winter was well away,
New England was alive!

Alive and sternly glad!
Her doubts were with the snow;
Her courage long forbade,
Ran full to overflow;
And every hope she had
Began to bud and grow.

She rose betimes that morn,
For there was work to do;
A planting, not of corn,
Of what she hardly knew—
Blessings for men unborn;
And well she did it, too!

With open hand she stood,
And sowed for all the years,
And watered it with blood,
And watered it with tears,
The seed of quickening food
For both the hemispheres.

Thus was the planting done
That April morn of fame;
Honor to everyone
To that seed-field that came!
Honor to Lexington,
Our first immortal name!

—Robert Kelley Weeks.

HISTORIC EDIFICE

The church shown is the famous Old North church at Boston. Erected in 1723 at the north end of the town on Copp's hill, it is still in excellent condition. The structure was modeled after St. Anne's church at Blackfriars, England, which was the work of Sir Christopher Wren. Much of the early history of the country centers about this church. It was from its high tower that Paul Revere received his signal. The 150th anniversary of this ride was celebrated with special exercises in the church.

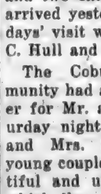
SUMMERY GOOD THINGS

Cooling drinks are much appreciated during the warm summer days.



Try to have a variety of different juices, so that there may be something on hand at any time. Whey has a delicious flavor when combined with fruit juices, and is especially wholesome.

Whey Punch. — Take one cupful of whey, one and one-quarter cupfuls of sugar and boil together for five minutes. Cool and add a quart of whey, the juice of two lemons and one cupful of shredded pineapple.

Whey Sponge.—Take two cupfuls of whey, two tablespoonfuls of gelatin, one-third of a cupful of water, two-thirds of a cupful of sugar, one egg white, one cupful of grated raw carrot, the grated rind of a lemon, the juice of half a lemon. Soak the gelatin in cold water, dissolve in hot water. Mix with the whey, add sugar and set the mixture in a pan of ice-water. When it begins to thicken around the edges, beat well with an egg beater, add the lemon rind and the juice and carrot. Fold in the well-beaten egg white and turn into a mold. Serve as a salad.

Tomato and Pear Salad.—Cut tomatoes into quarters and alternate them with quarters of ripe pears. Arrange on lettuce and serve with a highly seasoned salad dressing. Canned pears will be good, if the fresh are not obtainable.

Grape and Ginger Ale Jelly.—Heat a pint of grape juice with two tablespoonfuls of sugar; when hot pour over two tablespoonfuls of gelatin which has been softened in a tablespoonful of cold water. Add a pint of ginger ale. Mold and cool on ice until ready to serve.

Peas and Peppers.—Take the tops from six green peppers, remove the seeds and soak over night in strong brine. Fill the shells after draining with one-half cupful each of minced meat and bread crumbs and one cupful of cooked peas. Season with onion juice, a bit of peanut butter, salt, pepper, thick cream to make moist enough to serve well. Bake until the peppers are tender. Serve hot.

HERE'S WHY 1926 CIRCUS IS THE BIGGEST

Ringling Bros. Enlarge Greatest Show on Earth to Dedicate Mammoth New York Edifice

A circus so big that it requires two added rings, eight stages, a wider hippodrome track and a 700 foot long big top to display its marvels is now headed this way. It is the Ringling Brothers and Barnum & Bailey Combined Show, to give performances at Fort Wayne July 15

The five rings now used have been made necessary to present the added attractions got together in the spring to celebrate the combined shows first appearance in New York's New Madison Square Garden. This edifice is the biggest ever built for circus purposes. To fittingly dedicate it the Ringling Brothers themselves spent months in Europe mobilizing the biggest circus in history. This same show that for weeks entertained New York's millions is now on tour under canvas.

The tournament is as brilliant as in the past but has been enlarged by the addition of such novelties as zebras and llamas broken to harness and hitched to gem-studded floats. Wee baby elephants ride at the tops of allegorical cars. The menagerie of more than a thousand animals embraces such features as thirteen elephant youngsters with the smallest stationed side by side with the biggest pachyderms in captivity Another importation is the largest and handsomest tiger of which there is record

Performing horse acts are now presented in quintet—a troupe in each of the five rings. Those elephants who are performers appear in similar formation—five herds at one time. The number of men and women aerialists, bareback riders, gymnasts and high-wire performmers has been increased to eight hundred. There are three hundred and fifty trained horses, two hundred of which appear in a single display. One hundred double length cars are required to handle this gigantic amusement enterprise.

NUMEROUS ARRESTS FOR VIOLATING GAME LAWS

Fish and game law violations kept Indiana game wardens unusually busy during May, 201 arrests being made necessary because of the numerous infractions of the game laws.

This announcement was contained in the report of the state conservation department filed today by George N. Mannfeld, chief of the fish and game division.

Of this large number of arrests, the report stated, 193 convictions were obtained when the cases were brought to court. Seven cases were continued while only one was dismissed. Fines and costs totaled $4,448.

The principal violation recorded was that of hunting and fishing without a license. Fifty-nine persons were arrested on this charge alone.

Forty-one fishermen were arrested for possessing illegal nets and seines and forty others were charged with taking bass and bluegills during the closed season.

Possession and use of fish spears caused the arrest of eighteen persons while an equal number were charged with taking undersized fish.

Four persons were charged with using fish traps and five others with using dynamite in killing fish. Of the latter, three pleaded guilty immediately while the other two remain to be tried.

Wardens throughout the state, now engaged in clearing the lakes of Indiana of gar and dog fish are meeting with great success, Mannfeld reported.

CHILDREN'S WEEK PROGRAM CLOSES SUNDAY

Last Sunday, in the Sunday schools of Concord township, the observance of the daily story hour, came to a close with the children having the program. For four weeks, the children gathered each afternoon where Bible stories were told by persons allotted for each day. The attendance was good, although many of the children of the town did not attend, due to the parents not being interested. Perhaps other plans will be worked out for another year.

HOME, DAD AND THE BOY

By FRANK H. CHELEY

The Preoccupied Dad

THE world often calls him the successful man, and prints his history in Who's Who.

He gives his family everything they need but himself. In the wild rush of modern living he has abducted his responsibility as a Dad.

He is a really large calibered man who has become wrapped up in his work until he almost forgets he is a father at all.

"Perhaps when profit is dead and brotherhood is an established fact, a less commercial generation will seize the greatest of all opportunities and fathers will concern themselves with their sons."

There is many a preoccupied father who wakes up too late to the fact that the "worst thing about money is that it often costs too much."

Not all the homeless boys in America live in the slums.

It is a great service to such men to help them discover that it is their privilege to be more than a Santa Claus to their own boys.

To whom does your boy go for advice?

"Yes, my Dad was a fine man, but I never knew him," said a certain boy in trouble.

The Indiana State Fair will begin on September 4th and end on September 11th. The Fair has been extended to an eight-day fair instead of five as in the past, on account of the large number of entries and exhibits. It has been impossible to get through with the judging in a five-day fair, is the reason the Indiana Board of Agriculture decided to hold an eight-day fair, having all the club work judged Saturday, September 4th. There will be no racing, judging contests of any kind or carnival on Sunday, September 5th. The only attraction scheduled for Sunday is a Sacred Concert and speaking by Senator Beveridge.

A Shingle of Recognized Merit

A DISTINCT pleasure is gained from possessing an article which is universally recognized as having exceptional merit. Such a pleasure is enjoyed by the owner of a home covered with Ruberoid Strip-shingles.

In these shingles three important qualities are happily combined.

Ruberoid Strip-shingles are highly decorative because of the natural crushed slate surface-coating in sage green, Venetian red, or steel-blue. Various combinations of these colors may be used. The octagonal shape of the shingles breaks the roof into pleasing diagonal, horizontal and vertical lines.

Ruberoid Strip-shingles make an unusually tight and long wearing roof. Their unusual thickness assures you of this.

Due to their patented form, the labor cost of laying is very low—an item which no home owner can afford to overlook.

Come in or phone us today for samples, prices, and a folder illustrating these shingles, the attractive designs, and color combinations.

He comes into contact with various exciting phases of the life of the country and eventually has an opportunity to show the stuff that is in him when he is put up against the difficulties and problems of a gigantic enterprise involving the water supply of a large city. A stirring narrative by one who knows his West and has written some of its most fascinating tales.

WILBUR COX

Synopsis.—Idly fishing Hermanos creek, in California, Caleb Warner, civil engineer, and a New Englander, is witness of the end of a coyote pulled down by two wolfhounds, urged on by a girl rider. Admiring the hounds, he introduces himself, and learns her name is Clinton. With western hospitality she invites him to the ranch to meet her father. At the Clinton home Warner learns his new friend's name is Betty. He is welcomed by her father, Southern Civil war veteran and owner of Hermanos valley. Warner tells them something of his ambitions and his feeling that he is destined to be a "Water-Bearer." In the town of Golden Warner shares an apartment with his old Columbia college chum, Ted Baxter, carefree and somewhat dissipated youth, only child of his widowed mother, who controls the family fortune.

"There's Wilbur Cox," he said. "That's a Big Business crowd. Morse, on the right of Cox, is head of the Lumber ring, then comes Towle, president of the Sundown railroad. Marlin's next, he opens up big tracts for colonist development. Lawler is an oil magnate and the last one is Winton, manager of the Golden Light and Power company. They come close to running Golden and a good share of the state as well. I don't know how their bank balances stand, but you can bet that the six of them represent several times that number of million dollars in active circulation with their interests."

Caleb regarded Cox with special attention. He knew that he owned big land holdings, controlled rich mines and was the president and mainspring of the Crystal Springs Water company that supplied Golden with its commercial and civic measure of the vital fluid.

He saw a man who might have been anywhere from fifty to sixty, tall, spare, with close-trimmed hair gray above the ears, clean-shaven, with a fine forehead and a well-shaped skull, a projecting nose, keen gray eyes, a genial mouth and a firm chin. He told many of the stories that met with the greatest laughter, for the group was a care-free one, for the moment at least. Their luncheon was almost over and, when Cox rose at its conclusion, he did so with an ease that spoke of muscles still in prime condition. If Caleb had wanted to sum up the man in one crisp word he would have chosen the adjective "fit."

"No need to hurry," Baxter said. "The old boy's son is coming up this afternoon from Los Angeles and I know Cox has arranged for a dinner here tonight. If you can get in right with Cox, Cal, the going should be easy. I can give you the introduction. After that it's up to you. Cox doesn't take me very seriously."

Leaving the dining room, they met Cox alone, coming from the direction of the club's telephone booths. Baxter seized the moment.

"I want a friend of mine to meet you," he said to the older man, speaking with the frank facility that was one of his greatest assets, met by Cox with a sort of half-tolerant geniality. "This is Caleb Warner, one-time classmate of mine at Columbia, civil engineer, following the Star of Empire westward in the hope of hitching his wagon to it. Don't let my friendship with him prejudice you against him. He plays ant to my grasshopper."

Cox smiled as he gripped Caleb's hand cordially enough, giving him a direct glance that, in kindly but determined fashion, seemed to measure him.

"Glad to meet you," he said. "Plenty of room out here for civil engineers. Any specialty?"

"Water," Caleb answered promptly. The eyes of Cox seemed to harden a little, to hold a hint of suspicion at the pat answer that might have been calculated to awaken interest.

"Done much at it?"

"A filtery dam or two. One reservoir for town supply. Back East. The rest of my practical experience has been along other lines for the last two years but I am especially interested in water-engineering and the West seemed to be the place."

"Looking for a job?" Cox fired out the questions briskly, all the while covering Caleb with the battery of his eyes.

"For any real opportunity, Mr. Cox."

A servant came up with a receiver and presented it to Baxter. He glanced at the filled-in form message and excused himself.

"You'll pardon me. I'm wanted on the phone. Cox looked after him with a humorous quirk to his mouth.

"There goes the grasshopper," he said. "Now then, these last two years you mentioned? What were you doing? Where were you doing it?"

"Building roads and bridges. Repairing a lot more. Some trench work."

"Ah!" Caleb was sure that a gleam of new interest came into Cox's eyes. "You served over there. Any rank?"

"I came out a first lieutenant." Cox nodded.

"It was a great training ground," he said. "No time wasted there, to my mind. Gave a young man a broader horizon, taught him to handle men. My boy was over there." He hesitated as Baxter came back. "He's due here at five-thirty," he went on. "I imagine you'd get on well together. Better join us at dinner. You too, Baxter."

"Got to excuse me," said Baxter. "Previous appointment. Sorry."

One of the members of the luncheon party had been hovering somewhat impatiently in the background, evidently waiting for Cox. The latter saw him and nodded.

"Got to go now," he said. "See you at five-thirty, Warner, then."

Caleb watched the tall figure as it strode off, energetic, masterful, listening to what the other had to say, dismissing it with an abrupt gesture. He turned to Baxter.

"That man is a fighter," he said.

"You can double that bet. They're all fighters, scrapping for everything in sight, fighting to get it, fighting to hold on to it. That's the essence of "Water," Caleb Answered Promptly.

Big Business, I take it, everywhere. They have their rules, of course, but they sometimes slip one over beneath the belt, at that. But they've never told the count over Cox. How did he come to invite you to dinner? Not to mention me? I'd fit in there about as well as a goldfish in a shark-pond—not worth gobbling but, if I glittered enough, they might know I was among those present."

"I don't think he took any sudden fancy to me," Caleb answered. "He warmed up a little when he heard I had been across. Thought his boy might like to meet me."

"Of course. I'm a chump. Jack Cox is the apple of his father's eye, all the more so because Pa Cox had good reasons to suppose said apple was worm-eaten. You think I'm inclined to burn the trail. Man, beside Jack Cox I was as a Ford to a Rolls Royce! He was in more mix-ups with wine, women and song than Don Juan ever dreamed of. Compared to him I'm an amateur. Or was. The war changed all that. Jack's come back a changed leopard. Not a spot on him. Following in his dad's footsteps." He broke off abruptly. "How about a little air this afternoon? I think the breeze would favor my fevered brow. I want to be fit for tonight. We'll take the car over on the ferry and run down to San Jose and back."

"Just the two of us?"

"Yes, you double-dyed Puritan, just the two of us, all by our lonelies. Are you on?"

At three o'clock they were bowling south along an almost perfect road when Baxter grudgingly slowed down in obedience to a signboard that informed them they were approaching the town of Paloma.

"I'm feeling much better," he announced. "Want to take the wheel for a while and let me smoke?" They changed seats.

"I've got to trim down on these," Baxter said, lighting his cigarette. "The pump needs repacking," he went on, tapping himself over the heart. "And it can't be done. They turned me down for that. Told me I had a banquet-heart and that the excitement of sticking a Heine might end it. It's the old C and C. Champagne and cigarettes! Jack Cox got in but I stayed out. Made me feel like a slacker."

"Why don't you cut the stuff, Ted?"

"It isn't going to last long enough. At present I prefer the vineyard to the lemon grove. I'm no good at business anyway. I'm a grasshopper and I'll hop till the grass gets too short and things dry up generally."

"This sort of thing you've got on tonight, Ted? Aren't you afraid you'll wind up in some sort of a mess?"

"I'm immune. It's good fun. The girls I travel with know how to take care of themselves. It's a two-sided game. If I met the right girl— Oh, what's the use? You see, Cal, the mater is chipping off a chunk of her principal every year. She flies high herself. If I outlast her, which is doubtful, there won't be much coming to me. I suppose she's right. I've got to marry money, but the girls with money are either too blase, too businesslike or too homely and stupid. No use preaching to me, Cal. You're born an ant and I'm a cicada, which is Californese for grasshopper."

They reached the apartment house at five o'clock and Caleb proceeded to dress circumspectly for the dinner while his friend laid out more sumptuous raiment.

"You'll be home tonight?" asked Caleb.

"I'll be home when the game's over," answered Baxter enigmatically. "This is Saturday night. We may take a little trip to Lake county. Don't bother about me. Off to your business, ant!"

CHAPTER IV

Big Business

Jack Cox turned out so close a replica of his father—less weathered, less bitten by Time and Experience—but nevertheless so evident a chip of the old block, that Caleb almost doubted Baxter's description of him as a reformed wastrel. He had been through the furnace of the war and, whatever of steel had been in him had been tempered, the baser metals burned to slag and discarded. Caleb had seen others in his own division of the fighting game who had stiffened and found their manhood in like fashion.

Caleb liked him from the outset. The man had qualities that he lacked, the same western broadness that Baxter possessed in more volatile fashion. But, though trolleys and water dams seem far apart to the laity, a mutual profession based both of them. Caleb found the preliminary story of Imperial valley vastly interesting and Jack Cox told it well, albeit he had had no hand in those earlier stages of development. It was the tale of the bringing back of an arid sink, once under cultivation by the Indians, of the harnessing of the mighty Colorado, one terrific fight with flood waters and now—cotton fields, and vineyards, wide acres of cantaloupes, horticulture and agriculture in every branch; order, industry, prosperity. Caleb listened with interest and understanding.

"There is only one Imperial valley, perhaps," said Cox, "but there are other deserts with soil just as fertile, waiting only for the magic touch of water. Your end of it—the water end—is the initial move in the game, mine is the last. You play Alpha to my Omega."

"If I get the chance," said Caleb.

"Oh, you'll get it. The chances are everywhere. If a man knows his business, and wants to work at it, there's no trouble about Opportunity. Her knuckles must be raw on the Pacific coast. She knocks unceasingly," laughed Cox.

The Coxes' father and son, appear to be solid folk. Is Caleb Warner's lot to be cast with them?

Some Things for Good "Sports" to Remember

Sport is sometimes criticised for the unfairness of its participants or the partisanship of its followers.

It has a mission besides the development of a healthy body, surely it is in the encouragement of fair-mindedness in the players and on the grandstand. Toward this end, the following Golden Rules were printed recently on the back of a program by the army school of physical training in England, and these rules will well bear repetition elsewhere:

Play the game for the sake of the game.

Play for your side, and not for yourself.

Be a good winner and a good loser—modest in victory and generous in defeat.

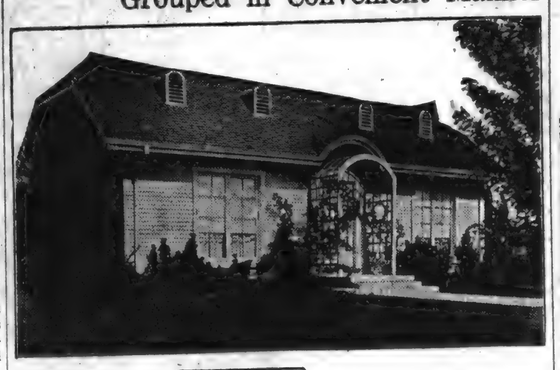
Take all decisions without question or argument.

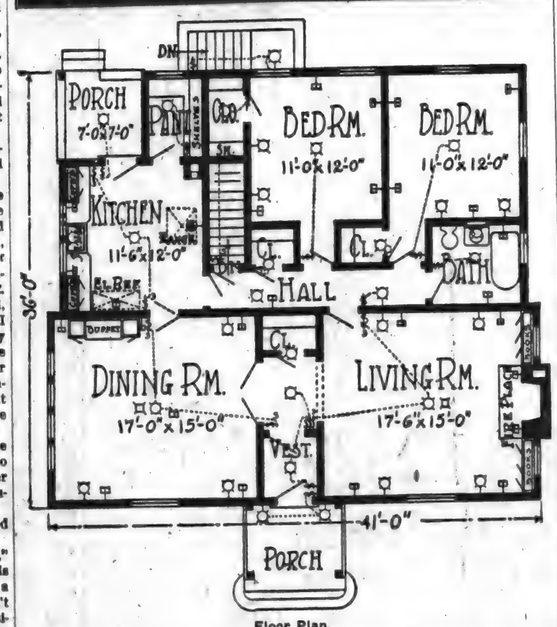
Be unselfish and always ready to teach and help others.—Toronto Globe.

Antlers of Deer

Deer antlers are shed each year, usually soon after the close of the breeding season, to be renewed the following spring. Sometimes antlers are straight and unbranched, but usually there are branches, called tines or snags, and the number of these increases with age, so that the finest antlers are on fully matured males.

Rooms in This Small House Are Grouped in Convenient Manner





Floor Plan.

By WILLIAM A. RADFORD

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give ADVICE FREE OF COST on all problems pertaining to the subject of building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as editor, author and manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on the subject. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 1827 Prairie avenue, Chicago, Ill., and only inclose two-cent stamp for reply.

Not long ago a contest was conducted in which 3,600 farm women submitted plans of what they considered the ideal farm home. From these plans a number of interesting things were learned concerning what people living on farms and in the smaller communities really want in the design of their homes. Many of these points also indicate the changing ideas of the people as a whole. The most conspicuous trend, which is to be found among people not only of the rural districts, but also of the towns, small cities and the suburban districts of the great cities, was that toward smaller houses than have been the rule in years passed.

Among the plans submitted the largest number were for houses with five or six rooms. Since the tendency to reduce the size of houses is even more marked in the towns and cities, it is reasonable to assume that the five-room house is one of the most popular if not the most popular size, and that a large proportion of those who are preparing to build will be interested in plans for houses of that size.

Just five rooms are provided in the house illustrated here, and these are grouped in a most convenient and compact manner. The house is nearly square in shape, being 41 feet wide and 36 feet deep. Across the front is placed the living room and dining room, entrance vestibule, reception hall and hall closet. Back of these there is a hallway with two bedrooms, bathroom, kitchen, the basement stairs and another closet opening from it.

Each of the bedrooms has an ample closet, and the bathroom is so placed that it is convenient to both. The kitchen is small and well arranged with a large pantry adjoining, and a service entrance from the rear porch. The interior hall has a door opening into it from the living room, and another door communicates directly between the dining room and kitchen.

The outward appearance of this house is just as attractive as its interior arrangement. It is of frame construction with the wood siding carried down low to the foundation at the grade level. The roof is shingled and its lines, like those of the houses as a whole, are simple and good. The front expanse of roof is well broken by the curving eaves above the entrance and by the attractive ventilators which play their part in keeping the house cool in the summer.

Tall windows, equally spaced on either side of the entrance, and down pipes at each end, keep the front well balanced, and it is made more charming by the vine-covered arbor at the entrance. The latter is approached by three steps of concrete and like the eaves above and the arbor screening it, is arched at the top.

The long windows at the front and also the side windows of the living room and the dining room are of the casement type, and every room is so well supplied with windows that good cross ventilation is assured.

The large tree, just visible at the left in the photograph and the low shrubbery, close to the house at the front, do much to enhance the general appearance of this home. Good treatment of the surrounding grounds is a very important matter to the home owner who would like his home attractive. Even a good house may fail to attract if the ground about it is left barren or is not well planted, while an otherwise plain little home may be greatly improved by good landscaping.

Interior Trim of Home Requires Good Varnish

Protection of the various surfaces, beauty of effect, sanitation and durability are all to be considered in painting, varnishing and finishing of walls, woodwork and floors in the new building.

The first item of importance is the selection of good paint and varnish. The best will cost a little more per gallon, but fewer gallons will be needed. Select a good painter, if you are not an expert yourself. The right kind of paint, plus some one who knows how to use it, and good wood will make a beautiful interior.

The standing trim, doors, etc., should first receive attention. They should be stained with a good penetrating stain. If the wood is open-grained oak, it should be paste-filled. Twenty-four hours should be allowed for the stain to dry.

Twelve hours after the wood has been paste-filled, the work should be sanded, the dust wiped off and a coat of orange shellac applied. If paste-filler is used, it should match the stain. The orange shellac should be used only over brownish or reddish tones of stain. Use white shellac over all the other colors.

On window stools, sash rails, base boards or floors, all exterior surfaces, and other surfaces exposed to much weather or moisture, do not use shellac or liquid fillers, but apply a good floor or spar varnish directly over the stain or paste filler.

Breakfast Room Doesn't Require Extra Space

The home of today demands a breakfast room, but limited space prohibits this in many houses and apartments. A breakfast room which folds away permits of installing this complete, compact folding arrangement in the wall or in its face. It is small enough to use in the kitchen, handsome enough to use in the living room. It is ornamental, quickly set into place and as readily swung back into its cabinet, there to rest behind closed doors that give no inkling of the wonderful small room that is housed in such small space.

Hot Water

No home may be considered modern today without the convenience of ever-ready automatic hot-water service. Without it the bathroom, the kitchen sink, the laundry tubs, stand in mute mockery of their intended usefulness. Its importance to clean, comfortable living cannot be overestimated.

ATTRACTIVE WOMEN

If You Would Be Attractive You Must Be Healthy

A beautiful woman is always admired. There are many types of beauty. But no woman can be truly beautiful unless she is healthy. Radiant vitality is always attractive however plain a woman's features may be.

Many a woman has found her health improved thru the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Weakness, loss of weight, and a pale complexion were a few of the things of which Mrs. J. C. Taylor of Box 211, Tallahassee, Florida, complained before she started taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. "I could not even sit down and talk to a friend for any length of time," she states, "I would forget what I was talking about and felt so blue." Mrs. Taylor is so pleased with the work of the Vegetable Compound that she keeps a bottle of it in the house at all times—and when it is empty, her husband makes sure that she has a new bottle. "I have regained my strength," Mrs. Taylor writes. "I can do all my housework now and I feel just fine."

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is made from roots and herbs and has been growing in popularity among women for over fifty years.

Gland Extract to Heal Broken Bones

It is possible that, as the result of recent experiments in Japan, the breaking of a limb, or even a hip, may soon be looked upon without alarm.

Healing broken bones may be hastened and the fractured bones of even old people will knit together if the patient is treated with a certain glandular extract. Next to the thyroid gland in the neck are four tiny glands known as "parathyroid glands." It is claimed that when an extract from these is swallowed or injected the percentage of calcium and phosphate in the blood serum is caused to rise.

These chemicals are both essential in bone building, and one reason why bones are slow to heal is because it takes a long time to extract enough of these substances from the blood.

Doctor Owaga, a Japanese surgeon, has been experimenting with parathyroid extract, with results that seem to indicate success.

Avoid Butterfat Losses in Cream

Washing and Cleansing of Separator Is Big Factor in Skimming.

Thorough washing and cleaning of the cream separator is an important factor in clean skimming. Many dairy farmers are losing butterfat in skim milk unbeknown to them. There are many causes for loss of butterfat in skim milk, as it comes from the separator. The speed of the machine, temperature of the milk, rate of inflow, cleanliness of machine, smoothness of running and other factors will affect the amount of butterfat lost. The only way to guard against it is to test skim milk regularly.

Minnesota Investigation.

An investigation by Goodwin Rogness, a cow tester in Minnesota, revealed definite advantages in favor of clean separators. Twenty-four separators were inspected and divided into three groups as to methods of cleaning. Group one, composed of five machines, was washed twice daily. After each separation, the skim milk was tested for butterfat. The loss per month on 300 pounds of skim milk daily was 1.5 pounds butterfat, worth 63 cents. Group two, composed of eight machines, was washed once a day and flushed out with warm or cold water in the evening.

The loss per month on 300 pounds skim milk daily was 2.7 pounds butterfat, worth $1.13. Group three was composed of 11 machines washed once a day and flushed with skim milk or not at all. The loss per month on 300 pounds skim milk was 5.22 pounds butterfat, worth $2.19. It was noted that the morning skimming in each case contained the most butterfat.

Yearly Saving.

Putting the above figures on a yearly basis, it is seen that those in group one were paid at the rate of $18.72 a year for washing the separators twice a day. Running warm or cold water through the machine after the evening separating saved $12.72 a year as compared with group three where little or no attention was given the separator between the evening and morning skimming.

This investigation and others that could be cited, show the importance of washing the separator after each separation.—Floyd E. Ball, Deputy Colorado Dairy Commissioner.

Latest Developments in Cucumber Pest Control

The latest development in the control of the cucumber beetle consists of a duster equipped with a length of tubing and a metal cone a foot or more in diameter. The cone, or hood, is placed on the ground over the plant and the dust applied. The beetles have no chance for a getaway.

Another refinement is for four tubes inside the cone which carry the dust close to the ground so as to reach the under side of the plant. Holes at the top of the cone provide an upward draft and assist in giving excellent application. The material used is nicotine dust containing a high percentage of nicotine.

Of course, the old way is still effective, namely, repelling the beetles by dusting with 1 lb. of calsium arsenate and 15 lbs. of gypsum, or with 1 lb. of calsium arsenate, 5 lbs. of wheat flour, and 10 lbs. of lime. The new method, however, gives that added satisfaction that comes from killing the pest outright!

Prevent Egg Eating by Darkening All Nests

Egg eating is another vice that hens sometimes learn when kept in close confinement, or are not fed sufficient animal material. The trouble usually starts from a hen scratching in the nest and accidentally breaking an egg. If she does it once, the chances are good that she will try it again, and the habit is soon formed. To avoid the formation of such a habit and to cure it, in case it is formed, all nests should be more or less dark. A long covered box, with a single entrance at one end, is most practical for the nests.

Farm Hints

A very good ration for pigs just learning to eat is the following: 65 pounds corn chop, 25 pounds shorts and 10 pounds tankage.

The question is often asked, "Which is the best breed to raise?" All are good breeds and are capable of giving good money returns if the owner will take the proper interest in them.

Potato Spraying to Increase the Yield

Many Dollars May Be Saved to the Growers.

"By proper attention to disease control through spraying, many thousands of dollars may be saved by the potato growers," says the plant pathologist at the New Jersey College of Agriculture.

"The use of high-grade fertilizer, planting vigorous seed, and thorough cultivation are not the only steps necessary to insure the production of a profitable potato crop. No matter how much plant food is available in the soil, it cannot be utilized by a plant that has most of its leaves destroyed by fungus pests. The leaf is the factory in which the starch is manufactured and if not protected from diseases it cannot be expected to give maximum returns.

"Results obtained at the experiment station the past five years show conclusively that where the potato crop is properly sprayed, increased yields will result. A number of spray tests conducted with the Irish Cobbler variety since 1919 show an average increase of 42.6 bushels per acre from spraying with home-made bordeaux mixture. In tests conducted this year on the farm of J. H. Kandle at Elmer Irish Cobbler potatoes sprayed seven times with home-made bordeaux mixture gave 80 bushels more per acre than did unsprayed potatoes. On the L. B. Van Derveer farm at Freehold spraying Irish Cobblers and Green Mountains gave increased yields amounting to 30 and 50 bushels per acre, respectively. In the light of these results it is questionable if the potato grower can afford to omit spraying as one of the necessary steps in potato growing."

New Whitewash Formula Gives Durable Product

Whitewash acts as a germicide by covering and cleansing the wall and ceiling surfaces, and for this reason is excellent in the poultry house, dairy barn, hog house, and other outbuildings. A new formula developed within recent years gives a product which closely approaches paint in durability.

The old-fashioned whitewash is made of quicklime and water mixed in the proportions of one pound of lime to one gallon of water. This has the disadvantage of being not very durable and of rubbing off badly on the clothing of workers.

The New Jersey College of Agriculture advises that whitewash may be made durable, hard, glossy, and practically waterproof by the addition of salt, alum and sulphate of zinc. Such a mixture is good for both interior and exterior use. To make it, 1 bushel (62 lbs.) of quicklime is slacked in 12 gallons of hot water. Then another solution is made up of the following: 1 pound of sulphate of zinc, 1 pound of alum, 2 pounds of salt, dissolved in 2 gallons of boiling water. These two solutions are then mixed together and 2 gallons of skimmed milk are added.

Keep the mixture thoroughly stirred while applying.

Most Successful Method for Controlling Weeds

Now is the time to destroy the weeds. Do not wait until they have taken the field, but get out the harrow and kill them before they get the root started. Every weed that is permitted to get a start takes some of the essential food elements that might be used in producing healthy strong stalks of wheat or corn.

It is pretty well established that the man who delays his fight against weeds until about all of them get inch or more in height is decreasing the yield of his crop.

The more successful method of controlling the weed crop is to not delay until all the weed seed are germinated but get busy and fight them as soon as they break through the ground. A man who follows the practice of never ceasing his warfare against the weeds never has to buy corn for his hogs and horses.

Eggs From Pekin Ducks Used Most for Hatching

Ducks may be fed on the rations recommended for chickens, but better results are usually secured by feeding more green and vegetable feeds and a larger proportion of mash. Eggs from Pekin ducks are used largely for hatching, and the profit is secured in producing green ducklings; therefore these ducks are fed a maintenance ration after they stop laying in the summer until about December 1, when a laying ration is given and the amount of mash increased.

Runner ducks have been introduced as producers of commercial eggs, so they should be fed laying rations throughout the year if kept for egg production.

Dairy Barn Facilities

In order to carry on dairying successfully, one must be fully supplied with barn facilities. To be sure, there is a great deal of dairying done in cramped and unsatisfactory quarters, but it is questionable whether such a practice proves to be profitable in the long run. Success in dairying depends to just as great an extent upon having suitable stables as it does upon securing good cows and improving them. Sanitation also is an important item.

First Homestead in Country Now Marked

A Nebraska state historical monument has been erected and dedicated at the site of the original home on the Daniel Freeman estate, known as the first homestead entry filed under the homestead law in the United States, on land still in the possession of children of Freeman, 19 miles northwest of Wymore, or five miles west of Beatrice. The monument is formed from stone taken from the dismantled state capitol at Lincoln and hauled to the farmstead, and contains an appropriate bronze tablet.

Daniel Freeman was a young man at Brownville, oldest town in Nebraska, when the homestead law became effective January 1, 1863. Freeman secured entry No. 1, and on horseback he rode at night to locate on the section 95 miles to the west, where he lived until his death eight years ago, and where the widow still lives, and six children live in the vicinity.

Gold Mining in Spain

Although gold mining in Spain has a history going back to the Romans, its story so far is rather gilded than golden. Now, however, dredging alluvial soils on the River Orbigo, in the ancient province of Leon, begun seriously in July, 1925, is giving such promising results that a second bucket dredger is about to be installed by the company making the venture.

A Child's Laxative Which Mothers Can Rely On

To Dr. W. B. Caldwell, of Monticello, Ill., a practicing physician for 47 years, it seemed cruel that so many constipated infants and children had to be kept "stirred up" and half sick by taking cathartic pills, tablets, salts, calomel and nasty oils.

While he knew that constipation was the cause of nearly all children's little ills, he constantly advised mothers to give only a harmless laxative which would help to establish natural bowel "regularity."

In Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin mothers have a regulating laxative which they can depend upon whenever a child is constipated, bilious, feverish or sick from a cold, indigestion or sour stomach. All children love its pleasant taste.

Buy a large 60-cent bottle at any store that sells medicine and just see for yourself how perfectly it cleanses and regulates the bowels of infants and children.

REAR END COLLISION AT THE ERICK BRIDGE

Tuesday morning as the Hicksville egg truck was going south on the Spencerville road, at a pretty good speed, he came to the Erick bridge and not knowing that a hole had washed out during the heavy rain of the night, proceeded to stop almost instantly. A tourist was following close up, and when the truck stopped the tourist, plunged into the truck. With assistance of jacks the egg truck was raised so that the other cars could be lowered. The platform allowed the tourist to shove under some distance.

There was some rag chewing followed. No one in particular was to blame. The truck driver was compelled to stop suddenly in order to save himself, and had no time to signal stopping.

A hole about two foot wide and five foot long, has appeared on the north side of the bridge. The foundation has been washed out.

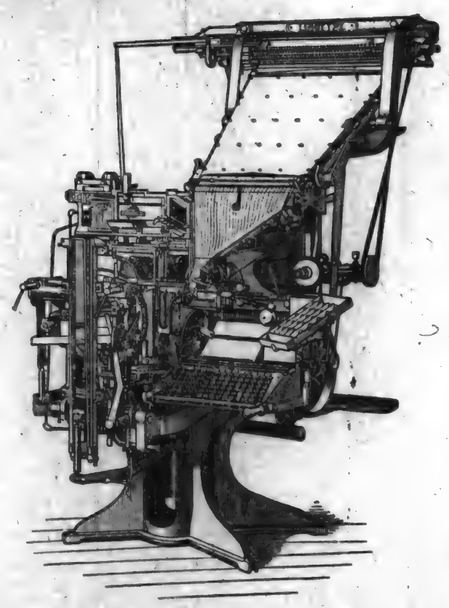
ECHO MEETING RECORDS 50 IN ATTENDANCE

Bad weather does not hinder many of the church people in DeKalb county from attending their meetings. Last Monday evening at the Auburn M. E. church, fifty persons from over the county were present at the Echo Meeting, held by the County Council of Religious Education. Fred Knott had charge of the music and the county officers who attended the Richmond meeting made short talks concerning their department.

Rev. Hubbart of Newville, gave a talk reviewing the convention program in general and Rev. J. E. Poer, Corunna, gave a number of suggestions as to how DeKalb county can enlarge her program of Religious Education, recommending a county religious survey by the pastors by townships, and also a united effort on the part of all church people to stand together on all the moral issues that threaten the church life, and for the adoption of a Bible course in the public schools.

Announcement was also made of a county picnic, to be held at Circle Park on Thursday, August 5, at which time all the schools of the county will unite for the day.



New Linotype Now In Operation

The News came to you last week with an entirely new face of type, due to the installation of a Model 5 linotype in our plant.

The publishing of The News became a burden to its editors, Mrs. Leighty having the setting of the news matter exclusively, and besides we were unable to get up the desired quantity of news matter and late news, we were not permitted to handle at all, because of the copy ahead.

We have made an investment of many hundred dollars in our plant, believing that St. Joe, her merchants and citizens, would appreciate this enormous expenditure, and in expression, give to us the patronage necessary to maintain the equipment we have just installed, and in return for this patronage, we will give you a better paper.

Many of our inhabitants are not familiar with the workings of this wonderful machine, therefore we ask that you call and see. While our business will not necessitate the machine being heated, ready to operate every day, we suggest that when you come to band concert on Wednesday evening, come in and we can demonstrate the workings of our improvement.

Besides the addition of this piece of machinery we have additional stone surface and also a stitching machine, much needed in our office.

But few newspaper offices have a composing machine with as modern equipment, thus eliminating time and trouble in the operation. The machine is heated and run entirely by electricity. Cold, hard metal is put in the melting pot and comes out cast in lines with the new face of type each time.

MAYOR LATTY STOPS CARNIVAL AT DEFIANCE

A carnival company playing in east Defiance last week, was closed up by the mayor, and son of the manager, 1-7, was arrested for operating gambling devices, and a new permit was refused. Mayor Latty is to be complimented upon his actions. It has come to pass, that in most places, gambling of all kinds are operating at Jule blast at Home-Comings, carnivals, street and county fairs, and action of this kind should be used on such venders. There is always people wanting to make a living without working and there is always enough who cannot afford to spend their money in such fashion, to keep such vendors going. If it is wrong to operate such devices with a young man, it is wrong for anyone to operate.

ASK THAT MAIL BOXES BE PAINTED WHITE

Harry S. New, postmaster general, has approved the general plan of the Post Office Department to have rural mail boxes painted white. Accordingly, instructions have been issued by the postmaster general to H. H. Billany, fourth assistant postmaster general, to prevail upon patrons of the postal rural routes to comply with the wishes of the department to have their equipment neatly painted.

Also every farmer ought to pride himself that he has a rural route, and to have his name printed on his box in one inch letters in black. In the U. S. there are 45,000 routes in operation and 714 of these have complied with this request already. The boxes are not ornamental in themselves, but if the patrons would adopt this rule of the government, they would present a better appearance. St. Joe routes ought to gladly follow the suggestion.

Hemline Flare Is Seeking Admirers

Mode Still Persists; Same Influence May Dominate Autumn Fashions.

It will come as something of a relief to learn that the Paris midseason collections have not furthered the reaction toward the slender silhouette. Indeed, even the hemline flare, once the leading insurrectionist against the simple and narrow outline, but more lately snubbed by an ungrateful mode, has returned to claim some of its early admirers. Despite the many predictions of a return to the straight silhouette, the spirit of the flare still persists, declares a fashion writer in the New York Herald-Tribune, and it is our belief that the same influence will dominate the modes of next autumn.

The flare, in its present connotation, does not exclusively mean the hemline distension which was its first and most popular manifestation. It now indicates any deviation from the strictly parallel outline which was the essence of the post-war silhouette.

The question of skirt length, about which so many conflicting ideas have been broadcast, remains in status quo. Despite rumors of greater length, afternoon dresses are as short as ever and sometimes a little shorter. Evening dresses are clearly longer but that is not of great significance. Indications at the moment are that late summer and early autumn will witness a slightly lowered hemline. It will be no more than a few inches at most, however, and it will not be the forerunner of the ankle-length skirt. For which you may be duly grateful.

Two-Piece Frocks.

Generally, the present midseason collections confirm the various tendencies that were launched earlier in the spring. Outstanding is the universal prevalence of the two-piece frock, though for day wear rather than evening dress, in which realm it has given way to the more feminine and elaborately worked gown that contrasts sharply with the sports-like tendency of the day-time mode.

Jean Patou shows jumper frocks even for the afternoon in town, and of such material and make that they are suitable for the bridge party or the tea dansant as well as the street. One particularly smart model is made of black satin, and has that touch of pink which is particularly fashionable just now. It appears in the cravette, the cuffs and in two narrow tows in the skirt above the hem. The whole skirt is finely plaited.

Another charming example of the jumper frock in the Patou collection is a dainty model that will be much worn at Deauville and Biarritz throughout the summer. It is made of beige crepe de chine, finely hand-tucked in horizontal lines with a small square yoke, the latter left untucked. A narrow gold leather belt gives the final touch of originality to this pretty frock, which has the skirt plaited with the same degree of fineness as the tucks on the jumper.

Contrast in Coat and Dress.

Also noteworthy among the general tendencies of the demi-season offerings is the contrast between coat and dress in the two-piece ensembles. A Louiseboulanger model illustrates a very happy interpretation of this idea. She shows a straight coat in mauve lainage made with the new deep yoke that also goes over the top of the sleeves in a shield movement. This coat is lined with dull rose crepe de chine which has a hint of mauve in it. The dress is also made of this rose crepe and has a new line in the interesting long stole front that hangs loose from a pointed yoke at the back, having crossed the shoulders.

The Clashing Ensemble.

Molyneux carries out the contrasting coat and dress in rep and foulard. He h[illegible] coat in navy blue that is lined with foulard printed in bright blue and black on a white ground. The same foulard is used for the dress, which has a border of blue, black and white stripes round the hem.

Another characteristic of the midseason is the further development of the uneven hemline. This is seen in points and petal edges on the more elaborate afternoon dresses, and sometimes in turrets on simpler gowns, as in one smart pale yellow model by Louiseboulanger that is cut out to make the box plaits in front appear a little longer than the rest of the skirt. The same cut is used in the plain black, thus giving wider serrated edges all along.

Midseason Evening Gowns.

In evening gowns the midseason showing of the haute couture evidences a continuation of the two schools that have opposed each other all spring at the smart Paris functions. On the one side there is the plain chiffon gown developed in various effective colors. The significant point of this type du soir is that it is entirely devoid of trimming except in the shape of some flower or motif of the same color as the dress. Molyneux varies this very slightly by using marquisette instead of chiffon, and the effect is as light and airy as if the fabric were chiffon. Pale turquoise blue and beige that is ranged from palest champagne to light nut brown are the most popular new colorings for these gowns, though there is still a great deal of currant red, geranium rose and a beautiful bright green with a hint of blue in it like the color of Kentucky grass. White is also used and there is a great deal of very simple black that is being worn by young girls.

The other school of evening gowns is what is known as the glittering type. It depends for its effect on the richness and sparkle of its embroidery or fringes which are carried out in the beads and sequins and sometimes diamante and crystal. The form of the latter species is straighter than that of the chiffon gown, for the fullness necessitated by a filmy material is replaced by flat flounces and slashed panels in a gown that is weighted by embroidery. Another contrast in their elaborate types is the often one-sided effect given by drapery in the plain chiffon gowns, whereas the embroidered dress is usually symmetrical in form.

For the Traveler.

The urban exodus is about to begin. Two things are uppermost in the mind of the prospective feminine traveler. What shall she wear for the trip itself and the incidental touring, and what types of dress will insure her certain smartness, even when sojourning in a strange country.

The first consideration for the traveler is that she arrive at her destination as fresh and trim, or almost so, as when she started out. Nothing is more disillusioning than to leave home in a fresh frock of some lightweight material and descend from the train or motor hours later in something that is so wrinkled and rumpled as to bear almost no resemblance to its former self. Therefore when traveling choose a costume of soft woolen mixture. These are admirable for retaining their lines and not showing dust and soil. As the present tendency is toward a great expression of color, the dull, drab checks are not so desirable as those of a gayer tone.

Mohair provides an alternative for the woman who finds the woolen too warm, particularly for train travel, and it has the further advantage of cleaning easily when necessary. If one chooses this material it is important to avoid those combined with artificial silk, as this is apt to crease and frill in an unbecoming manner when traveling. Skirts are usually plaited to insure freedom of movement and come in all sorts of widths and styles. Many of them, with a view to delivering the wearer at her stopping place with all her pristine glory intact, are confining their plaits to the sides and front, so that all possibility of the unlovely crushed look is avoided.

THE KITCHEN CABINET

(©, 1926, Western Newspaper Union.)

Wail not for precious chances passed away;
Weep not for golden ages on the wane;
Each night I burn the records of the day;
At sunrise every soul is born again.

SEASONABLE GOOD THINGS

The busy housewife with one pair of hands at command to do the daily tasks, must do without many frills in cookery, no matter how much she may enjoy them. However a few minutes spent in simple garnishing is well spent time.

Carrot Pudding.—Take one cupful of grated carrot, one cupful of grated potato, one egg, one-half cupful of sugar, one-half cupful of shortening, one-half cupful of raisins, one teaspoonful of soda and one cupful of flour. Steam one hour.

Sour Meat.—Take a nice piece of round steak, lay it in vinegar with one onion, a teaspoonful of whole allspice, salt and pepper mixed, one bayleaf, allow it to stand for three days. Brown the meat in a hot frying pan, pour over the vinegar and sufficient water in equal parts to cover the meat and simmer until tender. Strain the gravy, then thicken it and pour around the meat when serving.

Chocolate Cookies.—Cream one-half cupful of shortening with one cupful of sugar, add one beaten egg. Add one-half cupful of sour milk with one-half teaspoonful of soda, two squares of chocolate melted over hot water and one and one-half cupfuls of flour. Drop by spoonfuls on baking sheets and bake in a moderate oven. Top with icing prepared from powdered sugar, butter and a little vanilla and cream.

Drop Doughnuts.—Take one-half cupful of sugar, one-half cupful of milk, one and one-half cupfuls of flour with one teaspoonful of baking powder, a pinch of salt and ginger, a grating of lemon rind. Beat the egg white, add sugar gradually, then the beaten yolk, flavoring, salt, milk and flour. Drop by teaspoonfuls into hot fat and cook until brown. Roll in powdered sugar, then cool.

Unusual Sponge Cake.—Separate the whites and yolks of four eggs and beat the whites very stiff. Add one cupful of sugar a little at a time, then add the yolks, one at a time, cutting and folding them in, not to mix, but leave the white streaked with yellow. Fold in one cupful of flour sifted with one-quarter of a teaspoonful of cream of tartar and bake in a greased pan in a slow oven.

Stewed Lettuce.—Cook lettuce as greens in very little moisture, serve with melted butter, a dash of vinegar, pepper and salt. Onion juice may be added for seasoning if liked.

Pertinent Hints.

As seasoning is one of the fine arts and marks the ability of a cook, it is wise to study the various combinations of seasoning. The French cook has the seasoning sense developed to a high degree. Her foods are often of the most common and plainest kind, but the mixture of seasoning puts the dishes out of the ordinary class.

A package of bay leaves will last two or three generations, as this is a seasoning like garlic which should be used in very small quantities. The little bit, however, is needed to add that alluring flavor.

A bottle of mushroom sauce, kitchen bouquet, worcestershire and tabasco sauce, pepper sauce, curry, chili powder, celery salt, paprika, soy sauces of various kinds with the commoner seasonings and a dozen of the savory herbs should all be part of the well-equipped kitchen.

Scald a dish in which fish has been cooked with vinegar in the water, then wash with soda in the water.

Old rubbers will be shined up by rubbing them with ammonia.

A roomy market basket well padded makes a fine bed for a small baby when traveling. It is easy to carry and will also hold the baby's belongings. Being able to carry the baby without disturbing him or exposing him to the weather is a great advantage.

Grease the cork of the bottle of glue and it will be easy to remove when needed.

Between the rows of the vegetables which will soon be pulled like onions, radishes and such vegetables, sow flower seed which will delight you after the vegetables are gone.

A good way to clean gloves is to moisten flour and wash them on the hands, by rubbing and cleaning off the dark spots. Renew the flour and clean again.

Kitchen aprons of unbleached cotton are much more desirable, as they may be boiled and kept white.

A piece of ice held in the mouth for a minute before bad-tasting medicine is given will dull the sense of taste.

A little sand in a top-heavy vase will add greatly to the comfort of using it.

A fresh blood stain will be completely removed if covered at once with powdered starch.

When setting dishes on ice use a can rubber under them; this will keep them from slipping.

INDIANA BREVITIES

Hundreds of Woodmen of the World are expected to attend the logrolling at Frankfort July 25. Local camp, Gem City No. 24, will be in charge.

Prospects for a large potato crop in north-central Indiana are excellent despite a late summer and cold weather that persisted throughout the spring.

Representatives from the eleven townships in Fountain county gathered at a dinner meeting in Covington to discuss plans for the centennial celebration of the county next August.

Clifton L. Lingo, one of the best known traffic men in the West and for the last 25 years traffic manager for the Inland Steel company, died at his home in Gary. He had been ill of heart disease for several months.

Within less than one minute after swallowing two heaping teaspoonfuls of what she thought to be prepared medicine, but which in reality was a deadly poison used in cleaning metal, Mrs. George Ammon Smith, forty-nine, died at her Mishawaka home.

A belief that there is safety in numbers has led to a move to consolidate the two banks of Pennville as a protection against repeated holdups. The merger was proposed following the latest attempt to rob the Pennville State bank.

The construction of a statehouse annex, a new four or five-story office building, costing about $500,000, on the site of old Indiana university medical college at the northwest corner of Senate avenue and Market street, Indianapolis, has been decided upon, it was announced by Gov. Ed Jackson.

The resignation of Demarchus C. Brown, director of the state library, effective September 1, was announced by the state library and historical board. The resignation submitted by Mr. Brown says that his continued ill health has been such that he can no longer perform his duties.

South Bend school children do not have to remain idle through the summer vacation. Instead, they may, if they desire, take up the study of the Bible, classes having been organized and conducted by the St. Joseph county council of religion in the public school buildings. The roster includes 785 names.

Refusing to give up his pretty neighbor, Irene Anderson, and return to his wife and two little children, Lew Goldman, thirty-two years old, building contractor of Gary, decided to poison his sweetheart and then take his own life. As a result Goldman is dead at his home and Mrs. Anderson is in a serious condition.

Thirty-two Henry county farmers have entered the men's five-acre contest sponsored annually by the Indiana Corn Growers' association. This is twice as many as have been enrolled in any former year. Alvin Hardin, Knightstown farmer, held the high average in this county last year with an average of 128.6 bushels to the acre. He is in the contest again. Henry county won 12 gold medals last year.

A grand patriotic and religious meeting for all of northern Indiana will be held Sunday, July 25, at the Lake county fair grounds at Crown Point, when speakers of national and local prominence will make addresses and the hosts will gather for a great civic and spiritual demonstration entirely divorced from political or sectarian bias. James J. Davis, secretary of labor, will be the principal speaker of the day, and United States senators, congressmen and Gov. Edward Jackson of Indiana are among those who have promised to attend and make talks.

The $2,500,000 state debt that existed last September 30 has been completely paid off. Indiana motorists, rather than any administration economies, are credited with the balancing. Facing the heavy debt incurred in the administrations of Gov. James P. Goodrich and Gov. Warren T. McCray, the Jackson administration promulgated legislation which diverted all direct levies and inheritance taxes formerly spent on roads to eliminating the debt and created special gasoline and license taxes which are taking care of highway needs with federal aid.

Inmates of Indiana's penal institutions make more than thirty kinds of articles, ranging from flags to men's clothing, shoes and furniture, for sale on the public market, according to Henry A. Roberts, state sales agent. Mr. Roberts, who was appointed to the newly-created office recently, has an office in the statehouse, where he keeps samples of the goods made by the men of the Indiana state prison, the reformatory and the state farm. Every able-bodied, physically fit and mentally competent inmate of all penal institutions is placed in the various trade schools behind the walls, and taught some useful occupation.

Mayor William C. Geake of Fort Wayne has signed an ordinance, passed by the city council, which provides a $25-a-day license fee for phrenologists, stargazers, crystal gazers and similar practitioners.

An insect new to his section and which preys on growing corn has been discovered by Perry Cripe, a farmer residing near Goshen. The pest, not more than one-fourth inch in length, resembles the cucumber bug. Much of a six-acre plot of corn on the Cripe farm has been destroyed by the insect.

HOW TO KEEP WELL

DR. FREDERICK R. GREEN
Editor of "HEALTH"

(©, 1926, Western Newspaper Union.)

DOES YOUR CHILD HAVE TANTRUMS?

THE present tendency is to prevent illness rather than to wait until it has developed and then try and cure it. This is true, not only with those contagious diseases due to such conditions as bad water, bad milk, insect plagues and contact with other diseased persons, but also with those diseases due to bad personal habits on the part of individuals. This policy of prevention has now gone a step farther, to take in mental conditions. We know that many unfortunate mental conditions have their origin in early life even in childhood, and that an individual's entire life may be seriously affected or even ruined by bad training or surroundings in childhood.

So the National Committee for Mental Hygiene, an organization which is seeking to correct some of our bad mental habits and prevent the development of mental diseases, is naturally and rightly beginning with the child and its early training.

In a recently issued pamphlet for mothers, the committee asks each mother some questions about her child's mental habits and how she controls them. Some of the questions asked are so pertinent that each mother can read them and answer for herself.

Does your child have tantrums? Does he gain something by having them? Does he get his own way when he has them? If he kicks and screams or holds his breath, do you fear he will injure himself, and so let him have his own way if he will only stop? If you do, remember that if he gets his way after the first tantrum, the second will be easier than the first, and the third still easier and he will soon learn that when he wants anything, he can get it by having a tantrum.

Does your child like to be the center of interest? Does he have a tantrum so as to attract attention? Every child loves attention and will do whatever is necessary in order to get it.

When he has a tantrum, do you offer to give him candy or cookies or whatever he wants if he will only stop?

If you do, he will very soon learn that the sure way to get what he wants is to scare you with a tantrum until you give it to him.

Do you try to scare him into being good by telling him that if he doesn't stop the black man or the policeman will get him? He soon learns that these "boogies" are false, and then he has no confidence in you.

In short, are you sure that his tantrums are not due to your own foolishness?

PREVENTING HEART DISEASE

TWENTY-FIVE years ago tuberculosis in its various forms was the chief cause of death. Since 1900, by constant warfare against the causes of the disease, combined with a nation-wide campaign of education of the public, the death rate from tuberculosis has been cut down one-half and in some places more than one-half. The death rate from diphtheria, typhoid, measles, and other infectious diseases have been reduced in varying degrees. In 1887 the diphtheria death rate was 180 per 100,000. Today it is about 10, a reduction to one-thirteenth of its previous rate; measles has been cut down two-thirds; whooping cough has been reduced to one-fifth of its former rate.

Practically all diseases which have been found to have a definite cause have been largely reduced by first finding the cause and then so far as possible preventing it. But heart disease, on the contrary, has been steadily increasing, until it now ranks first as the cause of death.

Part of the increase, of course, is due to the fact that the other diseases have fallen off so rapidly as to leave heart disease more conspicuous. But in addition to this apparent increase, carefully analyzed figures show that there is an actual increase and that more deaths from this cause are occurring each year.

Except in cases of babies born with imperfect and incomplete hearts, heart disease is practically always caused by some other disease. It practically never originates by itself. The heart may be crippled by the poisons of scarlet fever, measles, rheumatism, diphtheria or influenza which circulate in the blood and irritate the lining membranes of the heart. If these poisons are strong enough or if the individual resistance is low enough, the poison in the blood may cause ulceration in the heart valves. These ulcers, as they heal, produce scar tissue which, shrinking, pulls the valves out of shape. Or the poison may attack the heart muscle, causing it to weaken.

Poison from abscess in the tonsils or at the roots of teeth, constitutional poisons such as rheumatism and syphilis may affect the heart.

With such a large number of causes, the prevention of heart disease means the prevention of all poisons or infections of the body, as practically every infection sooner or later affects and weakens the heart.

Lesson for July 18

THE CALL OF MOSES

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 3:1; 4:13.

GOLDEN TEXT—Certainly I will be with thee.—Ex. 3:12.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Moses at the Burning Bush.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Moses, the Shepherd.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Facing a Great Opportunity.

I. The Lord Speaks to Moses From the Burning Bush (3:1-6).

It was while keeping the flock of his father-in-law in the desert that the Lord appeared to Moses in the vision of the burning bush. Moses stepped aside to behold this strange sight and was taught the essential lesson of the proper approach to God. The Lord did not leave him long in suspense. He told him that He was the God of his fathers, the covenant God. As soon as he knew that it was God that was speaking to him, he hid his face.

II. Moses' Commission as the Deliverer of His People (3:7-10).

Observe:

1. God's active interest in His people (v. 7).

In a preamble of this commission God declared:

(1) "I have seen the affliction of my people." So keenly conscious is God of all that goes on in the world that not one of His chosen ones can be touched without His notice.

(2) "I have heard their cries." We sometimes feel that God does not hear, but no cry ever goes up from the heart of his covenant child unheard.

(3) "I know their sorrows."

Many indeed are the sorrows of God's children. They are so diverse, but He knows all about them and will adapt himself in grace to their need.

2. God's gracious obligation to His people (vv. 8, 9)).

(1) To deliver them out of the hand of the Egyptians.

(2) "To bring them up out of the land."

(3) "To bring them into a good land and large—unto a land flowing with milk and honey."

3. God's commission to Moses (v. 10).

"Come now, therefore, and I will send thee unto Pharaoh that thou mayest bring forth my people, the children of Israel out of Egypt."

III. Moses' Objections Patiently Heard and Removed (3:11-4:10).

1. His personal unworthiness v. 11).

He said, "Who am I that I should go unto Pharaoh?" He realized his insufficiency for this task. Moses did not refuse to go, but laid his difficulty before the Lord. God answered this difficulty by assuring him that He would be with him.

2. The difficulty of the people to understand Moses' relationship to God (vv. 13, 14).

Moses knew how unwilling they were to acknowledge him as their deliverer forty years before. Since God changes his name as he assumes a new relationship to his people, Moses inquired as to what that new relationship would be and his corresponding name. The Lord promptly met this difficulty by showing a name differing in many respects from all others previously given. This new name is "I am." This name is from the Hebrew "to be." It indicates:

1. God's self-existence.

It sets forth the idea that God is the self-existant one and the source of all existence. There is no existence apart from Him.

(2) His self-sufficiency.

He said, "I am that I am." God is the unique one. He is not dependent upon any other existence.

(3) His unchangeableness.

"I am that I am" may be expanded to mean, I am what I always was. What I always was and am I always will be. The "I AM" of this passage is the Jesus Christ of the New Testament. Therefore the apostle could say, "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, today and forever."

3. Unbelief on the part of the people (4:1).

This difficulty the Lord met by supplying him with credentials which could not be gainsaid. He was given the power to perform supernatural wonders (4:2).

4. Lack of eloquence (4:10).

He confessed that he was slow of speech and of a slow tongue. His ability to speak had not been improved by the Lord's message to him. The Lord's reply (v. 11) carried a real rebuke. He assured him that the God who had made man's mouth could give man the ability to use it. This difficulty the Lord in His infinite patience met by providing an assistant in the person of his brother Aaron.

The Truth

Next to the Crucifixion of the Lord Jesus Christ there is no truth that you and I need more to lay hold of than the truth of the living Christ—alive today, and personally present with all who trust in Him.—C. A. R. Janvier.

Need of Prayer

Deeper than the need of men, deeper than the need of money, aye, deep down within this spiritless life of ours is the need of world-wide prevailing prayer.—Robert E. Speer.

OVERLOADED TRUCK CAUSE OF TIRE WEAR

Truck is Useful Implement on Most Farms

Overloading of trucks is the big cause of excessive tire wear. Perhaps no part of the truck is subjected to greater strain on overloads than the tires.

Where pneumatics are used this practice does as much damage to truck tires as a complete disregard of the rules of inflation. With regard to the latter subject, the tire manufacturer's instructions on inflation of truck tires should be observed consistently. Overinflation is, in most cases, as dangerous as underinflation.

Even braking is necessary to obtain maximum wear and tear. Assuming even pull, the proper place to make first adjustment is at the brake band or shoe, not at any other part of the mechanism. Regular inspection of brakes is necessary and an even contact of the band at all points is requisite in good adjustment. Uneven contact of brake bands is the cause of "chattering" when brakes are applied. Operators can obtain full details concerning brake adjustments from the vehicle manufacturer's book of instructions.

A severe shock, such as results in striking a curb, may spring the knuckle rod, thus throwing the front wheels out of proper adjustment. This results in hard steering and excessive wearing of tires, either solid or pneumatics. In a case which recently came to my attention an operator completely ruined a pair of pneumatic tires on a 50-mile drive after a slight accident.

The front wheels should not be lined up exactly parallel. Tie rod adjustments should produce a "toe-in" of one-fourth to one-half of an inch in the front wheels (see manufacturer's instructions for exact dimensions and method of making adjustment).

Lubrication of all steering gear connections, including steering knuckles, at regular intervals, is necessary. The majority of "hard steering" complaints are due to a lack of lubrication.

Great Personages of the Bible

By REV. LEONARD A. BARRETT

Job

JOB was one of the wealthiest men of his time. He possessed 7,000 sheep, 3,000 camels, 500 yoke of oxen, and 500 she asses. He was the greatest of all the men of the East. He was also greatly blessed in his home life, having seven sons and three daughters. He has been described as a righteous, rich, and happy man.

The story of Job's career reveals many of the ideas believed by the people of his time. Among them was the belief that prosperity was indicative of Divine approval and the reward for righteousness.

The biography of Job begins with the visit of Satan to the heavenly council, where Satan is asked by the Lord, "Whence comest thou?" Satan replies, "From going to and fro in the earth." The Lord inquires of Satan if he had ever set his heart on Job and whether he had ever tempted him, to which Satan answered that if Job's property were taken from him he would curse God. The result of the debate in the heavenly council was that Satan gained permission from the Lord to test the integrity and faithfulness of Job in any way he liked, only he was not to put his hand upon him. A series of misfortunes are now visited upon Job. The Sabeans and the Chaldeans fell upon his cattle and took them away, and all his servants were slain. His sons were also slain. "Then Job arose and rent his mantle and shaved his head and fell down upon the ground and worshiped, saying, 'The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord.'" Having failed in his venture, Satan seeks another interview of the second heavenly council and secures the privilege of attacking Job's life. "Permit me, O Lord, to put forth my hand and touch his bone and his flesh and then he will curse Thee to Thy face," to which the Lord replied, "Behold he is in thy hand but save his life."

Sore boils now come upon Job. He scraped himself with a potsherd and sat down among the ashes, which in the ancient days was a symbol of suffering. When his sufferings were most intense three friends came to visit him with the purpose of expressing their sympathy. Their names were Eliphas, Bildad, and Zophar. These friends sat with him upon the ground seven days and seven nights. The friends did not speak a word during all that time, for they saw that his suffering was very great. Job shared the belief of his time, that prosperity was a reward for righteousness. Now that all his possessions were taken from him, many persons thought that Job must have committed a great sin. Only such an act could explain so great a calamity. The friends urge Job to confess the sin he committed and then God could forgive and bless him again. The dilemma which confronted Job was the difficulty of confessing a sin he had not committed. He finally replies to his friends, "When it comes to an interpretation of God I am not inferior to you. Who knows not in all these things that the hand of Jehovah hath wrought this? Hold your peace and let me alone. Though He slay me, yet will I trust in Him." Thus Job triumphed over his friends. Satan returned baffled and Job arrived at a peace of soul born of vision and faith.

A terrific thunderstorm takes place and a voice is heard out of the whirlwind, which to Job is indicative of a divine intervention. Job is full of anticipation for the hour of his vindication had come. In the far distance a voice out of the storm is heard saying to Job, "I will demand of thee and declare thou unto Me." In other words, what finally have you to say, Job? This question Job answers in a sublime confession of faith. "I had heard of Thee by the hearing of the ear, but now mine eye seeth Thee." After this humble confession, there was returned to Job twice as much as he had before, and he lived 140 years and saw his children and grandchildren even to four generations.

All is well though faith and form
Be sundered in the night of fear,
Well fares the storm to those who hear
A deeper voice across the storm.

Regret is dead, but love is more
Than in the summers that are blown,
For I myself with these have grown
To something stronger than before.

"And I saw that there was an ocean of darkness and death, but an infinite ocean of light and love flowed over the ocean of darkness, and in thought I saw the infinite love of God."

Condensed Plan Gives Efficiency of Large Home in Small Space

By WILLIAM A. RADFORD

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give ADVICE FREE OF COST on all problems pertaining to the subject of building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as editor, author and manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on the subject. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 1827 Prairie avenue, Chicago, Ill., and only inclose two-cent stamp for reply.

The builders of small detached homes have been taking their cue from the most modern of kitchenette apartment architecture and are condensing into the smallest possible space the greatest amount of housing efficiency. This includes such innovations as the double use of rooms by the expediency of disappearing beds and dressing closets, dining nooks and the elimination of porches and reception halls. The tendency is all in accord with the times, and because of the many advantages of the new compact homes, there is little likelihood of any swing back to the old-fashioned big house of the past generation.

Of course this process of condensation appears in varying degrees in different houses, but almost every home now displays the effects of the new tendency. Most of the changes can be seen in the house plan shown here. There is a separate dining room, but the space might easily be used for some other purpose. It could well be made a part of the living room for, in the condensation of other rooms, the living room has been given more prominence and grown larger. This is in no way opposed to the general tendency for, as here, it frequently serves as a sleeping room at night.

Though the reception hall has disappeared there is a semienclosed vestibule with this plan which is a very worthwhile feature. It will be most appreciated in the cold winter months or on rainy days. With the dining room thrown into the living room the breakfast room would ordinarily answer for the serving of meals. On the special occasions when a number of guests were to be entertained, the end of the living room could be used for setting a larger table.

Some people will object to the placing of the electric refrigerator inside the breakfast nook. It would undoubtedly be an improvement to move this back, around the partition, into the kitchen, even though the electric refrigerator of today is a really attractive piece of furniture. Though the kitchen is quite small, careful planning has made it even more convenient for the preparation of meals than a larger room would be. It is conveniently reached either through the dining room and breakfast nook or through the hallway.

The bedroom is of a very practical size, and its large closet will be widely appreciated. With the big dressing closet, which hides the disappearing bed during the day, it affords ample space for the clothing of the whole family. Right by the bedroom door is the door to the bathroom. This bathroom is installed in an exceedingly small space by the expediency of using a seat tub, and it permits the provision of a clothes chute to the basement laundry.

From the outside this little home presents a most attractive appearance. Its lines are simple but very good, and the attractive arched entrance and the brick outside chimney add life to the front elevation. The plain frame garage is set well back on the lot where it is not conspicuous and because of its simple frame construction, does not clash with the house. Flowers planted about the foundation aid in breaking the grade line where the siding is carried down to the ground, and the trellis against the chimney adds a most charming touch.

The Sleeping Beauty

By MARTHA McC. WILLIAMS

"IF YE had yer ruthers—now whut would it be?" Squire Anders asked, sitting forward toward Cynthia like an iron-filing drawn by a magnet. "Remember, I'm askin' ye with a meanin'," he went on, hitching a trifle nearer—so near that Cynthia got up hurriedly and said, looking over his head: "I wish you'd stay away—for good and always."

He headed her off, caught her arm and said masterfully: "Oh, no! You jest think so. Why, I'm all that stands 'twixt you and real hard work—and you ain't built fer that—couldn't stand it six months."

"I can try it—and I will," Cynthia said steadily. "Understand—I don't mean to be rude. I know how foolish it is to throw away the chance to be rich and lazy all the rest of my life. But I know better the price is—beyond me. I couldn't be your wife—not for all the money minted—I wouldn't—not to save my life—nor yours. Now—will you let me alone?"

"No, sir-ee, Bob! That I won't!" Anders hissed. "I'll have ye, whether er no."

"We differ," Cynthia said icily. Then over her shoulder, wrenching free her arm: "I am leaving at ten o'clock—the rent is paid til midnight. Better send in a caretaker then."

"Goin'? How? Where? You—you shan't—" Anders began to sputter. She did not so much as look at him, but shot through the door and ran down the hall to the rear. Momently he was murder-mad. A huge fellow, coarsely vital, all the uncommitted sins of his forty years rioted through his rage, turning it partly against himself. Married ere he was fully bearded, he had lived a pattern life, as citizen, neighbor, farmer, ruling elder, just in everything, a husband beyond praise; this madness was a knife in the heart of his pride.

His wife had died suddenly—by help of a new car. He had been utterly faithful to her all these years—yet her passing brought him no grief—rather a sudden wild joy of enlargement. If she had given him children—instead, he was all alone.

All alone now that the spinster-cousin, who had been Anders' tenant, had died, Cynthia was in hard case. Cousin Jane had had a sufficient annuity. As she was but forty-five, her going was a shock.

Thanks to Cousin Jane, she was fairly educated. The education, plus her clothes and fifty dollars, summed her resources. Idle now to hope for work there in Clay county—Anders would block anything she might attempt.

From ambush of brier tangle she saw Anders after an hour stride off toward his big house, a mile away, but in clear view of the cottage. His field glass, she well knew, would keep her under surveillance, once he was home. She darted within, huddled together scant essential belongings, made a light pack of them, and ran down the path to the highway upon the farther side. But she did not follow the road—instead, struck recklessly across fields and along lanes. She thought she knew the direction of the convent.

The sisters would surely not grudge her the fruit she craved and so sorely needed. Presently she was under the bending trees, looking at them and choosing delicately of their ripest for all her hunger. Ten minutes later in sun-flecked shade she lay sound asleep. Thus it happened that between sundown and dew-fall two people came upon her—a woman with the face of an angel, and a matching soul. A cripple, she leaned heavily upon a man's arm—a young man. He cried hushedly at the sight of Cynthia: "Oh, see! The sleeping beauty! What a shame I'm not the fairy prince come to wake her."

"Careful, Pen—she may not be sleeping," the lady cautioned; "but I hope she is. Did you ever before see so perfect a picture of weary grace?"

"Never." was the answer—the young fellow running on: "Oh, for light enough for a snap-shot—or a spell to hold her while we might make sketches."

"No, fair little brother. You're joking, I know—couldn't aim so against hospitality—even if it is involuntary."

"Of course not! But—I wonder why she is here."

"We will know soon," the lady said. "Help me down beside her, then get out of sight—we must not frighten her."

Getting down was not easy—she was very lame. Somehow her motion awoke Cynthia, who made to spring up, but was stayed by a gentle hand, a gentler voice, saying: "Don't be frightened. You are with friends, if it does happen you never saw us before."

"I—need—them," Cynthia choked, then fell to sobbing hard, dry sobs, more pitiful than tears.

* * * * * * *

A year later the art world had lost its heart, and almost its mind, over "The Sleeping Beauty," prize picture of the spring exhibition. Probably the painter's romance, hinted rather than exploited, helped a bit. His name was Pennington Barris; his habitat, the Tennessee bluegrass. He lived there after the old fashion upon ancestral acres in company with his sister, Madame Everleigh, almost as fine a painter as he. But the central figure was Cynthia, his wife, whom even the eclipsed found infinitely charming. No model, of course—if the picture did somehow suggest her. All her husband would admit was that she inspired it.

RED TO YELLOW CHANGE FOUGHT

Switch of Tail Light Is Opposed by Majority of A. A. A. Clubs.

Since the adjournment of the second national conference on street and highway safety, the American Automobile association has conducted a canvass of sentiment among its affiliated clubs as to the proposal made at the conference to change the tail lights of automobiles from red to yellow.

It develops, according to A. A. A. headquarters, that the motor clubs already heard from regarding this proposed innovation are against it, and take the position that such a change, applying to 20,000,000 motor vehicles would cause untold confusion on the highways and would inevitably tend to increase the toll of traffic accidents.

Rank and File Oppose.

This was practically the one proposition on which the A. A. A. took issue with the recommendations made by the committees of the Hoover conference and it was at the insistence of club executives that a decision on the tail light was postponed. All developments since the conference indicate, it is stated, that the rank and file of the motoring public stand by the resolution adopted at the time by the A. A. A. as follows:

"That the secretaries of clubs affiliated with the American Automobile association in convention assembled hereby condemn the proposed change as being detrimental to public safety and to the best interest of 20,000,000 motor vehicle owners."

Railways Want It.

Although no mention was made in the resolution of the forces urging the change, it was well known that the railroads and the motor clubs were on different sides of the fence on this important matter. Notice has been served by the A. A. A. that proper provision must be made for representation of the motorists before any committee that takes up this question for further study, as provided by the safety conference.

Little Gasoline Needed to Run Baby Automobile

A baby automobile, no longer than a man is high, pulled into Washington recently and sailed up to the capitol, the end of a transcontinental tour from San Francisco, says Popular Science Monthly. Its driver, Gus Petsal of Alameda, Calif., was also the designer of the sturdy little machine that scooted over mountains and deserts that bother cars five times its size.

It has a four-cylinder air-cooled motor, nine speeds, electric lights and starter, and is equipped with airplane tires. The wheel base measures 60 inches, and the car weighs only 560 pounds. It can make a speed of 80 miles an hour on the track, it is claimed, and 65 on the road. After reaching Washington the designer demonstrated that his unique little car could travel 52 miles on a gallon of gasoline.

New Air Pump for Tires

A relief from back and arm strain in the operation of the usual foot pump shown in the illustration for compressing automobile tires, over the regulation hand-operated affair.

Projections on Fenders Likely to Injure Tires

Be careful that a sharp turn of the front wheels does not bring the tire in contact with a spring fender or bumper. As the wheel turns this projection will quickly cut through the tread of the tire. When the car is heavily loaded there is danger that in passing over rough roads the tires will be bumped or gouged by projections on the fenders. Bent or broken fenders may also be in a position where they will gouge the tires. Inspect beneath the fender and make sure that there are no projections which could strike upon the tire. You may find belts rubbed smooth and bright by continuous rubbing on the tires. If a change is made to oversize tires, be sure that there will be sufficient clearance between tire and fender when the car is loaded to capacity. This is, however, provided by most car manufacturers.

Important to Keep Your Automobile at Its Best

See that your oil-pressure gauge operates at all times. If no pressure is indicated, stop and have your trouble remedied at once.

Keep sufficient good cylinder oil in pan at all times.

See that the radiator is kept filled with water.

See that front wheels toe-in five-sixteenths of an inch at front. Wheels should be checked occasionally for alignment to avoid tire wear.

Keep your battery filled with distilled water.

See that your generator charges sufficient amperage at all times to avoid battery damage.

If motor does not start promptly when starter is pressed, get out and discover the cause.

See that springs are greased occasionally.

Before starting set spark lever about one-fourth up sector.

Relief for Rickshaw Men

Efforts to preserve the picturesque rickshaw from extinction, due to the increased popularity of automobiles in Japan, prompted the Tokyo prefectural government to announce that hereafter rickshaw men would be exempted from paying taxes on their conveyances. There are 7,836 rickshaws in Tokyo and 3,222 in the suburbs. Owners of these vehicles in the city have been required to pay a tax of 50 sen for each rickshaw.

Japan Makes Cheap Fuel

A fuel manufactured in Japan made from charcoal dust, chaff and chopped straw, is claimed to reduce greatly costs of heating and power. After the mixture is made into a paste by grinding and mixing with moisture it is rolled out, cut, then formed into blocks or balls of various sizes. It is said that the resulting fuel can be sold profitably at $2 a ton.

Use of Good Hardware Is Safe Investment

In the matter of cost, hardware and locks play a rather minor part, forming only from 2 to 3 per cent of the total expenditure. In the matter of service it is of prime importance, for it is the mechanism which actuates every door, every window or drawer, and is in constant use by every member of the household.

There is a wide difference, not only in the quality and the finish, but in the shape and function, to suit each piece to the location where it is to be used. To have the hardware right, the owner of the building should consult the builders' hardware man of some good hardware store specializing in this class of work and inspect samples of the articles submitted for approval. In this way only can it be certain that the proper equipment is secured.

It is also highly important that the order for the hardware be placed early—as soon as possible after the work on the building has been begun. There is an unusual demand for hardware for homes, caused by the present large amount of building, and the dealer should be given ample time to assemble and deliver the hardware required.

Simplicity Is Keynote of the Small House

A great many people have the mistaken idea that the very small house or cottage cannot be made so attractive nor so architecturally correct as a large house, but this is wrong.

Probably the reason for the growth of this idea is the fact that too often the wrong methods are used in the attempt to make the small house attractive. That is, it is ornamented with many fancy trimmings which have just the opposite effect from that which is desired.

Simplicity is a good rule in all house design, but it is absolutely essential in the design of the small house. Lines and materials are the means which should be used to make the small house attractive.

Beauty of Small Home Enhanced by Pergola

The top work of the single pergola can be made as wide as six or seven feet, with benches between the posts.

This will give the same seating possibilities as double pergolas. Also little garden entrances are generally considered as being necessarily double, but instead these can be very small, artistic arrangements of the two posts with a light top over them.

Habit is the most fixed thing in life, and we are much inclined to follow some of the methods of the past in landscape gardening, some of which are absurd in meeting the present-day conditions.

By the use of skill now, instead of lumber and paint, just as effective and attractive garden embellishments can be had without any greater cost than years ago. The present age demands more skill and less habit.

Use of Stone

The proper use of stone requires careful consideration and study. In selecting stone for the walls of a building, three important conditions must be considered; the nature of the stone, its texture and color.

Choked Pipes

Corroded iron and steel pipes are choked by internal deposits. The amount of water going through them eventually will be reduced to a trickle. Better material, such as copper, should be used.

Waterproofing

If the owner is careful of nothing else, he should see that the waterproofing of his house foundation is properly done, since repairs will be costly.

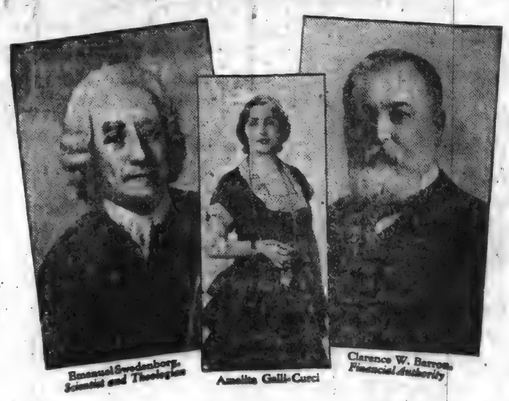
Galli-Curci Swayed by the Seer of Sweden



Prima Donna Gives Wonderful Interpretation of the Writings of Emanuel Swedenborg—

HENRY FORD'S Dearborn Independent publishes a remarkable article on Galli-Curci and Emanuel Swedenborg, by Clarence W. Barron of the Wall Street Journal, the world famous financial authority.

Mr. Barron declares that Galli-Curci has the most wonderful brain he has ever met or heard of in a woman, although she is much more "a true woman with a life and soul of affection for all that is ennobling and uplifting in the family, and in color, form, and music."

Mr. Barron is chairman of the Rotch Trustees, who acting under the will of Lydia S. Rotch of New Bedford, Mass., began in 1872 a modern translation of the Theological Works which Emanuel Swedenborg wrote and published in the Latin tongue, and deposited in the libraries of the world 150 years ago.

This work was completed and published by the Houghton Mifflin Co. in 32 volumes in 1907.

About three years ago there appeared in a Cleveland paper a paragraph that among her other accomplishments Galli-Curci had read all the Theological Writings of Emanuel Swedenborg. The claim seemed so absurd to Mr. Barron that he thought it might be easily punctured by a simple inquiry as to the edition.

The Bible a Greater Work Than Ever

To Mr. Barron's direct inquiry Madame Galli-Curci promptly replied: "Yes, I have read in the past year the complete Swedenborg Works, in fact it is the Rotch Edition of the Houghton Mifflin Co. that I have.

"I can say certainly that the Bible to me is a greater work than it was before."

Mr. Barron says: "My astonishment was intensified. Familiar over many years with Swedenborg's general theological writings, I had set out to read the entire thirty-two volumes preparatory to an advertising campaign for the sale of this edition. Reading a few pages each day I finished my self-imposed task in fourteen years. I shall probably finish a second reading, at my present rate of progress, in perhaps ten years. Was it possible that a woman with no previous knowledge or relation to these books had really intelligently read them within a year?"

Swedenborg's Writings

Mr. Barron continues: "As an economist writing state papers on weights, measures, coinages and currencies, Swedenborg is easily comprehended. As an engineer transporting ships overland he is easily visualized. As a government official in the great mining industry of Sweden, writing practical books on mining and smelting, declared to be the foundation of modern metallurgy, he is of interest in the encyclopedia of scientific history. As the writer of volumes—original studies in search for the human soul—he is not without human interest.

"But when one comes to the realm of the unseen, where there is neither time nor space upon which to rest mental conceptions, few may enter into the fullness of the revelation which has come into the libraries of the world through Emanuel Swedenborg.

"Think of twenty modern-sized volumes, originally written in the Latin tongue and unfolding from the Hebrew of 'Genesis' and 'Exodus' the internal or spiritual sense that lies beneath the letter. Annex a dozen more similar volumes that not only expound every picture set forth in the book of 'Revelation' as conveyor of a tremendous truth of universal application throughout invisible degrees of creation and life, but also illumine all the problems of sex as presented throughout the universe from the union of the love and wisdom in the divine down to sex crystallization in the mineral kingdom; include the deepest of all works ever written entitled, in the original Latin, 'Angelic Wisdom Concerning the Divine Love and the Divine Wisdom.' Then answer to yourself the number of years that ought to be required to master these thirty-two volumes."

Mean More Than Any Other Books

Mr. Barron, still credulous, continued his correspondence with Madame Galli-Curci for some months. He learned that soon after she lost her dear mother she had sought the Writings of Swedenborg in a desire to know more about the other world whence her mother had gone. She spent the entire summer vacation studying Swedenborg's Works, and declared: "They have meant, and mean more to me than anything else I have ever read."

When Galli-Curci returned from California Mr. Barron motored up into the Catskills to her beautiful Italian palace, and in an afternoon with her and her husband, Mr. Homer Samuels, he was convinced that Galli-Curci had read and devoured Swedenborg in a briefer period than anybody had ever done before.

He says of this interview:

"Hours flew like minutes. I wasn't the questioner. Mr. and Mrs. Samuels were at me with the sharpest and deepest questions. They seemed in perfect harmony mentally and spiritually, as in their work in music.

Wanted to Learn

"She wanted to know about the 'Grand Man'. I told her it would be easier to comprehend it if she would forego the idea of time and space and consider, as Swedenborg says in 'The Apocalypse Explained', that every society in the heavens connects with some organ of the human body and helps to sustain it. Therefore the heavens have the organization of the 'Grand Man', but we need not think of it as a shape or figure.

"'Yes,' exclaimed her husband, 'I see it; it is organization,' I explained, also, how the 'Psalms' likewise connected with every society of the heavens, and how the world within and without was knit together in one grand poem and song of creation, man in the image of his Maker and knit into Him through the heavens, from which he has life in every organ of his body.

Swedenborg's 32 Volumes Read in a Single Summer

"'Now I understand,' she said, and asked me for explanation of other things. Her intelligent questions, as well as her statements, left no manner of doubt that Galli-Curci had performed the stupendous feat of reading the thirty-two volumes of Swedenborg in a single summer season. She declared 'Heaven and Hell' a very attractive and popular title and concerns that about which people are most eager to know; but it is not one of Swedenborg's great works; although it makes a good popular and introductory work."

A Help in Her Work

Galli-Curci understands the writings of Swedenborg even better than theologians, because she puts them into practice in the broadest life of loving helpfulness.

She said that Swedenborg had helped her in her work. She had no longer to think of herself but of her audiences, and let the music flow through her: regard herself just a medium for life to pour through. She felt with and for her audiences, and singing was no effort for her.

All Fear Vanishes

"The more you do—the more you give forth—the more life and energy is poured into you, and you are stronger and not weaker for the doing, the working and the singing. I always feel stronger; I am not exhausted at all by my singing. Swedenborg shows the reason and how life comes in as you pour it forth usefully to others. You don't have to try or worry or fret. You know it is not you but that it is just being done through you."

Speaking further of the help Swedenborg had been to her in her work she said: "One gets so much more confidence. The other world and the one life, that comprehends all life, becomes reality and all fear and worry vanish."

Filmore Shull Defeated In Damage Suit

Auburn Star

The jury trial of the suit of Fillmore Shull of Concord township against Raymond U. Bowser of Spencerville, opened in the DeKalb circuit court Monday morning.

Counsel for the plaintiff are W. W. Sharpless and Russel R. Ridenour, with Capt. W. D. Stump representing the defendant.

The jury is composed of Ora E. Crooks, Earl Forrest, Herbert L. Tustison, Solomon Bishop, Clarence Sponhour, Eugene D. Webster, Charles J. Walker, John P. Thomas, Wm. W. Wilder, Guy W. Orwig, Frank Shenk and Chester Lockwood.

The case had its origin in a public sale held by Mr. Bowser in August, 1923. Shull bid in three cows for $174 and settled with Mr. Bowser and Wm. G. Erick of Spencerville, clerk of the sale, by giving a property statement note. He claimed in this statement that he owned a farm in Concord township worth $5,600 on which there was a mortgage of $3,900; he also owned a farm in LaGrage county worth $1,800; and that he owned $500 worth of personal property above the $600 exemption allowed by law.

Shull failed to pay the note in six months, when it became due. He was thereafter indicted for perpetuating a fraud, the testimony being given before the grand jury by Mr. Bowser. He was in jail three days before being released on bond. The indictment was later dismissed and an affidavit containing the same allegations was filed. Shull lwas rearrested. Then another affidavit was filed and for a third time the prosecuting attorney dismissed the case.

In his opening statement Mr. Sharpless asserted that the evidences would show that Shull did own the property that he claimed. He said that because Shull was unable to meet the note Bowser brought criminal proceedings against him in an effort to force him to pay. The attorney declared Shull had to pay $320 counsel fees besides being imprisoned and his credit and reputation were damaged. The complaint calls for $10,000 damages.

Contention of Defense

Capt. Stump in his opening statement gave Mr. Bowser's side of the story. He said that Shull, instead of owning the Concord township farm, owned only a half interest in it, with his father-in-law, George King, owning the balance; that the farm was bought by them from John and Melvin Bishop a short time before the deal with Mr. Bowser and that four days after the note was given Mr. King gave Shull a deed for his interest in the farm. Capt. Stump said in addition to the $3,900 mortgage there was one for $500 and that instead of $5,600 the farm was only worth $4,000.

Capt. Stump said that Shull did not own $1,100 worth of personal property, as he claimed, but less than $500 worth, and that the LaGrange farm was not worth $6,000 but not more than the amount of the mortgage, $1,800. Capt. Stump said the evidence would show that Shull made the alleged false statement in order to get possession of the cows; that Shull admitted to Bowser that the property statement was false, but said "the world owed him a living."

Capt. Stump said that Mr. Bowser conferred with Charles S. Smith, then deputy prosecuting attorney, and that Mr. Smith advised him a crime had been committed by Shull and that he should be prosecuted. Bowser afterward talked to Capt. H. C. Springer, prosecuting attorney and he also advised the prosecution of Shull.

Following Shull's indictment, Capt. Stump said his attorneys raised the question as to the validity of the indictment because one of the grand jurors was not an owner of real estate. The state thereupon dismissed the case. The prosecuting attorney prepared an affidavit setting out the same charge as contained in the indictment and Mr. Bowser signed it. Then the defense claimed the affidavit was invalid because Charles S. Smith was not empowered by law to act both as deputy prosecuting attorney and as notary public. To set aside this question, the state again dismissed and filed a new affidavit. Shull's attorneys then pointed out that the alleged crime was committed more than two years before the date of the affidavit and that therefore the charge was outlawed. For a third time the state found it necessary to dismiss. The suit for damages for malicious prosecution followed.

Capt. Stump told the jury it would be shown that Mr. Bowser acted in the criminal proceedings in good faith and that he had good reason for believing Shull was guilty.

Shull Testifies

The plaintiff was the first witness. He told about his three arrests and his imprisonment in the county jail for three days and three nights on the first occasion and for three-uarters of a day the second time.

Shull described the purchase of the cows at the Bowser sale and of giving a property statement note in payment. He said he considered the LaGrange county farm of eighty acres worth $6,000, with an $1,800 mortgage. He said he considered $6,000 a fair valuation. He also said he owned 71½ acres in Concord township at the time. He said that when the note became due he told Mr. Bowser he could not pay it and asked for an extension of time. He said he told Mr. Bowser he had sold the LaGrange county farm and could not make the same property statement as before. Then, he said, Mr. Bowser threatened to file criminal charges against him for making false statements. His arrest followed some time later.

On cross-examination, Shull declared he showed Mr. Bowser the deeds to the two farms he said he owned. Mr. Bowser told him he did not consider W. E. Shull good as surety on the note and asked him to make a property statement. Shull produced Capt. Stump for a deed to the Concord township farm made July 2, 1923, by John and Melvin Bishop to Shull and George R. King. Shull also produced another deed dated August 27, 1923, when King made Shull a deed for his interest. The property statement note was executed August 28. Shull said several days elapsed between the sale and the day he made the note to Mr. Bowser and that the note was dated back.

He said he had the deed in his pocket when he gave the property statement note and that he did not have it recorded until a year and a month later. Shull admitted there was not only the $3,900 mortgage on the farm, but also one of $500, when the property statement note was executed. Mr. Sharpless attempted to keep his evidence out of the case, but the court ruled it was admissible.

Asked with reference to the LaGrange county farm, Shull said there is sufficient fencing on the place to pasture stock; that there is a building 16x20 on it that could be used as a house; that the land is of dark-colored sand; and that the farm contains about 19 acres in swamp land. There is a dirt road past the farm. Shull, however, again gave it as his opinion that the farm is worth $6,000.

Shull said that at the time he gave the note to Mr. Bowser he owned seven head of cattle and two horses.

Shull admitted the Mr. Bowser offered to take a chattel mortgage on the cows and extend the time of payment. Shull told Mr. Bowser, he said, that he didn't want to give a chattel mortgage because he was buying and selling stock and wanted to be able to dispose of these cows. He denied telling Mr.Bowser that "the world owed him a living." He also denied that none of his personal property was paid for.

Shull, on redirect examination, said the previous owner of the LaGrange county farm paid $6,300 for it and that he himself paid $5,000. He said he believed the farm was worth more than $6,000. He said it was only an oversight when he omitted the fact the $500 mortgage on the Concord township farm from the property statement note; and that he had no intention of deceiving Mr. Bowser.

Shull said he gave two houses and three lots in exchange for the LaGrange county farm.

He testified that after he was arrested his credit at the banks was shut off. He said he had credit at the two Auburn banks before his arrest and that he had a good reputation. He denied buying oats at the Romine sale and selling them for 3 cents less a bushel than he paid. He thought the selling price was a cent or two less than the price he agreed to pay. He admitted he never paid Romine for the oats. He bought a tractor from Earl Beber for $190 and admitted he never paid for it.

The case was continued Tuesday and after the evidence had been completed the case was sent to the jury and a verdict was returned at 4:30 for the defendant, only one ballot being necessary to reach an agreement.

This 2½ inch extra length means:
1—A saving of 20% in time and labor.
2—One thousand fewer shingles every twelve hundred square feet.
3—Two thousand nails less to drive.
4—Five inches to the weather instead of four.

Save A Thousand Shingles

On a roof of average size, say twelve hundred square feet, there is a positive saving of 20% in time and labor through the use of 15" Ruberoid Unit-shingles, instead of the usual 12½" slate surfaced shingle. A thousand shingles fewer to handle, two thousand nails less to drive—that is the difference.

Ruberoid Unit-shingles, because of their extra thickness and size, can safely be laid five inches to the weather instead of four.

From a decorative standpoint Ruberoid Unit-shingles are without a peer. A distinctive texture and a pleasing color are imparted by the crushed natural slate finish in rich Indian red or cool sage green.

On request we will gladly send you an attractive folder describing the Ruberoid Unit-shingle. Phone today for sample and prices.

Jeff Young, wife and son, Roy Young, of Auburn, enroute to Ohio Sunday got a busted tire just as they struck Newville. We do not know whether striking Newville was what burst the tire or not, but they stopped at Byron Miller's garage and while the tire was being repaired Mr. and Mrs. Young and Mr. and Mrs. Miller had a pretty good little visit, the Youngs were former residents of Newville Center, and the families were friends and had not met before for more than ten years.

Charles, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Aid Beree, died Friday morning at 8 o'clock, after one year or more illness with tuberculosis. Charles was 23 years of age, and a fine young man. This is very sad for the family as less than one year ago they lost another son, Henry, with the same dread disease. The funeral was held from the Beree home Sunday afternoon and was largely attended, many autos followed thhe deceased to the Newville cemetery where he was laid to rest. Many beautiful flowers were in evidence of the esteem in which he was held. The family have the sincere sympathy of a host of friends. He leaves parents, brothers and sisters.

CAN WE STAND THE PRESSURE OF PROSPERITY

Money in the average man's pocket burns its way out. Prosperity too often brings discontent.

As with the individual, so it is with states and nations. People will struggle against adversity and be drawn closer together by hardships. But when the necessity for self-preservation is removed, dissatisfaction, envy, jealously and agitation creep in.

That is the greatest danger our country faces today. We have been unusually prosperous. We have had more money than the necessities of life required.

The "cure-all doctor" with his caldron of steaming political theories offers us a remedy for our real or imaginary problems. Like the magician who can produce a bowl of gold fish out of a silk hat, he offers us laws to help this class or that class, at the expense of another class. But when the curtain goes down on his act, he has our tax money, and we had the pleasure of seeing him do his polictical tricks.

Our country is ripe for the "cure-all doctors." They can show us what is wrong with our present prosperity, and how by adopting their courses of treatment we can put two dollars in our pocket where we now have one, and better yet, make "the other fellow" pay the bill.

We should be thankful for the prosperity which is now ours. The dog with the bone that saw his shadow in the water tried to grab the bone of the other dog, and lost the one he had.

We not only have a bone but a juicy steak in our teeth today. Our banks are full of money, our workmen are the highest paid on earth, most of our farm crops are bringing good prices, transportation is above normal, building is at record figures, power development has broken all records, our homes are filled with electric lights, telephones, radios, automobiles and every modern convenience under the sun.

As a nation, can we stand prosperity, or will we allow ourselves to be duped by the "cure-alls" who would offer visionary theories in trade for proven advantages which we now enjoy?

Who Was Swedenborg?

Emanuel Swedenborg, the son of a bishop, was the great Swedish scientist, philosopher and theologian, whose vast range caused Emerson to term him the wisest of scholars. Dr. Parkes Cadman recently named him the Universal Genius.

Officially connected, by appointment of the King, with the great mining industry of Sweden, he mastered all the sciences of his time, and wrote the most useful books on metallurgy, minerals, geology, astronomy, and the human brain.

His life search was for the human soul. How his spiritual senses were opened, after he was 50 years of age, that he might reveal the human soul, the life after death, and the Bible itself, may be read in the above named, uplifting, useful books.

UNITED STATES HAS CHEAPEST GASOLINE

While no exact comparison can be made, domestic gasoline prices are both relatively and actually much lower than prevail generally in other parts of the world, it is shown by a Department of Commerce tabulation of retail gasoline and kerosene prices in various countries throughout the world on or about April 1, 1926. Factors making for inequalities in prices include distance from sources of supply, quantity consumed, transportation costs, import duties, excise taxes, distribution and marketing costs, quality of gasoline sold, and many others.

Foreign prices range from 15 cents in Bucharest, Roumania, to 98 cents in British South Africa. Average of tank wagon prices in 80 representative American cities on April 10, was 17 cents a gallon, with taxes in the various states ranging from one to five cents; and service station prices two to four cents a gallon above the tank wagon price, plus taxes, where levied.

MISS MORGAN

Synopsis.—Idly fishing Hermanos creek, in California, Caleb Warner, civil engineer, and a New Englander, is witness of the end of a coyote pulled down by two wolfhounds, urged on by a girl rider. Admiring the hounds, he introduces himself, and learns her name is Clinton. With western hospitality she invites him to the ranch to meet her father. At the Clinton home Warner learns his new friend's name is Betty. He is welcomed by her father, Southern Civil war veteran and owner of Hermanos valley. Warner tells them something of his ambitions and his feeling that he is destined to be a "Water-Bearer." In the town of Golden Warner shares an apartment with his old Columbia college chum, Ted Baxter, carefree and somewhat dissipated youth, only child of his widowed mother, who controls the family fortune. At a club luncheon Baxter introduces Caleb to Wilbur Cox, leading business man and president of the water company which supplies the needs of Golden. He gives Cox an inkling of his ambitions, and Cox, impressed, invites him to dinner that night.

The dinner was served in one of the private dining rooms of the club, known as the Red room. The guests were those of the luncheon, with the addition of young Cox and Caleb. It appeared that they had been in some conference that afternoon and that the dinner marked the end of satisfactory arrangements. The talk was all of mutual interests, Big Business.

It appeared that the afternoon's conference had been called in connection with the threat of other Californian cities to wrest from Golden its supremacy as the metropolis of the Pacific coast. The great fire, following the earthquake, had given them opportunity to creep up in population and general progress. Los Angeles was the most formidable competitor, with Oakville, across the bay from Golden, once only thought of as a suburb of the peninsular city but now, as the actual terminal of transcontinental railroads that ended at deep water, an active rival.

With so small a party Caleb was in easy earshot of the conversation. His interests naturally centered on Wilbur Cox and they quickened at the mention of water supply.

"The board of public works will approve the plans for filling the mains with salt water from the bay in case of any big conflagration," said Cox. "That will not only obviate any repetition of disaster through the conduits breaking between here and the reservoirs, as they did in the quake, but will prove a saving."

Jack Cox turned back to Caleb.

"The governor insists that the vital thing the matter with Golden's growth is the question of adequate supply," he said in an undertone. "Naturally he concentrates on that point."

"Is there a shortage?" asked Caleb.

"Likely to be, they tell me. Better quiz the governor if you're interested. He'll pour out information on that subject like a water-gate once he gets started."

Here was food for thought. Water shortage meant water development. It might mean an opportunity.

"The government project will take years to put through," the host was saying. "Meantime we've got to get busy."

"We're leaving that end of it to you, Cox," said Winton. "Conserving water, buying and selling water—at a profit is your business."

"A reasonable profit."

"And a reasonable dividend," capped Winton with a dry smile.

The dinner was not protracted. And it broke up completely. These men seemed all to have definite things to do even at the close of the day. The guests shook hands affably with Caleb.

"An engineer? Intending to locate here? You'll find plenty to do." Such was the consensus of their greetings. The result was heartening. Out here in the West they seemed to accept a man as efficient until he proved himself otherwise, he decided. In the East it was different. A stranger would stay years on approval, almost under suspicion, until he made good.

Jack Cox invited him to visit Imperial valley, as his guest, to see what had been done there and Caleb responded in kind to the cordiality and evident earnestness of the solicitation. But he had an idea—Baxter would have called it a hunch—that he would do well to stay in Golden for a while. And cultivate Cox. His Yankee mind suggested that here was a direct opening.

Cox widened it.

"I am in town for a few days," he said. "You must come up to my office for a chat over things. And perhaps you would like to look over the Crystal Springs property? Our head engineer makes regular tours. He goes Tuesday, by the way. I can arrange with him to show you round. We have some dams there that he is justly proud of. The line of earthquake fault ran right through them and—you can see for yourself how they stood it. How about it?"

Caleb accepted eagerly. He had heard of the Crystal Springs dam. Its resistance to the temblor had been the world talk of engineering.

"I shall be glad to come and see you," he said. "And glad of the chance to see the property. Thank you."

"Good! I shall expect you then. I hope you have enjoyed yourself."

Young Cox paired off with his father as the guests dispersed, and Caleb decided to walk home. An attendant gave him an envelope with his coat and hat. It was a card to the club, good for six weeks, applied for by Baxter and countersigned by Wilbur Cox. Caleb slipped it into his pocket gratefully. It was late before he turned in. Baxter was still out—playing his "game."

On his mahogany bureau there was ranged a galaxy of youth and beauty, the faces of about a dozen girls—the number varied—whimsically framed.

Baxter styled them the "Gallery of the Three Ps." Past, Present and Possible. "I frame the past in gunmetal," he said, "symbolic of spent ammunition. The present partners in the game smile at you from silver, indicative of fair, untarnished happiness. Those of the future, the possibilities, are honored by gold. True it is only plated—but it is gold on the surface—harbinger of dawn, of coming pleasure, of the glow of anticipation. It is the hand that may fall to you in the next deal, Cal, that holds the real thrill of the game. That is why, when a 'possible' becomes a 'present,' I shift the fair from gold to a silver grading, not that they are less dear, if more familiar, but because the bloom always brushes off the peach when you handle it."

Soon He Was Deep in the History of Golden.

When, the morning after the dinner, Caleb entered Baxter's room to find it, as he had anticipated, untenanted; he noticed a change in the line-up of the "three Ps." One of the gold frames had been put away. One of the silver ones held a new face. It had not been one of those among the "possible," Caleb thought, though he had not paid very close attention to Baxter's gallery. This girl had, it would seem, capitulated too quickly to have ever been classed as a "possible."

Caleb surmised it was the blond stenographer whom Baxter had termed the "peach," with whom he was now playing the "game." In the photograph there was a suggestion that the bloom of this peach was artificial. The face was petulant, fond of pleasure, disinclined to count the cost. Caleb idly fancied that the eyes held possibilities of storm that would be more than just a rain of tears on occasion, that the mouth could become hard and sullen if its owner were crossed.

He had breakfast alone in the apartment house dining room. It was Sunday. He thought of visiting El Nido but old custom precluded the idea of a Lord's day social call. He wondered if the public library would be open, thinking that he would like to read up the water history of Golden, of Oakville and Los Angeles, and then he remembered the card in his pocket. The club library should prove adequate. The Altruists was a literary as well as an artistic institution. So he walked down town, to find the place almost deserted. Everyone in Golden, it seemed, made the most of holidays out-of-doors.

There was no one in the library with its easy chairs and big tables, its desks and deep lounge in front of a mammoth fireplace. The walls were lined high with books, well arranged, so that it was little trouble to find what he wanted. Soon he was deep in the history of Golden, with a big map of the Bay region close beside him.

He went to bed early. Sometime in the night Baxter came home. Caleb found him sleeping the next morning, his head tucked on a forearm, handsome but jaded, settled until noon. Caleb waited until Cox should have had time to answer his mail and then presented himself at the offices of the Crystal Springs company. Cox's greeting was cordial.

"Do you mind waiting a few moments?" he asked. He pressed a desk button and a shrewd-appearing young chap entered whom Caleb rated as Cox's secretary.

"Send me a stenographer, Harry, will you?" asked Cox. "I have given you all you can handle and I want to get out some instructions on that cement matter. The stuff is far from standard or contract quality."

The stenographer entered, a girl, quiet, dressed in a dark business suit, deftly taking the dictation given her by Cox in a low, unhesitating voice. Caleb, looking over an engineering journal, hardly noticed her.

"Take this letter," said Cox, then turned to Caleb, as the girl changed a page in her notebook. "I find that Hinckley, our engineer in chief, is not coming in this morning. He will be at Crystal Springs tomorrow, so I am going to give you a letter to him. A car will be here for you in the morning at eight-thirty, if that suits you. I am sorry I cannot give the time to go with you myself."

It was said graciously, with a certain air of assurance that Cox would actually have gone with Caleb if he could have spared the day.

"Now, Miss Morgan," said Cox. "To E. H. Hinckley, introducing Mr. Caleb Warner."

The girl's poised pencil wavered for a second, while her face lifted and her eyes gazed wide at Caleb, then it dipped and automatically inscribed stenographic characters. They were blue eyes and the face one he had seen before. Where? The dress was more demure, the blond hair less fancifully arranged, but there was no mistaking the features, the general expression, startled from business calm to personal interest.

Miss Morgan was Baxter's "peach," the girl whose photograph now occupied one of the silver frames on Baxter's bureau. Baxter was home, asleep, the girl was on duty. There were shadows under her eyes but there was a flush in her cheeks as she stared at Caleb with an interrogation that was almost a challenge, before she bent to her work as Cox went on with the letter.

Caleb imagined what she was wondering. He had been mentioned to her by name by Baxter. She was trying to guess whether Baxter had done the same by her, whether Caleb had seen her photograph, what chance had brought him to the private office and her into it on the same occasion?

Caleb's face showed nothing and, when the letter was ended, he was again reading the journal. Nor did he look up when the girl left at Cox's "that is all, Miss Morgan." He did not wish to embarrass the girl. What she did in her own time was, if it did not prove detrimental to her duties, her own affair—most certainly not his.

She did not return. A few minutes later the secretary came quietly in with the letter of introduction which Cox read, signed, slid into its unsealed envelope and passed to Caleb.

Miss Morgan is evidently Baxter's "peach." A smart girl with a grievance?

Idea of Inferiority Not at All Uncommon

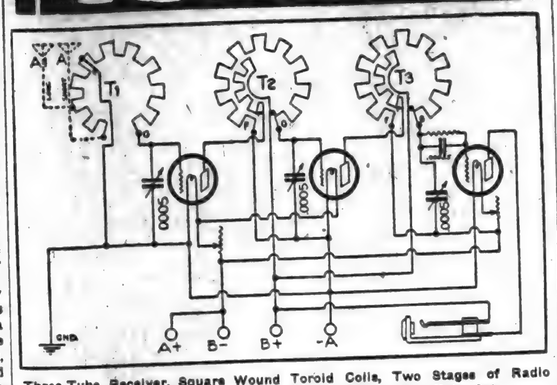
The feeling of inferiority is an experience so nearly universal that it cannot be considered abnormal or evidence of disease, declares a writer in Hygeia Magazine. Most of us have had this feeling at some time in our lives, such as when making a speech, undertaking a new job, or taking a prominent part in some social function. The stammering, trembling, palpitation and emptiness of mind which comes at being called on to face a new situation are familiar to all of us.

However, by establishing habits of courage and self-reliance and by learning to attend to the matter in hand rather than to our feelings, most of us have been able to overcome these difficulties. If these feelings of inability to meet the situation are not faced frankly and overcome, one establishes a habit of fear. Then the sense of failure and the feelings of inferiority become habitual, and one's lot will be indeed unhappy.

Salt Water in Hudson

There is a slight indication of salt in the Hudson river as far up at Troy. However, this varies with floods. In case of floods the tides push the sea water back and the salt water does not go very far up. Without floods, however, the water is brackish as far up as Troy.

RADIO



Three-Tube Receiver, Square Wound Toroid Coils, Two Stages of Radio Frequency and Detector. Can Be Enlarged to Five-Tube Set.

By CARLTON E. BUTLER

(Member American Institute of Electrical Engineers and Institute of Radio Engineers.)

Styles in radio receivers have changed with the changing conditions of the broadcasting field. A three-tube regenerative set with two stages of radio frequency amplification was capable of giving satisfactory reception a few years ago, but today, with the worst congestion of the ether lanes ever experienced in the history of radio, and the increasing use of high-power broadcasting stations, selectivity requirements demand the use of radio-frequency amplifying circuits.

A three-tube circuit today should use some form of tuned radio-frequency amplification that successfully copes with 1926 conditions and furnishes an inexpensive set that later on may be enlarged into a five-tube receiver by the addition of two stages of audio-frequency amplification.

Leave Room on Panel.

In the diagram shown here, however, just the three-tube circuit is illustrated as it makes a complete set in itself. Room should be left on the panel and in the cabinet for the other stages at a later date. For this reason a 24 or 26-inch panel should be used, with a cabinet and baseboard large enough to allow for this future expansion. The three-tube set will bring in just as much distance and possess all of the desirable qualities of the high-priced five-tube sets on the market, excepting volume, which is obtained when audio amplification is added.

Little apparatus is needed to construct this set, and with reasonable care an excellent receiver can be had for very little outlay of time and money. To construct the set you will need the following list of apparatus:

1 square wound toroid coil, type T1.

2 square wound toroid coils, type T2, indicated as T2 and T3.

3 straight-line frequency variable condensers, .00035 mfd. capacity. Indicated as C1, C2, and C3.

1 .00025 mfd. fixed grid condenser and 2 megohm grid leak 25-ohm rheostats.

1 phone jack.

3 tube sockets.

Binding posts, wire, screws, etc.

The 25-ohm rheostats are to be used with UV 201-A or C 301-A type of tubes. If the 199 type are to be used, then 40-ohm rheostats should be substituted. For the WD 11 or WD 12 type of tube, 6-ohm rheostats throughout will be correct. Both radio-frequency tubes are operated from one rheostat if desired, but it is usually best to have a separate control for the detector tube.

Use Double Circuit Jack.

The detector tube is using the same voltage of "B" battery as the radio-frequency tubes. This will only be possible as long as all three tubes are of the same type and not more than 45 volts are to be used. If a higher voltage of "B" battery is desired, then the detector jack should be supplied from the 45-volt tap. If a soft tube is to be used, reduce the voltage to 22½ volts, or less.

A single-circuit jack is shown in the detector stage. If at a later date it is practically certain that amplification is to be added, it is best to use a double-circuit jack in this position to avoid the need for changing the present circuit.

Two antenna terminals are provided on the first toroid coil. These are to adapt the set to a long or short antenna. It might be well to bring these two terminals out to binding posts on the rear of the cabinet so that the antenna can be quickly changed over from one to the other as conditions require more selective tuning, or greater volume is desired.

The position of the apparatus in laying out the receiver baseboard is not critical. The coils may be placed side by side without intercoupling or causing the receiver to become unstable, due to their confined magnetic fields.

How to Avoid Burning Out Your Radio Tubes

"An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure," applies nowhere more forcefully than in the burning out of radio tubes. A simple measure to eliminate, as far as practicable one of the wastes of radio is proposed by the manager of a prominent radio manufacturing company. An ordinary 40-watt lamp is all that is needed to conduct the operation, resulting often in saving of time and money, and at other times "making assurance doubly sure."

"Did you ever hear the story, 'I've burned out five tubes!'" Mr. Manager asked in discussing the matter with a group of dealers. "Now there is no occasion for this happening. It, of course, may be possible because of an internal short in one of the tubes between the grid or plate and the filament; or possibly through carelessness in installing the receiver and connecting the battery wires.

"The wise dealer, however, or the one installing the set, always connects up every receiver and uses an ordinary 40-watt, 110-volt lamp, for instance the kind you ordinarily have in the store or find in the home, in series with the plus 90 'B' battery lead when the receiver is installed for the first time.

"With this precaution, it is impossible to burn out tubes, for even if there is a defect of any kind in either the receiver or connections, the tube filaments will only glow or light up very dimly with the 40-watt lamp connected in the plus 90 'B' battery leads, and then only when the filament control switch is still on its 'off' position.

"If the tubes do light with the switch in the 'off' position, it is a direct indication of trouble, and the receiver should be immediately disconnected and the fault found and eliminated.

"Always use that 'safety valve' 40-watt lamp in series with "B" battery for it assures absolute protection to the tubes. When the set is completely hooked up and working properly, you can safely remove the lamp and still know that the set will function properly, and that there will be no possible chance of burning out tubes under normal operating conditions."

Battery Charging Rate

A storage battery will not have a long life if it is charged at a rate greater than six amperes, and in the case of small batteries three amperes is enough.

Amount of Power That Your Aerial Picks Up

It has been computed that the amount of power picked up by the ordinary receiving aerial is about one-billionth of a fly-power. Think of it! If your receiver picked up as much power as that possessed by a fly, you would be receiving a billion times more energy than you are now receiving. It seems almost impossible to comprehend this fact. Here is another illustration that may help you to understand how very small is the power actually picked up by your antenna. If the power radiated by the average transmitting station were collected and used to heat an ordinary electric toaster it would not even glow at a dull red heat and certainly would not burn your bread. Yet this small amount of energy is radiating in all directions and spreads over a circle with a diameter of 16,000 to 20,000 miles, for signals have been picked up hundreds of times at points 8,000 to 10,000 miles distant from the transmitting station.

Just imagine every foot of space in in a circle with a radius of 10,000 miles being flooded with part of the energy that originally was only enough to heat an electric toaster, then you begin to get an idea of the extremely small amount of energy that reaches your particular aerial.

From this it will be realized that to detect the extremely faint signals from distant stations your receiver must be very sensitive and efficient.

Uncle Sam's Radio Job Has Grown Since 1911

Uncle Sam's job of supervising all the radio broadcasting outfits of the country has grown rapidly since 1911 when this service began. In that year there were but two men enforcing the radio laws. Today there are 19 in the headquarters office in Washington and 70 in the field watching over the 18,103 licensed amateur and commercial stations in this country and on United States ships. It is estimated that 25,000,000 people have access to radio equipment with which to receive broadcast programs.

Value of Colored Wires

Colored battery connections are good vacuum tube insurance. Obtain wire in several different colors or dip the ends in dye. When taking the wires off the set merely note the position of the various colors and when reconnecting place them the same.

COULD NOT PUT ON HER SHOES

Mrs. Daugherty Was so Weak

In a little town of the middle West, was a discouraged woman. For four months she had been in such poor health that she could not stoop to put on her own shoes. Unable to do her work, unable to go out of doors or enjoy a friendly chat with her neighbors, life seemed dark indeed to Mrs. Daugherty.

Then one day, a booklet was left at her front door. Idly she turned the pages. Soon she was reading with quickened interest. The little booklet was filled with letters from women in conditions similar to hers who had found better health by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"I began taking the Vegetable Compound," Mrs. Daugherty writes, "and after I took the third bottle, I found relief. I am on my eleventh bottle and I don't have that trouble any more, and feel like a different woman. I recommend the Vegetable Compound to everyone I see who has trouble like mine, and you can use these facts as a testimonial. I am willing to answer any letters from women asking about the Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. Ed. Daugherty, 1308 Orchard Ave., Muscatine, Iowa.

First County Is Freed of Scrubs

Kentucky Community Sends Last Grade Bull to Shambles.

Pure bred bulls, 140; grade bulls, 0; scrub bulls, 0.

This is the official bull count for Union county, Ky., as reported to the United States Department of Agriculture by County Agent R. O. Wilson and Wayland Rhoads, field agent in animal husbandry, University of Kentucky.

Sent Him to Shambles.

On April 22, 1926, the last farmer in Union county owning a grade bull sent him to the shambles and replaced him with a pure bred. The accomplishment marks a culmination of a systematic drive begun more than five years ago by L. C. Brewer, formerly county agent. At the beginning of 1926 the county had disposed of all of its scrub bulls, and all but four grades, but not until April 22 was the last grade bull disposed of. So far as the records or information of the United States Department of Agriculture show, Union county, Ky., is the first in the United States to reach a 100 per cent pure-bred bull goal.

Besides the accomplishment mentioned, Union county is third on the county honor list in the "Better-Sires—Better-Stock" campaign, fostered by the bureau of animal industry and various states. This county has 550 live stock owners who are using pure-bred sires for all classes of live stock raised, and who are following breeding methods leading to still further improvement. The results were achieved by persistent and systematic work by the county agent and influential citizens in co-operation with the State College of Agriculture and the United States Department of Agriculture.

One of the means of stimulating interest in live-stock improvement was the publication in July, 1924, of a special edition of the local paper, devoted entirely to the better-sires campaign and educational articles and illustrations showing the value of better-bred live stock. The cattle industry of the county is largely devoted to beef production, thus making the achievement especially timely, in view of current federal-state plans to improve the quality of meat.

Campbell County Striving.

Campbell county, Kentucky, is now striving for the same achievement. Mr. Rhoads has informed the Department of Agriculture that the number of inferior bulls in Campbell county is being gradually reduced. On January 1, 1925, there were 93 grade and scrub bulls in Campbell county. On January 1 of this year the number had been reduced to 48, and the last report, late in April, showed a further reduction to 22. Local campaign plans indicate that Campbell county will have none but pure-bred bulls in the fall of this year.

The two factors that are chiefly responsible for the wider use of pure-bred sires, live-stock specialists of the Department of Agriculture assert, are educational work and economic pressure. Persons raising inferior live stock can not compete long with their neighbors who are raising animals of superior quality which, in most classes of stock, mature earlier and bring better prices.

Cattle Grubs and Means of Control

Young Stock Show Higher Degree of Infestation.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Few people connect the cattle grubs found under the skin on the backs of cattle with the adult insects known as heel flies or warble flies. These insects, which are responsible for considerable loss because of reduced milk flow and "grubby" hides, cause great annoyance to cattle, particularly when laying their eggs on the legs of the animals. From this point, the larvae, which are hatched in from two and a half to six days, burrow into the leg. After a journey of several months up the leg and through the body they reach a situation just underneath the skin on the back from which they emerge as fully matured grubs. These grubs, after burrowing into the soil or under loose material, some thirty to sixty days later develop into flies. The foregoing facts are brought out in Department Bulletin No. 1369-D, "The Cattle Grub or Ox Warbles, Their Biologies and Suggestions for Control," just issued by the United States Department of Agriculture.

The extent of infestation varies with the age of cattle, young stock, particularly animals from one to three years old, almost always showing a higher degree of infestation than mature animals. Different breeds show no difference in susceptibility.

Housing of the herd during the periods of fly activity has been known greatly to reduce the infestations.

The bulletin gives detailed information relative to this insect, its distribution, effect upon cattle and man, economic importance, control, and possibilities of eradication. Any one interested in the subject may obtain a copy of the publication free, as long as the supply lasts, by writing to the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

Growing Strawberries

The easiest way to grow strawberries is the matted row system. Set the plants in rows three to four feet apart, and then about two feet apart in the rows. Cultivation should be given so as to keep all weeds killed all the time. As the runners start to grow train them to keep in rows, and if you have some of the kinds which send out very many runners, it will pay to keep some of them cut off.

Let Peaches Grow Until They Come Into Bearing

Let young peach trees grow as much as they will until they come into bearing, is the advice from the New York College of Agriculture at Ithaca. Fruit men at the college say that the well-known custom of pruning back the wood following after the season's first growth is not wise.

Such pruning, they say, delays bearing and may cause too late and tender growth. This, of course, increases the danger of winter-killing.

The open-head system seems best, as it allows a more complete renewal than do other methods. It provides new, healthy wood farther down on the main branches. The center should be kept open at the top, and the branches may be cut back to prevent them from getting too tall, but otherwise little needs to be done until the trees start to bear.

Young trees are usually pruned to a whip when they are set, or if the side branches are strong they are often left and cut back to three buds. Buds which are not wanted for future branches may be rubbed off during the first summer, and trees that get this kind of treatment usually grow larger than those that are severely cut back.

Train tomatoes to a trellis, pruning off all but one stem.

Lime, legumes, and live stock will bring almost any farm up to productiveness, and do it cheaply.

* * *

Water only when the plants need it badly and then soak the ground thoroughly. Sprinkling does more harm than good.

The locust tree is a member of the legume family, and as such it has nodules on its roots just as do the various clovers.

The farm that maintains the proper balance between cultivated, legume and small grain crops will have a real crop rotation, which in turn will do much to maintain a productive soil.

A sharp pencil is a good farm tool. One farmer says that two of his seven cows will be disposed of because a year's record showed them to be about 200 pounds under the top producers.

THREE-TOED TURTLE

"Poor little box turtles," said the Three-Toed Box Turtle, "poor little things.

"You're all right in many, many ways, but in one way you aren't."

"Ha, ha, ha, grunt, squeal, grunt," said the little Box Turtles, "that's a goodly joke."

"What do you mean by a goodly joke?" asked the Three-Toed Box Turtle.

"There," said one of the ordinary Box Turtles, "you don't know everything, do you?"

"Well," said the Three-Toed Turtle, "one can't know absolutely everything.

"Not even the wisest and most important and most studious can know absolutely everything."

"But you felt so sorry for us," said the Box Turtles, "and now you find you don't know everything we do."

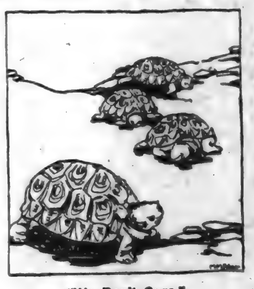
"Tell me what a goodly joke is," said the Three-Toed Turtle, trying not to notice what the Box Turtles were saying.

The Box Turtles giggled.

"A goodly joke," one of them answered, "means an extremely good joke.

"And it's a good joke to hear you say that in many ways we are all right, but in one way we aren't.

"Of course, everyone may not speak of even an extremely good joke as a goodly joke, but we're so smart we think up things like that to say."



"We Don't Care."

"How can I be expected to know what may not be known by anyone, or at least by only a few?

"You think up things and then expect me to know them."

"Oh, well, that is all right," said the Box Turtles. "And we know what you mean when you say that in many ways we are all right, but in one way we aren't.

"We're pretty smart, eh?"

"What do I mean?"

"You mean that we're all right in all ways but one because in all ways but one we're just like you.

"One can say it either way.

"But in one way you are different and in that way you feel sorry for us.

"You're sorry because we haven't the same kind of hind feet.

"Ah, you have but three claws on the hind foot, and that is the only way in which you are different from us.

"But don't feel sorry for us. We don't care.

"What do claws and hind feet and toes mean to a superior Box Turtle, we ask you?

"We answer our own question; nothing."

Then all the Box Turtles sent a Zoolet to the Zoolet society.

This was their verse and they all joined in, in sending it:

Toes mean nothing to us at all,
Whether they're big or whether they're small,
Whether they're few or whether they're many,
In fact, we don't care if we have any!
So, Three-Toed Turtles, do not feel sad,
For we are in truth really quite glad.

"Purges" and "Physics" Bad for Old Folks

While Dr. W. B. Caldwell, of Monticello, Ill., a practicing physician for 47 years, knew that constipation was the curse of advancing age, he did not believe that a "purge" or "physic" every little while was necessary.

To him, it seemed cruel that so many constipated old people had to be kept constantly "stirred up" and half sick by taking cathartic pills, tablets, salts, calomel and nasty oils.

In Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin he discovered a laxative which helps to "regulate" the bowels of old folks. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin not only causes a gentle, easy bowel movement but each dose helps to strengthen the bowel muscles, shortly establishing natural "regularity." It never gripes, sickens, or upsets the system. Besides, it is absolutely harmless and pleasant to take.

WHAT A BANK SHOULD BE

The relation between a bank and its depositors is different from that between other lines of business and their customers. A bank can be useful to its clients beyond the mere depositing, paying and lending of money. A bank stands in confidential relation to its depositors. It has opportunities to help them and it has opportunities to take advantage of them. It becomes familiar with their financial transactions. It knows what deals they are planning and making. Not only their money but their business secrets are in its hands for safekeeping. Further, the bank is the support behind a man, upon which he can call for help when he needs it. It is like the reserve troops which a general keeps to use when he gets in a pinch.

Your bank, to be really useful to you, should have a strict sense of honor. It should be absolutely safe. It should be big and strong enough to furnish help when it is called for.

Where can you find such a bank?

GETTING THE BEST OUT OF HER WASHDAY

When Molly Brown got over that long spell of sickness and was just about well again, the doctor told her husband, "Make her go a little easy now. She can do some of the light work about the house, but no more of those record breaking stunts she used to pull because she was young and stout and thought it was helping you. Let her cut out the washing and such hard work."

Cutting out the washing was not as easy as it sounded. Four miles out in the country there wasn't a wash-woman to be had, nor scarcely, for that matter, in town. Driving to town once a week with the washing and back again after it wasn't going to be any fun either.

They worried about it—and then they found the way out. In consulting with Kinsey's Hardware, they recommended that an electric plant be installed in their home and then as they see fit, put in labor-saving equipment that will help Molly do her work, and she will soon recover. It is a pleasure to keep house with the use of Kinsey's electrical appliances, such as, Irons, Sweepers, Ironers, Toasters, Washing Machines and the new addition to our stock, the Electric Furnace, to be used as a heater and cooker. Needlework Used on Kiddies' Duds

Peasant Embroidery Is Specially Favored on Little One's Frocks.

Quite as careful attention is given to the designing of dress for children as to that of grown people, and those who devote their talent to the subject are establishing some interesting styles, says a fashion authority in the New York Times.

In form, fabric and color the frocks, coats and bonnets for little people follow in general characteristics the prevailing fashions for women. Most conspicuous in the last two or three years is the gradually shortening skirt, until the latest model in vogue is, in fact, an abbreviated tunic minus the skirt for very little girls, and a frock for those a little older is less than knee length. French styles are extreme in this detail, and American clothes follow these closely, reflecting the preference of the mothers.

Small frocks are now, as they have long been, one-piece affairs gathered, tucked or shirred at the neck or attached to a shallow yoke, with the little sleeves gathered at the wrists. These are worn by children from the time they are put into short dresses until they attain the dignity of the separate skirt—blouse and jumper. They must be simple however fine the material and the workmanship, and the bottom of the dress is finished with a plain hem. Some of the more dressy frocks are trimmed at the edge with a frill of lace, but the hem is conventional, often with pin tucks, a row of stitching or other needlework. Plain as this model invariably is, it is desirable that it should be made by hand, and it is possible now to find a great many lovely things in handmade clothes for children, often at a very reasonable price.

Needlework Is Fashionable.

Needlework on children's dresses is exceedingly fashionable. Not the overelaboration that was in vogue years ago when the frock of a little girl was trimmed with as much lace and embroidery as her mamma's purse could afford, but a fine quality in detail and delicacy in design. The ideal is both simplicity and daintiness, and needlework is so popular that many women put their own work into the little daughter's frock, when they cannot afford to buy what they desire. Hemstitching, featherstitching, fagotting, "French" knots and small patterns in embroidery trim little dresses of sheer muslin, batiste, handkerchief linen and fine voiles. These have been for several years the accepted ways of embellishing the white frocks for children which have otherwise expressed the same severity as the chemise gown worn by women.

All white, or all one shade, in garment and trimming, has until lately been the almost invariable rule. At the moment there is a perfect craze for peasant embroidery—the brightly colored needlework that has been seen so much in women's dress. Colored thread is used in stitching on white, and the Czechoslovakian, Hungarian and Russian patterns are embroidered in crewels on voile, wool and crepe, both in white and in color. This kind of needlework must be applied with taste and discrimination because of the bold character and vivid tints in the composition.

The idea of embroidering the sleeves, taken from the peasants' blouse, is shown on children's clothes, as on the models for women. The full sleeve which is now so modish is quite heavily trimmed in some of the latest styles, gay reds, blues, greens and yellows on white—decorative, distinctive and youthful. This type of needlework is of course more appropriate for larger girls, and some jolly little frocks are quite heavily embroidered.

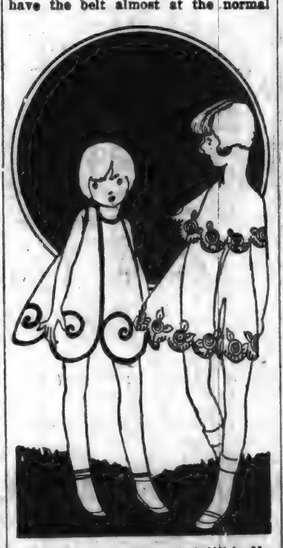
Dainty Little Dresses Made of Gingham Smocked and Embroidered.

Animal Decorations.

The most amusing patterns are shown on garments for little children—animals, singly or in groups and processions; trees, flowers in pots—inspired by the models from a Paris couturier; birds, fairies and symbols. The likeness of her favorite kitten is embroidered on the blue linen dress of one small person, who will have also summer wardrobe white frocks ornamented with a variety of patterns, done in colored wools and cottons. Among these is one of red cherries embroidered in zephyr on white voile. A spider and his web in gray, and a row of yellow baby ducks on white linen and three white "bunnies" decorate the front of a brown play coat. Since this idea has become a fad there is no limit to the variety of ways in which original fancies are expressed.

In the sheerest materials for summer much smocking is used, as a rule to finish the neck and sleeves, and this season many of the little white dresses are smocked with colored cotton thread.

A variation of the full, straight frock is shown for girls who have lost the chubbiness of babyhood and are growing long of limb. These are made with a belt which is placed high, to form an empire waist, or very low, blousing above the hips, and some have the belt almost at the normal waistline. The skirt is gathered full or finely plaited; and, for a girl over ten who may be tall, some pretty styles are shown with a hint of a flare or godets.



Tops of Linen, Decorated With Motifs of Brilliant Red Flannel.

In frocks made of soft, sheer materials, smocking is especially well liked, some for larger girls being treated in this way to form a yoke about the hips, at the neck and wrists. This year the voiles, marquisettes, georgettes and crepes are most in vogue. Some new weaves in cotton crepe and other novelties, light and fine, make pretty and serviceable dresses for girls between the ages of eight and fifteen—practically the same materials as those used for women's dresses. On some of these the peasant embroidery and different kinds of needlework are effective.

Jumper Suit Is Popular.

The jumper suit is perhaps the most fashionable type of frock for larger girls, and in this there is the almost unlimited variety in fabric, color and scheme of combination. The plaited skirt in fine kilts or any arrangement of plaits is shown, with a jumper of the same material or another. In quality and color most of these suits in both the lighter and more "dressy" and in the sports models are embroidered in some way. The patterns are more conventional than the juvenile illustrations on the things for very little children, but there must be something—a monogram or some more elaborate trimming.

In another style of dress for girls the bolero is successfully introduced. It is varied in line and, in arrangement with the dress, is long or short, plain or plaited, to form a little cape and is a particularly happy model for a young girl of tall, slender figure. A quaint little costume shown in an exclusive shop for children's wear is made with a skirt of plaid taffeta, a blouse of white mousseline de soie and a bolero of black velvet.

Hosiery for All Ages.

Hosiery fashions now serve every age from babyhood to college days. For the mere infant white socks with pale pink and blue tops or all solid white are chosen. Then for the two-year-old there is the same type of sock, but in a wider range of colors, in all the soft shades of green, blue, yellow, lavender, rose and pink. For the girl between five and ten the colors run into plaid tops, solid colors in the foot with plain and fancy cuffs. Stockings for playtime are much heavier in weight and different in weave, and have an additional feature in a ridge or seam concealed underneath the cuff to prevent the stocking from twirling about the leg in an ugly fashion.

These stockings come in tans and grays and in colors that are somewhat deeper than those seen in lisle and silk. There are two kinds of ribbing, the very fine and the broad English ribs which in this country classify such stockings as sport hose. In the English models the ribbing is extended to the ankles or right through the toe section. The latter are to be worn with low-cut pumps and the others with either shoes or oxfords. Silk socks for the little miss to wear with her party frock come in all the pastel shades and have turned back cuffs which terminate just below the knee.

Shawls in Transparent Effects

Large squares of dotted net in pastel colors bordered with double hems of matching chiffon are in keeping with the vogue of shawls

Three things to delight in—beauty, frankness and well doing.

Three things to avoid—idleness, loquacity and flippant jesting.

Three things to cultivate—good taste, good manners and good humor.

SEASONABLE DISHES

A tasty salad is always in season and now with fresh green things in abundance one may have a variety of summer salads. Try slicing small green onions very thin, adding half of a green pepper, more or less as one likes the flavor, cover with sour cream, adding a bit of salt and cayenne. A spoonful of mayonnaise may be added to season more highly if desired. Serve on lettuce. Cottage cheese served on lettuce with a spoonful of crushed fresh currants, sweetened very sweet, is another well-liked combination. When the fruit is not in season open a can that has been crushed with sugar and canned without cooking.

Combination Salad.—Shred a small head of early cabbage and cover with cold water to crisp. Arrange tender leaves of lettuce on salad plates and heap on the following combination well mixed with good mayonnaise: one finely cubed apple, one-half of a green pepper finely shredded, one banana sliced and chopped fine; add the cabbage; a bit of pineapple will not spoil the combination.

Strawberry Whip.—Mix one cupful of crushed strawberries with one-third of a cupful of powdered sugar. Beat the whites of three eggs, add one-third of a cupful of sugar and one-quarter of a teaspoonful of cream of tartar, beat again. Combine the mixtures and serve in sherbet cups or as a sauce on sponge cake.

Baked Beans With Sausage.—Par boil one quart of navy beans after soaking them over night. When the skins crack, place them in a bean pot, adding three tablespoonfuls of molasses and salt to taste. Bake all day. One hour before serving place link sausages over the top and allow them to bake.

Creole Soup.—Chop one small turnip, one onion and one carrot. Cook these with two tablespoonfuls of rice, a pint of tomato, two teaspoonfuls of salt and two cupfuls of water. When the vegetables are tender, rub through a colander. Add a tablespoonful of butter and serve hot.

Rhubarb Baked With Figs.—Cover well-washed figs with boiling water and cook until the water is nearly evaporated. Cut a pound of unpeeled rhubarb into inch pieces, put a layer into a baking dish, sprinkle with sugar, then add a few figs; repeat until the dish is full. Add a few tablespoonfuls of water and bake covered in a slow oven until the fruit is tender.

Helpful Suggestions.

On damp or rainy days be sure to supply the boiling pots and pans with plenty of water as the air like a wet sponge absorbs more moisture than when dry.

Obstinate stains of almost any kind may be removed with peroxide and soap; then place in the sun. Sometimes several applications will be necessary. Be sure to rinse well after using peroxide. Rust stains are easily removed with lemon juice and salt in the bright sunshine. Salts of lemon moistened with water is very effective and is always ready to use. Any stain remover should be carefully rinsed out after applying.

When baking a cake set the alarm clock so that no matter how busy the attention will be called to the kitchen.

Leftover oatmeal may, by the addition of water and reheating, serve again as fresh oatmeal.

Put a layer of finely chopped black walnuts over the top of a custard pie. Any chopped nuts or coconut will be good.

Old stocking legs make fine oversleeves to slip on when working in the kitchen; they save the good dress sleeves. Cut at the seams and sewed together they make very good dust cloths and dust mops.

Candles for use on the table will burn clearer and longer if placed on ice for a day before using. A ring of salt put around the lamp wick will give a soft steady flame and will burn all night.

Cracks and splits in furniture may be filled with melted beeswax, then varnished, so that they will hardly show.

Black mustard seed, if sowed in the garden, will make the best of salad plants late into the fall. Nice for greens and served with lettuce it is especially good.

Dampen the brush of the carpet sweeper—it will do much better work in picking up threads and lint.

Soiled coat collars may be cleaned with cornmeal wet with gasoline; rub in well and brush out. Velvet will look like new thus cleaned.

Pineapple juice is a good cure for indigestion. Pineapple, one can shredded, three bananas and one orange sliced very thin makes a filling for a large cake.

ACUTE KIDNEY DISEASE

MUCH has been written for the public about Bright's disease, the chronic form of kidney disease which generally is found in persons past middle life and which is closely associated with hardening of the blood vessels, high blood pressure and some form of heart disease. This condition, in which the kidneys are shrunken and hard, is much like gray hair. It is one of the signs and results of old age, for which little or nothing can be done, except to relieve the kidneys of as much work and irritation as possible. It is due to poisoning of some kind continued over a long period of time, excessive eating, the use of alcohol, lead poisoning or any other form of chronic poisoning.

But there is another form of kidney disease which is generally found in children or young people, which is not due to age but is caused by some irritation or poisoning which affects the kidneys, and which, instead of being a long drawn-out disease, covering years, is a rapidly developing condition. This is usually caused by some form of infection. It frequently, in children, follows scarlet fever, diphtheria, tonsilitis, pneumonia or influenza. The poison which these diseases generate in the body are thrown off through the kidneys and cause an inflammation of these organs. It may also be caused by poisons outside the body, such as turpentine, carbolic acid, arsenic and mercury. It may follow childbirth or may be caused by extensive skin diseases or burns, in which a large part of the skin is unable to work properly, thus throwing greater strain on the kidneys.

Acute disease of the kidneys comes on suddenly, like a fever. There is a chill and high fever, the patient is pale and the face and ankles are swollen. Pain in the back, nausea and vomiting may be present. The swelling of the face, ankles and legs increases. The secretion from the kidneys is small in amount and it is a dark reddish-brown or smoky color, due to the presence of blood in the urine. The whole body may be swollen, due to the inability of the kidneys to excrete the water in the body.

The cases which recover begin to show improvement in from one to three weeks. The fatal cases become more serious, the patient dying from pneumonia, heart exhaustion or uremic poisoning.

Avoidance of poisons and infectious diseases and of exposure to cold and wet, and keeping children in bed after scarlet fever, measles and diphtheria will prevent many cases of acute kidney diseases.

PREVENTING DIPHTHERIA

TERRIBLE as have been the ravages of diphtheria in past generations, diphtheria is today an entirely controllable disease. It can not only be controlled, it can actually be wiped out just as yellow fever is being wiped out. By the Schick test, which consists of injecting a single drop of antitoxin under the skin, the child who is susceptible can be separated from the child who is naturally immune. Observations which have been made on large numbers of school children, show that from 30 to 40 per cent of all children are naturally immune from diphtheria and so need not be considered, as these immune children will not take diphtheria anyway.

Those children whom the Schick test show to be susceptible to diphtheria can easily be protected by a dose of toxin-antitoxin.

So we know how to prevent this disease in practically every case and yet diphtheria every year kills thousands of children, every one of whom could and should have been saved. As King Edward said, "If this disease is preventable, why is it not prevented?"

It has been, to a great extent, in spite of the indifference of the public. In New York state, for instance, the death rate for diphtheria in 1895 was 95 children for every 100,000 of the population. Antitoxin was discovered in 1894, but did not come into general use for several years. Yet by 1905 the death rate in New York was just one-half. It was again cut in half by 1915. In that year, toxin-antitoxin came into use and the death rate for New York is now only 15 per 100,000 or less than one-fifth what it was in 1895.

These 15 deaths per 100,000 are much better than 95 deaths, but they are still far too many and all of them are entirely unnecessary. If every child when it entered school were given the Schick test its parents would know whether it was safe from or susceptible to diphtheria. If every susceptible child, which would mean about one-half of all school children, was then given a dose of toxin-antitoxin this disease would practically disappear.

Why is this not done? We know enough to stamp it out. What prevents it being done? Mainly ignorance and indifference. Parents, school teachers, school boards, health authorities either don't know enough or they are too lazy to protect their children from this disease. And so the children go on dying and will until everybody knows better and does something.

Lesson for July 25

THE PASSOVER

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 12:1-49.

GOLDEN TEXT—Christ, our Passover, is sacrificed for us.

PRIMARY TOPIC—The Story of a Feast.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The First Passover Feast.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—A Memorial Feast.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Meaning of the Passover.

I. The Passover Instituted (vv. 1-23).

1. The date (v. 2).

With the institution of the passover came a change in the order of time. The common year was rolling on as usual, but with reference to God's chosen people the order was interrupted and everything was made to date from this event.

2. The lamb set apart (vv. 3-5).

This lamb must be a male without blemish, indicating that it must be both representative and perfect.

3. The lamb was killed by the whole congregation (v. 6).

This shows that it was not for the individual only, but for the entire assembly. The setting apart of the lamb was not sufficient. It must be killed, for "without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sins."

4. The blood of the slain lamb was to be placed upon the side posts and lintels of the door (v. 7). When the destroying angel passed through the land he passed over the houses where the door posts were sprinkled with blood (v. 23). This blood was the evidence that a substitute had been offered for them.

5. Israel feeding upon the lamb (vv. 8-10).

This denotes fellowship. The lamb roasted signified the action of fire in God's judgment at the cross. The head, the legs and purtenance thereof show that in the substitutionary sacrifice the understanding, the walk and all that pertains thereto were involved. This shows that the atonement of Jesus Christ involved His obedience to law as well as His suffering in the stead of His own. The eating of unleavened bread signifies that no sin is connected with or allowed in fellowship with Christ. Leaven signifies corruption (I Cor. 5:7,8). The Israelites did not put away leaven to be saved from the destroying angel, but being saved because under the shadow of the blood they put away leaven, that is, evil, in order to have fellowship with their Redeemer. The bitter herbs connected with this feast suggest the bitterness of Christ's suffering.

6. They ate the passover ready for action (v. 11).

Their loins were girded, their shoes were on their feet, and a staff in hand. The girding of the loins betokened separation from sin, and preparation and readiness for service. The feet being shod indicated their willingness and readiness to march out of Egypt. The staff in hand indicated their nature as pilgrims leaning upon a support outside of themselves. They were to leave behind them the place of death and darkness and march to the promised land.

7. The uncircumcised denied participation in the feast (vv. 43-49). Circumcision was typical of regeneration. The significance of the requirement is that only those who have become new creatures by the power of the Cross have a right to sit at the passover feast.

II. The Significance of the Passover (vv. 24-28).

It was a memorial institution, calling to mind the deliverance of the Israelites from Egyptian bondage. This was to be taught to their children from generation to generation when they came into the land.

III. The Awful Judgment (vv. 29, 30).

At midnight the Lord smote all the first-born in the land from the first-born of Pharaoh that sat on his throne unto the first-born of the captive that was in bondage, and all the first-born of cattle. There was death that night in every home throughout Egypt where the blood was not found. A great and awful cry went up from the Egyptians for there was not a house where there was not one dead.

IV. The Great Deliverance (vv. 31-36).

So mighty was this stroke that Pharaoh called for Moses in the night and requested him to be gone with his flocks and herds. The Israelites hastily made ready for their journey. They demanded of the Egyptians jewels of silver and gold and raiment. The word "borrow" in verse 35 means "demand" instead of the sense in which we use it today.

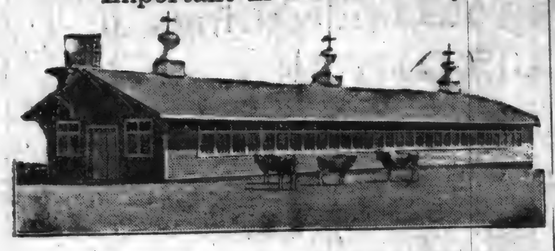
Ventilation and Good Lighting Important in Modern Dairy Barn



By WILLIAM A. RADFORD

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all problems pertaining to the subject of building work on the farm, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as editor, author and manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on the subject. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 1827 Prairie avenue, Chicago, Ill., and only inclose two-cent stamp for reply.

In building a dairy barn, if it is to serve its purpose in a satisfactory manner, careful consideration must be given to several points which are not immediately conspicuous in a superficial inspection. It is, of course, obvious that the building should be well and solidly built in order to resist the attacks of weather and the use of many years. It is now generally accepted that it should be fully equipped with the best of modern equipment to assist sanitation and reduce labor to a minimum.

The construction of a barn and its equipment is pretty well standardized. The usual form is rectangular with two rows of stalls along a central alley. The length will depend upon the number of cows to be handled. There is considerable disagreement upon whether or not the stalls should face toward the outer walls or toward the central alley, but there are good arguments on both sides of the question and very satisfactory barns have been built in both styles.

The barn illustrated here follows the plan of a central feed alley with stalls facing it from each side, and litter alleys back of each row of stalls. The equipment including stanchions, mangers, feed and litter carrier tracks and drainage gutters, follows the accepted practice.

Beyond these points however there are the problems of light and ventilation. This barn is conspicuous for its very full provision for daylight and sunlight. Both side walls are largely of glass as the windows are placed throughout the entire length as closely as construction will permit. This is a most desirable feature for plenty of sunlight is a great aid in maintaining sanitary condition and an essential in maintaining healthy, productive cows.

Ventilation is taken care of by a very complete system of ventilators such as have been produced by a thorough study of the problem of ventilation by experts in barn equipment. Plenty of clean fresh air is just as essential to sanitary conditions and healthy, productive cows as is ample sunlight.

There is another consideration, however, which neither the plan or photograph suggest and which is not so readily apparent in the inspection of the barn itself. This is the matter of insulation and it is of equal importance with any other point which has been mentioned. Barns are not, ordinarily, heated by artificial means, but solely by the animal heat. It, therefore, follows that the barn construction must be such that this heat will not be too rapidly dissipated.

This means insulation and its importance is particularly emphasized where large window area and an ample ventilating system tend to admit cold [illegible]. Too cold quarters for cattle are just as bad as lack of sunshine and fresh air and chill and dampness may very easily cause a deadly epidemic of pneumonia.

It is important then, in building the barn, to see that it is not only built solidly to resist the wind and weather, but that the walls and more particularly the roof are so constructed as to reduce the heat loss to the minimum. There are being manufactured today a number of very satisfactory insulating materials ranging through a wide latitude of prices so that the barn builder may select just the one which is best adapted to his needs and to his financial resources. The use of some one of these insulating materials is worth its cost and is absolutely necessary to the colder climates of our more northern states.

Door Treatment Makes House Individuality

In European countries today, especially Great Britain, home-owners pay particular attention to their front doors.

So much variety of color and design is apparent in them that master painters often take their apprentices on Sunday afternoons on a "tour of the doorways."

As the main entrance to the house, the front door holds an important position. Considerable individuality may be expressed in its finish, or the whole aspect of the house may be sunk into one of mediocrity by painting the front door exactly as 49 other doors are painted, without considering whether the color scheme enhances or detracts from its architectural beauty.

The simplest way to treat a paneled door is to emphasize the panels with color contrasting with that of the frame. For instance, a blue trim, with panels of a strong warm gray, would be charming; also chocolate-brown panels with cream-colored interstices and frame.

Another interesting treatment is to paint the molding a contrasting color, or two colors. To illustrate: put dark moldings on white French casement doors; or add a red stripe to the dark brown molding where the door frame is green. Orange moldings are effective with a gray trim.

For Dutch half doors with large strap hinges, a blended treatment of brown and reds, with hinges painted black, is a suitable treatment. The intelligently individual doorway is an asset to any home.

Dining Alcove Popular Now in Small Homes

More and more, except in the larger homes, the dining-room, once one of the most important and carefully studied rooms in the house, is becoming less and less an essential.

In the smaller homes, the bungalows and cottages, the dining-room has been entirely displaced by the dining alcove. The space before devoted to the dining-room may become a library, an extra chamber, a sewing-room or a room for the children to play in. The dining alcove, however, should have plenty of natural or artificial light, or it is apt to become a dark and gloomy corner.

The kitchen, that necessity in every home of whatever size, should be so placed that the smoke and odors from the cooking foods are carried away from the rest of the house. Thus it would in most cases be at the northern end of the structure, where the prevailing winds of our climate will at least blow some of the odors away.

The kitchen may very happily be designed toward the front of the house, especially if the house faces north. There can be no possible objection to such a design. The service entrance may be at the side of the building, the drying-room and the service yard being inclosed with a lattice wall, a stone wall or a high hedge.

Thick Coat of Paint Protects Cellar Door

The exterior cellar door makes a most imperative bid for protection from the forces of decay. It is subject to very rigorous weather conditions from without, and to equally trying conditions from within. The atmosphere in the best-kept cellar fluctuates from cold and damp to warm and dry. Under these unusual conditions nothing but a thick coating of durable paint, properly applied, will prevent decay.

Keep Floors Beautiful

Beautiful floors are largely a matter of prevention—the great secret is to put them in perfect condition—and then keep them that way. Doorways, passages and tracks become worn and unsightly first. You can keep these spots looking well by waxing them frequently. This requires but little time and effort if a good quality of prepared wax and floor polishing brush are used

ZOO TALKS

"I am over a year old," said the Big Horn Mountain Sheep to Billie Brownie.

"In fact," he added, "I am almost two years old."

"So am I," said his cousin, who looked almost exactly like him.

"I am a year and a half old, anyway," he added.

"I came from the Rocky Mountains," said the first Mountain Sheep.

"So did I," answered his cousin.

"They say," continued the first Sheep, "that we aren't very often seen in the zoos.

"Yes, they say that we're really quite rare."

"That is what I've heard," Billie Brownie said.

"I wonder why that is," said the second Mountain Sheep.

"I should like to know," Billie Brownie asked.

"I will tell you," the first one said. "For I heard the keeper telling some one all about it.

"He said that we were as strong as strong could be in our own homes, and we all know what the Rocky Mountain Big Horn family can do out there; how strong we are and how sure of foot and straight of eye.

"But he said that the climate here in the zoo did not agree with us very well, for the air under which we thrived, or in which we lived, was Rocky Mountain air."

"Well, I can understand that," said Billie Brownie. "The Rocky Mountain air is the air to which you are accustomed."

Billie Brownie walked over and talked to some other animals then.

"I come from South America, in a country known as Brazil," the Marsh Deer said to Billie, and to the Sinaloa White Tailed Deer.

"So did I," said the Sinaloa White Tailed Deer. "But you tell your story about yourself, for I never met you before you came to the zoo, and I am sure Billie Brownie would like to hear it."

"Immensely," agreed Billie Brownie. "I used to live in the forests along rivers," said the Marsh Deer.

"I suppose that is why you were called the marsh deer, because you love the water and marshes and soft, wet places, eh?" asked the Sinaloa White Tailed Deer.

"You have guessed right," said the Marsh Deer.

"I am one of the largest—in fact, I think I am the largest—of all the deer families which come from that country," he continued.

"My antlers may be very short, but, oh! they're strong.

"Yes, they're very strong. My feet aren't quite so strong—that is, they don't care for rough land, for they are used to the nice, soft, marshy land down south, way, way down south, in another country entirely.

"I don't feel so well when I am in the zoo as I do when free, and I have heard the keeper say that we don't always do so well in captivity.

"But I believe I will be all right, for he understands me and my ways and my habits, and I really think I will get along nicely here."

"It's too bad the zoo can't have a little bit of every country in it, as well as the animals from the different countries," said the Sinaloa White Tailed Deer. "That would please us hugely."

"Yes, that's so," said the Marsh Deer, "but a zoo couldn't be like that, I suppose, when it is only in one section or part of a country and not all over all the countries.

"It does a good deal as it is."

"True," said the other.

"True," agreed Billie Brownie.

RADIO

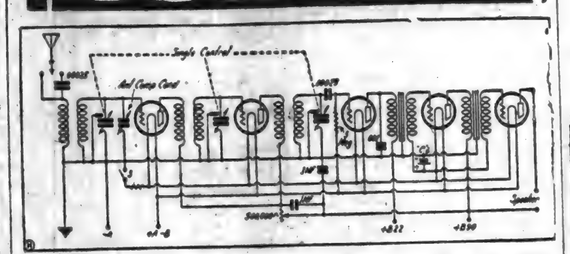

Diagram of Five-Tube, One-Control Radio-Frequency Set, Which Employs Two Stages of R. F. With Positive Control of Oscillations.

By JAMES E. CARTER

In the New York Herald-Tribune.

The radio-buying public has reached certain definite conclusions about what makes up a good radio receiver. These conclusions, in practical form, are embodied in most really successful manufactured sets of today. Some receivers have greater perfection than others. Some are of better design and construction. A few are outstanding in achievement.

A good set, first of all, whether it be home-made or factory-built, must be of correct design. The home constructor who is contemplating the building of a receiving set is naturally desirous of obtaining the utmost in the way of performance and is keenly alert to improvements in the successful manufactured set.

The first point of importance to the home set builder will be the type of circuit to use. It is needless to say that the day of the regenerative tickler feed-back type of receiver without radio-frequency amplification before the detector is over.

There remains the straight radio-frequency circuit, with positive controlled oscillation, which is probably the easiest all-around highly efficient circuit to construct.

Volume and Distance.

For the set builder who is situated fifty or more miles from a broadcast station two stages of tuned radio-frequency amplification, followed by a detector and two or three stages of audio amplification, will give ample satisfaction in the way of volume and distance. Where the user is located within 50 miles of a strong broadcasting station three stages of tuned radio-frequency amplification is necessary to work distant stations as near as 20 kilocycles either above or below the near-by station.

In the accompanying diagram the five-tube radio receiver to be described in this article is shown. This set employs two stages of transformer coupled tuned radio-frequency amplification, a non-regenerative detector and two stages of transformer coupled audio-frequency amplification. An examination of this diagram will show that there is nothing unusual in the wiring of the circuit, the chief point of interest being the way in which one-control tuning is accomplished. A triple condenser is used to tune the secondary coils of the three radio-frequency transformers, all of which are identical in construction, and a small adjustable fixed compensating capacity is connected in shunt with each of the three units of the condenser to compensate for the variation in the capacity of the wiring of each of the circuits. Also a variable antenna compensating condenser is connected in shunt with the unit of the condenser tuning the secondary of the antenna coupler. This has been found necessary to make possible efficient operation with any type of antenna. Another feature which makes the set more flexible is the small fixed condenser, which may be placed in series with the antenna. When this condenser is in use the receiver is more selective and may be operated from a large antenna without experiencing interference.

The Parts Needed.

The following is a list of apparatus actually employed in the construction of this receiver:

One three-gang Perles condenser (each section .00035 mfd.).
Three radio-frequency transformers matched for use with the condenser (Perles or home-made).
Two Thorardson audio-frequency transformers.
One Hammarlund compensating condenser (50 mmfd.).
One 500,000-ohm Centralab variable resistance.
One Centralab modulator (optional).
Five Benjamin sockets.
Two Dubilier .00025 mfd. fixed condensers.
One Dubilier .001 mfd. fixed condenser.
Two Dubilier 1 mfd. fixed condensers.
One 5 meg. Durham grid leak.
One 6-ohm rheostat.
One Carter battery switch.
Eleven Eby binding posts.
One panel 23⅛x9x3-16 inches.
One panel 10½x4¼x3-16 inches.
Two panels 3x3¼x3-16 inches.
One baseboard 22x10x⅛ inches.

The method employed to control the volume of this receiver eliminates the necessity of connecting jacks in the output of each stage of amplification. A 500,000-ohm variable resistance is connected in series with the plate supply of the two radio-frequency amplifier tubes, and by adjusting this resistance the sensitivity of the receiver may be increased or decreased as desired. By using this method to control volume any desired amount of sound may be obtained without introducing distortion. Also this method is superior to detuning the set, as it does not reduce the degree of selectivity. In addition to this volume control, the set is equipped with a "modulator"—a device to control the output of an audio amplifier. This instrument is not shown in the diagram, as it is not considered necessary when the sensitivity control is employed. For those who wish to use a modulator, however, it may be explained that it consists of a high resistance potentiometer connected across the secondary of the first audio-frequency transformer, with the slider connected to the grid of the tube.

The Triple Condenser.

As may be seen, the whole set is built around the triple condenser, which is of the straight-line frequency die cast type. This entire unit is assembled in an aluminum frame 18 inches long and 9 inches deep, which serves as a panel and coil mounting. Studs projecting from the rear of the casting serve to hold the coils in their proper position and the two small 2 by 3-inch panels, supporting the sockets for the radio-frequency tubes, are fastened to the base of the casting with machine screws.

The amplifying apparatus is mounted on the 10½ by 4¼-inch panel mentioned in the list of parts. The location of the panel and the arrangement of the apparatus is clearly shown in the drawing. After the apparatus has been mounted and wired on this panel the panel should be fastened to the baseboard with mounting brackets.

The tuned radio-frequency transformers used in this set should all be purchased with the condensers or home-made. If home-made the secondary winding should have 55 turns of No. 26 double cotton-covered wire wound on a three-inch diameter tube. The primary winding consists of nine turns of the same size wire on a 2¾-inch diameter tube.

The angle to which the coils are mounted in the set should also be noted, as this is the customary position to minimize electromagnetic coupling and is approximately 57 degrees.

When wiring radio-frequency circuits careful attention should be given to the location of the tubes in order to keep the grid and plate wires as short as possible.

The Next Job.

After the receiver has been assembled and wired as described in this article the next job is to balance the three tuned circuits and the antenna circuit to the same inductance. This is necessary to make it possible for the triple condenser to tune the three circuits to the same wave length simultaneously. To balance the receiver the antenna, ground, batteries and loud speaker must be connected to the set and a powerful local station tuned in. If it is found impossible to tune in a station with the loud speaker, head phones should be connected in its place and the dial adjusted until something is heard.

After the local station has been tuned to maximum volume with the master control of the triple condenser, the antenna compensating condenser should be tuned to gain a further increase in signal strength. The next problem is to determine whether the radio-frequency circuits require adjustment. The master control should be turned back and forth through a few degrees on the dial, and if it is found that there are two points on the dial where the signals are louder it is indicative of the fact that the radio-frequency transformers are not tuned to exactly the same wave length. If this is found to be the case the dial should be tuned to one of the points of maximum volume and the small compensating condensers on the rear of the condenser adjusted until maximum volume is obtained. After this has been done the test just described should be repeated to make sure that only one peak remains.

Enameled Wire Is Best for Outdoor Antenna

Enameled copper wire is best suited for outdoor antenna. Wire coated in this manner will not become corroded, as is the case when bare copper wire is exposed to the elements. The advantage in preventing corrosion is that the resistance of the antenna circuit is kept at a minimum. This always is desirable.

Drilling Panel

If you have drilled the holes for a condenser or another panel-mounting instrument and find the screws won't meet the threads in the condenser, drill an oversize shaft hole so the condenser can be fitted to the drilled holes.

Lead-in Wire

Lead-in wire should be taken off the aerial at the end pointing toward the section of the country from which you expect to receive most stations.

ORGANIZATIONS AND MOTHERS BOTH AGREE

Health of School Girls Important

The Girl Scouts and Camp Fire Girls are two national organizations, working side by side in the cause of healthy, happy, intelligent womanhood; training the minds of eager girls for greater service, training their bodies for the destiny that shall be theirs.

All honor to them!

Wise mothers like Mrs. Alice Louthan urge their daughters in their early teens to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Mrs. Louthan says—"I gave my fifteen-year old girl Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and it did her a wonderful lot of good. She was out of school for four months. I read the advertisements of the Vegetable Compound, and since she has taken it she has improved and has gone back to school. I recommend the Vegetable Compound to other mothers with girls who are not as strong as they should be."—Mrs. Alice Louthan, Route 4, Charleston, Illinois.

Some girls in the fourth generation are now relying on Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"Cranberries make better apple sauce than prunes," said little Audrey's cousin, Emily.

"Aw, apple sauce!" retorted little Audrey, just like that, and laughed heartily.

The Modern Youngster

Dr. Henry Hurst Lindhurst, the Denver psychoanalyst, said in an address:

"The modern youngster is excessively up to date, too much up to date. A schoolmaster in a very smart private school where caning is countenanced was about to cane a small boy for smoking in bed. As the preparations for the affair were being made, the boy said nervously, but very firmly:

"'Of course, you know, sir, I demand a local anesthetic.'"

For your daughter's sake, use Russ Bleaching Blue in the laundry. She will then have that dainty, well-groomed appearance that girls admire. —Advertisement.

The rains of the past week have been ideal, increasing the prospects for a good corn, potato and oats crop. In some low ground the corn is taking on a yellow collor, due to the wet condition and extreme heat. Generally speaking, things never were better here than this year.

Eldon McNeal of Auburn, was arraigned in the DeKalb circuit court Monday afternoon on a charge of burglary. He pleaded not guilty and was placed under a bond of $2,000. The affidavit, signed by Sheriff Wm. G. Morr, accuses McNeal of entering Ralph L. Thomas' poolroom on the north side of the court house square in Auburn last November 15 and stealing three revolvers, a set of handcuffs, a blackjack and a slingshot, of the total value of $50. The trial has been set for July 27.

Expense of rebuilding one unit of the North Side high school building at Fort Wayne, now under construction, will amount to $46,000. Whether the school corporation will stand the extra expense or attempt to collect the extra amount from the architect or building contractors has not yet been determined. And when it is determined, it will be some scrap to convince the one that it was his fault. It will be remembered that the unit in question collapsed over night, and the contractor stated that he followed the plans, knowing this particular part of the building to be weak, but that he had no authority to change it.

The "Big Six" About Shingles

Here are the six big points regarding the Ruberoid Strip-shingle which put it in a class by itself—points which appeal instantly to the man who is building a new home or re-shingling an old roof.

1. The triangular tabs save 30 shingles on every hundred square feet of roof surface.
2. The slate surface in either Venetian red or sage green is of unfading natural slate.
3. The cut corners break up the regularity of the roof lines.
4. Ruberoid saturated felt is the best grade of roofing felt made. The saturant is made of the purest bituminous materials.
5. Hundreds of Ruberoid roofs, laid nearly a quarter century ago, bear witness to the remarkable wearing quality of Ruberoid surface coating.
6. An unusually heavy back coating protects the shingles from the sweating which inevitably takes place under any roof.

We are always glad to talk about Ruberoid Strip-shingles. Let us show them to you and estimate on that job of yours.

SPECIAL ATTRACTION AT WINONA SOON

Efrem Zimbalist, who plays July 23rd, at Winona Lake, is famous for his violin mastery, but his musical activities do not end with his fine performances of violin music. Zimbalist is also a composer of songs, chamber music and even a comic opera, "Honey Dew," which had a most successful run in New York a few years ago and which subsequently proved to be highly popular on tour. His most recent composition is a sonata for violin and piano, which he has been playing on some of his programs with marked success.

In addition to being one of the most accomplished violinists of all time, Zimbalist is also a fine pianist. He made his debut at his "other instrument" when he appeared as accompanist for Alma Gluck (Mrs. Zimbalist,) and last year he made a brief appearance as accompanist for Jascha Heifetz at the famous Auer concert, in which five celebrated artists joined forces to do honor to the teacher of Zimbalist, Heifetz and many other great violinists.

Seats are now on sale for this concert at popular prices.

ONE THRESHER FOR 43 FARMS IN STATE

A harvest of approximately 97,000,000 bushels of small grains will be Indiana's contribution to the nation's store of agricultural products this year. An average of one thresher for every 43 farms in the state will be used in making this vast amount of small grain available for shipment and use.

"The hum of the thresher at work in our wheat fields should serve to remind each and every one of us of the enormous expense involved in gathering in the 182 pounds of bread that each of us consumes each year." "We cannot eat our bread without counting the cost. This is the time that the thresherman has to be paid."

Iowa leads all states in the number of threshing outfits with 3,464, while Rhode Island stands at the bottom of the ladder with but 8, according to the Foundation. In North Dakota every seventh farmer has a machine, while in Florida there is a single outfit for every 1,909 farmers. Minnesota tops the list of states in the total grain on an average of 3,224 bushels per farmer, Florida farmers thresh only 3 bushels per farmer.

The 140,000 threshing outfits in the United States represent an investment of half a billion dollars. The average carrying charge on these outfits is $560 a year. Each of these outfits last year threshed $13,833 worth of small grain or a total for all the outfits of nearly two billion dollars worth of grain. The payroll for the men running these outfits, averaging three to a machine, is nearly fifty million dollars. The average outfit runs approximately three weeks per year.

Increase In Income Is Vital To The Rural Life.

G. I. Christie Says Better Schools, Roads and Homes will Follow

Lafayette, Ind., July 17.—"If the rural districts of Indiana are to have better school buildings and equipment, better paid teachers, more and better roads, better churches and modern homes, the farm income must be increased to pay for them," said G. I. Christie, director of the agricultural experiment station of Purdue University, in speaking Friday at the rural life conference being held at the university.

"Farmers are not looking for suggestions and methods to spend money. They are seeking help that will enable them to get larger farm returns so they may meet the present heavy operating expenses, taxes and other charges. The idea is advanced by some leaders that the standard of living should be established and then the farm should be made to yield the necessary returns. This plan may lead to further trouble among some of the people. It may lead to extravagance and may result in some attempting to get that which they cannot afford.

"Good business would indicate that the standard of living in the country will go hand in hand with farm income. The farmers in the United States are rearing and are giving to the cities each year 350,000 boys and girls who take their places in the industrial and professional life of the cities. The country home, school and church, therefore, is laying the groundwork for a large urban population. The responsibility should not fall entirely on the farms. The state and country as a whole should give assistance. The country boys and girls in the poorest and most remote townships are entitled to the opportunities of education and satisfactory home life."

J. G. Kolb, professor of the University of Wisconsin, discussed "Six Cylinder Communities."

"Are the agricultural communities of today in their economic and social relationships geared to the six-cylinder pace which is present everywhere in the business world?" asked the speaker. "The first two cylinders are efficient marketing. When agriculture is as specialized as it is today, it is not possible for a producer to take his products to the consumer. There must be systems of marketing through channels of wholesaling and retailing. For the farmer it means an organization by which he can learn what the market will take and then produce for that market, rather than to raise products with the hope that they may be sold when they are harvested. As the proportion of city population increases the demand for cheap food will increase. To meet this demand, the farmer will have to control through cooperative effort his own marketing system.

"The second two cylinders are profitable farming or business management on the farm. An efficient marketing will bring back to the farmer as producer the largest proportion of the consumer's dollar. Yet it remains for the farmer to translate this price into profits by a plan of careful management."

Professor Kolb cited farms in Wisconsin where he made studies which show a steady profit throughout the year of decline, while other farms show loss, even in the best years, due to the business management of the farms.

"The third set of cylinders is the worth-while living a progressive, satisfying standard of life. Prices from marketing agencies or profits through expert management are of little avail unless they may be converted into standards of living on the farm and not to a retired life in town."

Forty years of sound agricultural planning and progress have revolutionized the economic and social life of the Danish people. From a depressed state of peasant agriculture, which threatened the welfare and prosperity of the whole Nation, Denmark stands today as the world's foremost agricultural country in the scientific organization of her production and marketing. Her people, rural as well as urban, appear contented and prosperous. Neither extreme wealth nor extreme poverty exists.

BAREE, Son of Kazan

WARY BEAVER

Synopsis.—Part wolf, part dog—when two months old Baree has his first meeting with an enemy, Papayuchisew (grown) owl. Fighting hard, the antagonists are suddenly plunged into a swollen creek. Badly buffeted, and half drowned, Baree is finally flung on the bank, but the water has destroyed his sense of direction and he is lost, lonely and hungry. For many days his life is one of fear and distress. He meets various creatures of the wild and goes through a thunderstorm. He is learning more and more. He strays into the trapping grounds of Pierrot and Nepeese. Nepeese wounds Baree with a ride, but he escapes.

The wings made a great tumult about Baree, but they did not hurt him. He buried his fangs deeper. His snarls rose more fiercely as he got the taste of Oohoomisew's blood, and through him there surged more hotly the desire to kill this monster of the night, as though in the death of this creature he had the opportunity of avenging himself for all the hurts and hardships that had befallen him since he lost his mother.

Oohoomisew had never felt a great fear until now. The lynx had snapped at him but once—and was gone, leaving him crippled. But the lynx had not snarled in that wolfish way, and it had not hung on. A thousand and one nights Oohoomisew had listened to the wolf-howl. Instinct had told him what it meant. He had seen the packs pass swiftly through the night, and always when they passed he had kept in the deepest shadows. To him, as for all other wild things, the wolf-howl stood for death. But until now, with Baree's fangs buried in his leg, he had never sensed fully the wolf-fear. It had taken it years to enter into his slow, stupid head—but now that it was there, it possessed him as no other thing had ever possessed him in all his life.

Suddenly Oohoomisew ceased his beating and launched himself upward. Like huge fans his powerful wings churned the air, and Baree felt himself lifted suddenly from the earth. Still he held on—and in a moment both bird and beast fell back with a thud.

Oohoomisew tried again. This time he was more successful, and he rose fully six feet into the air with Baree. They fell again. A third time the old outlaw fought to wing himself free of Baree's grip; and then, exhausted, he lay with his giant wings outspread, hissing and cracking his bill.

Under those wings Baree's mind worked with the swift instincts of the killer. Suddenly he changed his hold, burying his fangs into the under part of Oohoomisew's body. They sank into three inches of feathers. Swift as Baree had been, Oohoomisew was equally swift to take advantage of his opportunity. In an instant he had swooped upward. There was a jerk, a rending of feathers from flesh—and Baree was alone on the field of battle.

Baree had not killed, but he had conquered. His first great day—or night—had come. The world was filled with a new promise for him, as vast as the night itself. And after a moment he sat back on his haunches, sniffing the air for his beaten enemy; and then, as if defying the feathered monster to come back and fight to the end, he pointed his sharp little muzzle to the stars and sent forth his first babyish wolf-howl into the night.

Chapter III

Baree's fight with Oohoomisew was good medicine for him. It not only gave him great confidence in himself, but it also cleared the fever of ugliness from his blood. He no longer snapped and snarled at things as he went on through the night.

His wound was much less painful the next day, and by nightfall he scarcely had noticed it at all. Since his almost tragic end at the hands of Nepeese, he had been traveling in a general northeasterly direction, following instinctively the run of the waterways; but his progress had been slow, and when darkness came again he was not more than eight or ten miles from the hole into which he had fallen after the Willow had shot him.

All sounds now held a meaning for Baree. Swiftly he was coming into his knowledge of the wilderness. His eyes gleamed; his blood thrilled. For many minutes at a time he scarcely moved. But of all the sounds that came to him, the wolf-cry thrilled him most. Again and again he listened to it. At times it was far away, so far that it was like a whisper, dying away almost before it reached him; and then again it would come to him full-throated, hot with the breath of the chase, calling him to the red thrill of the hunt, to the wild orgy of torn flesh and running blood—calling, calling, calling. That was it, calling him to his own kin, to the bone of his bone and the flesh of his flesh—to the wild, fierce hunting packs of his mother's tribe! It was Gray Wolf's voice seeking him in the night—Gray Wolf's blood inviting him to the Brotherhood of the Pack.

Baree trembled as he listened. In his throat he whined softly. He edged to the sheer face of a rock. He wanted to go; nature was urging him to go. But the call of the wild was [illegible] for in him was the dog, with its generations of subdued and sleeping instincts—and all that night the dog in him kept Baree to the top of his rock.

Next morning Baree found many crawfish along the creek, and he feasted on their succulent flesh until he felt that he would never be hungry again. Nothing had tasted quite so good since he had eaten the partridge of which he had robbed Sekoosew the ermine.

In the middle of the afternoon Baree came into a part of the forest that was very quiet and very peaceful. The creek had deepened. In places its banks swept out until they formed small ponds. Twice he made considerable detours to get around these ponds. He traveled very quietly, listening and watching. Not since the ill-fated day he had left the old windfall had he felt quite so much at home as now. It seemed to him that at last he was treading country which he knew, and where he would find friends. Perhaps this was another miracle mystery of instinct—of nature. For he was in old Beaver-tooth's domain. It was here that his father and mother had hunted in the days before he was born. It was not far from here that Kazan and Beaver-tooth had fought that mighty duel under water, from which Kazan had escaped with his life without another breath to lose.

The forest grew deeper. It was wonderful. There was no undergrowth, and traveling under the trees was like being in a vast, mystery-filled cavern through the roof of which the light of day broke softly, brightened here and there by golden splashes of the sun. For a mile Baree made his way quietly through this forest. He saw nothing but a few winged flittings of birds; there was almost no sound. Then he came to a still larger pond. Around this pond there was a thick growth of alders and willows; the larger trees had thinned out. He saw the glimmer of afternoon sunlight on the water—and then, all at once, he heard life.

There had been few changes in Beaver-tooth's colony since the days of his feud with Kazan and the others. Old Beaver-tooth was still older. He was fatter. He slept a great deal, and perhaps he was less cautious. He was dozing on the great mud-and-brushwood dam of which he had been engineer in chief, when Baree came out softly on a high bank thirty or forty feet away. So noiseless had Baree been that none of the beavers had seen or heard him. He squatted himself flat on his belly, hidden behind a tuft of grass, and with eager interest watched every movement. Beaver-tooth was rousing himself. He stood on his short legs for a moment; then he tilted himself up on his broad, flat tail like a soldier at attention, and with a sudden whistle dived into the pond with a great splash.

In another moment it seemed to Baree that the pond was alive with beavers. Heads and bodies appeared and disappeared, rushing this way and that through the water in a manner that amazed and puzzled him. It was the colony's evening frolic. Tails hit the water like flat boards. Odd whistlings rose above the splashing—and then as suddenly as it had begun, the play came to an end. There were probably twenty beavers, not counting the young, and as if guided by a common signal—something which Baree had not heard—they became so quiet that hardly a sound could be heard in the pond. A few of them sank under the water and disappeared entirely, but most of them Baree could watch as they drew themselves out on shore.

The beavers lost no time in getting at their labor, and Baree watched and listened without so much as rustling a blade of the grass in which he was concealed. He was trying to understand. He was striving to place these curious and comfortable-looking creatures in his knowledge of things. And then, close under him—not more than ten feet from where he lay—he saw something that almost gave voice to the puppyish longing for companionship that was in him.

Down there, on a clean strip of the shore that rose out of the soft mud of the pond, waddled fat little Umisk and three of his playmates. Umisk was just about Baree's age, perhaps a week or two younger. But he was fully as heavy, and almost as wide as he was long. Nature can produce no four-footed creature that is more lovable than a baby beaver, unless it is a baby bear; and Umisk would have taken first prize at any beaver baby show in the world. His three companions were a bit smaller. They came waddling from behind a low willow, making queer little chuckling noises, their little flat tails dragging like tiny sledges behind them. They were fat and furry, and mighty friendly looking to Baree, and his heart beat a sudden, swift pit-a-pat of joy.

But Baree did not move. He scarcely breathed. And then, suddenly, Umisk turned on one of his playmates and bowled him over. Instantly the other two were on Umisk, and the four little beavers rolled over and over, kicking with their short feet and spatting with their tails, and all the time emitting soft little squeaking cries. Baree knew that it was not fight, but frolic. He rose up on his feet. He forgot where he was—forgot everything in the world but those playing, furry balls. For the moment all the hard, training nature had been giving him was lost. He was no longer a fighter, no longer a hunter, no longer a seeker after food. He was a puppy, and in him there rose a desire that was greater than hunger. He wanted to go down there with Umisk and his little chums and roll and play. He wanted to tell them, if such a thing were possible, that he had lost his mother and his home, and that he had been having a mighty hard time of it, and that he would like to stay with them and their mothers and fathers if they didn't care.

In his throat there came the least bit of a whine. It was so low that Umisk and his playmates did not hear it. They were tremendously busy.

Softly Baree took his first step toward them, and then another—and at last he stood on the narrow strip of shore within half a dozen feet of them. His sharp little ears were pitched forward, and he was wiggling his tail as fast as he could, and every muscle in his body was trembling in anticipation.

It was then that Umisk saw him, and his fat little body became suddenly as motionless as a stone.

"Hello!" said Baree, wiggling his whole body and talking as plainly as a human tongue could talk. "Do you care if I play with you?"

Umisk made no response. His three playmates now had their eyes on Baree. They didn't make a move. They looked stunned. Four pairs of staring, wondering eyes were fixed on the stranger.

Baree made another effort. He groveled on his forelegs, while his tail and hindlegs continued to wiggle, and with a sniff he grabbed a bit of stick between his teeth.

"Come on—let me in," he urged. "I know how to play!"

He tossed the stick in the air as if to prove what he was saying, and gave a little yap.

Umisk and his brothers were like dummies.

And then, of a sudden, some one saw Baree. It was a big beaver swimming down the pond with a sapling timber for the new pond that was under way. Instantly he loosed his hold and faced the shore. And then, like the report of a rifle, there came the crack of his big flat tail on the water—the beaver's signal of danger that on a quiet night can be heard half a mile away.

"Danger," it warned. "Danger—danger—danger!"

Scarcely had the signal gone forth when tails were cracking in all directions—in the pond, in the hidden canals, in the thick willows and alders. To Umisk and his companions they said:

"Run for your lives!"

Baree stood rigid and motionless now. In amazement he watched the four little beavers plunge into the pond and disappear. He heard the sounds of other and heavier bodies striking the water. And then there followed a strange and disquieting silence. Softly Baree whined, and his whine was almost a sobbing cry. Why had Umisk and his little mates run away from him? A great loneliness swept over him—a loneliness greater even than that of his first night away from his mother. He had not found comradeship. And his heart was very sad.

Poor Baree! Even the playful little beaver are afraid of him!

Plants and Animals

From the study of plants we learn how to grow them more efficiently and make the fullest use of plant products; also, because life in plants and animals is similar, if not identical, and as plants lend themselves in some ways more readily than do animals to such observations, any information we can obtain on how plants "work" will almost certainly throw some light on similar functions in animals and human beings.

Methodist Pioneer

The first Methodist preacher in America was Philip Embury, who had been in the Irish Methodist conference before coming to this country in 1766. He found a number of Irish Methodists in New York city and gathered them into a small congregation that held its meetings in his house.

WARNING AGAINST KNIGHTS OF ROAD

Practice of "Picking Up" Strangers Proved by Records to Be Harmful.

With the opening of fine pleasant weather the "sons of Esau," who have been "holed up" are again afoot on the highways of the nation, according to a motorist who doesn't follow the practice of "picking up" strangers on the road.

These restless souls, made impatient by an enforced sojourn in one place for the months of the rains and cold, are now in a hurry to be "going somewhere else."

Going Anywhere.

They are going north or south and some east or west. Few know whither they are going or how far. All that seems to interest them is a change of scenery, a new environment, new faces.

No matter on which highway one travels nowadays there one will see numbers of these "birds of passage" trudging along the road going somewhere, anywhere.

Some of them are honest workers who are seeking new jobs, and lacking the necessary railroad or stage fare, are making the journey on foot. But most are merely "tramps," "weary Willies," "bos."

There was a time when these latter "birds of passage" made a practice of giving their "patronage" to the railroads exclusively when they made their "long jumps." They rode the rods or blind baggage and the "side-door pullman" was travel "de luxe" to these gentry.

In recent years they have made a radical change in their methods of travel. The increasing number of passenger automobiles and trucks has been making the highways easy for them. Now they travel by auto—when they can.

And that is just the trouble. They so very frequently can and do. Motorists, most of whom are far more kindhearted and generous than they should be for their own good, do not hesitate to stop on signal from these "knights of the road" and carry them as far as they desire to go.

Regret Generosity.

There are many instances where autoists have regretted this generosity. It has resulted in their being found on the roadside, sans auto, sans purse and almost sans life itself.

Police annals throughout the nation are full of such cases and yet human nature is such that motorists will keep on doing the same thing time after time, heedless of the warnings contained in newspaper accounts of theft and almost fatal assaults by members of this army of "ride-grafters."

The wise motorist is he who will not give a "lift" to these gentry; who will go on his way unmindful of the stop signal so urgently waved in his path.

Study Oil Viscosity and Torque Needed to Start

Some attention has been given by the bureau of standards, Department of Commerce, to the relation between oil viscosity and the torque required to start an automobile engine in rotation or to bring it up to a given speed. From the results thus far obtained it appears that while the viscosity of the oil does have a pronounced effect upon the power required to crank the engine at speeds of 100 r. p. m. and higher, it does not have any appreciable influence upon the torque required to start the engine rotating.

Keep Glass Clear

Among the new laws affecting motorists in New York state are: The windshield and rear windows must be kept clean from posters. A license plate must be clearly visible on the front of the car. Manufacturers and dealers are required to register the sale of new cars.

Six Ways of Being Good Driver Told by Expert

Seven nationally known traffic and safety experts were asked to state what they believe were the characteristics of a safe and good driver. An analysis of the opinions submitted show that the men all agreed on the following major essentials of good driving:

1. The good driver has a high degree of self-control at all times, this control manifesting itself in various ways.

2. The good driver always maintains his car in such shape that it responds easily and quickly, thus assuring control of the car as far as the purely mechanical equation is concerned.

3. The good driver regulates his speed in accord with the conditions of the road over which he is traveling and never travels at such a rate that he cannot stop it within the "clear course" ahead.

4. The good driver invariably exercises due regard for the rights of others and always applies the simple axioms of courteous behavior.

5. The good driver accepts the safety of the pedestrians as a primary consideration.

6. The good driver keeps his mind on the road ahead, as day-dreaming or chattering at the wheel causes many more accidents than are caused by bee stings.

Mechanism for Headlights

The illustration shows an adjusting mechanism for vehicle headlights comprising a rod extending transversely across the front of the vehicle, having conical-shaped recesses in its ends, a brace rod arranged parallel with the first rod and having its ends secured to the fenders of the vehicle brackets supported by the fenders at each end of the first rod, adjustable bolts carried by the brackets, pointed ends on said bolts for engagement in the recesses of said first rod, a foot pedal and adjustable connection between the foot pedal and the first rod for imparting movement thereto.

Always Release Clutch When Rounding Corners

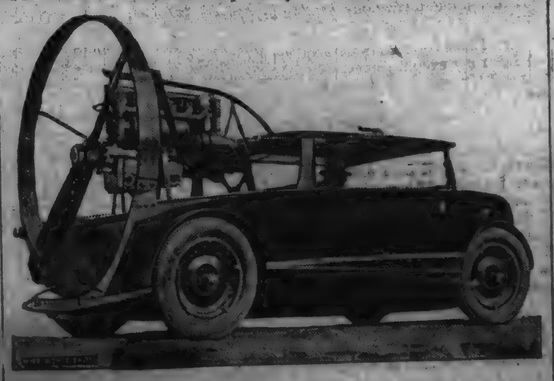
Always throw out the clutch when rounding a sharp corner. It has a beneficial effect upon the tires. Whenever the car tends to skid, due to its deflection from the straight course, a cross strain is brought to bear on the tire treads, which is directly proportional to the weight of the vehicle and the radius of the curve and proportional to the square of its velocity. If the power is applied in rounding a curve, the tendency to rip off the tires is further aggravated by the backward drag due to traction. If the clutch is released, however, the factor is eliminated and the strain is thereby reduced.

Auto Operators Advised to Start on Low Speed

When starting down a very steep grade it is advisable to place the gears in low speed. The rear wheels will then turn the engine, a movement requiring considerable effort. This produces a very good braking effect. A light car on a moderately steep hill will stop, and a heavy car will move slowly, but always under control. This is called "using the engine as a brake."

It should be practiced from time to time, so that the driver may become familiar with the method. If all the other brakes fail, this is the best and only thing to do. Practice the trick frequently, so that it becomes as easy as any other operation, and you will have cause to be thankful if ever the need arises to use it.

TRAVELS ON SNOW, ICE, WATER OR GROUND



George McLaughlin, a Bangor (Maine) garage man, has invented a machine which is capable of traveling on snow and ice, water and ground. It is equipped with a 70-horse-power aeroplane motor and will make 60 miles an hour on the road. It has airtight pontoons on both sides under the running boards, the top is constructed of wood boards in two layers crossed, with waterproofed canvas between both, to make it watertight. It is steered by the front wheels on both land and water, having no rudder. It will carry five passengers comfortably and is large and roomy; in looks, finish, and equipment it equals the best limousines. Photograph shows a side view of the novel machine.

Clothes Made From Glass

Dresses adorned with glass that can be washed and ironed are the latest novelty in London, but the glass hat made its appearance many years ago. It was an Alsatian who produced a hat resembling brown straw, which was actually made of spun glass, by a process of his own invention. This specimen cost the rather prohibitive price of $1,100.

Women Need a Mild Laxative —Not a "Physic"

Countless girls and women now know how foolish and needless it is to "purge" and "physic" themselves to avoid sick headaches, dizziness, biliousness, sallow skin, colds, or sour, gassy stomach.

They have found that Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin helps to establish natural bowel "regularity" even for those heretofore chronically constipated. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin not only causes a gentle, easy bowel movement but, best of all, it never gripes, sickens or upsets the most delicate girl or woman. Besides, it is absolutely harmless and so pleasant that even a cross, feverish, bilious, sick child gladly takes it.

Buy a large 60-cent bottle at any store that sells medicine and just see for yourself.

Baby Rides in Shawl

Mother and baby in South Wales share the same plaid shawl they did generations ago. The shawl is the emblem of maternity in this area and hardly a woman of marriageable age but shelters a baby with it. Her left hand clutches it firmly while her right is busy with household tasks. In this nest on its mother's arm the baby sleeps, eats or looks out cheerfully on the world. The shawl takes the place of the perambulator and go-cart.

Soft Pork Caused by Improper Feed

Fats of Peanuts, Soy Beans, Rice and Corn Strikingly Softening.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

From the results obtained to date in the experimental work relating to the "soft-pork problem" it may be concluded, says the United States Department of Agriculture, that the wider the ratio of softening fats in the ration to the carbohydrates and protein from which synthetic fat is formed the firmer the carcass. It is evident that the fat formed from carbohydrates and protein is always materially harder than that derived from the fats of peanuts, soy beans, rice and corn, all of which are strikingly softening.

Mixture Favored.

A mixture of corn meal 5 parts and peanut meal 1 part fed with or without supplementary minerals to pigs starting at 80 pounds and making gains of about 100 pounds in 9 or 10 weeks produces, in the usual case, hard or medium-hard hogs. When the corn meal is reduced to 2 parts to 1 of peanut meal either soft or hard hogs may result. The feeder is cautioned not to use this combination unless he is willing to accept any consequences that may come from offering soft hogs to the market.

The progress made in the solution of the soft-pork problem is discussed in Department Bulletin 1407, just published by the United States Department of Agriculture in co-operation with the agricultural experiment stations of Alabama, Arkansas, Georgia, Indiana, Kentucky, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, and Texas. Some conclusions regarding the feeding of various feeds in different combinations are listed in the bulletin. They do not, however, represent all of the results actually obtained during the progress of this work. Many other questions involved in the problem are being studied and a great mass of valuable data pertaining to them has already been obtained.

Progress Made in Solution.

The progress made in the solution of the problem in its more practical aspects has come through the definition and establishment of certain basic facts associated with the normal process of growth and fat formation in the hog. These facts pertain to the relative softening or hardening properties of the feeds concerned in the desired combinations and the reasons for such properties; the influence of the stage of development or size at which a given ration is fed, and the influence of gains on the rations.

A copy of this bulletin may be secured as long as the supply lasts by writing to the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

Alfalfa Cut Early Will Give the Largest Yield

Prof. C. J. Willard of the Ohio experiment station is opposed to the full-bloom stage of cutting alfalfa on the ground that a considerable number of the lower leaves begin to drop off soon after the tenth-bloom stage has been reached, and since the leaves are much richer in protein than the stems he holds that late cutting brings about too great a loss of the most valuable part of the plant to justify the practice. "The safe way," says Professor Willard, "to get the largest yield of alfalfa with the greatest feeding value per pound is to cut in early bloom. Eight years of experimenting have shown that alfalfa cut just before bloom will average 40 per cent leaves while that cut when it has reached the seed stage will average 38 per cent leaves. The remaining 62 per cent of the plant at the seed stage is stems, low in protein."

Farm Hints

In transplanting any of the onion tribe, snip off half the leaves.

Make succession sowings of beets, lettuce, late peas, beans, and radishes.

Any kind of millet hay fed in large quantities for a very long period of time is liable to be injurious to horses.

Young pigs will start to eat at an early age if they are allowed access to a self-feeder with corn, shorts and tankage.

Farming population in the United States, according to reports, constitutes one-third of the total population of this country. This one-third owns one-fifth of the nation's wealth.

Alfalfa wilt is a new disease which is killing out fields. If the stand becomes so poor that the crop is not profitable, fields should be plowed. It is not advisable to return such land to alfalfa or sweet clover for several years.

• • •

The feeding of only alfalfa and skimmed milk to dairy calves is not entirely satisfactory. A mixture of equal parts of alfalfa hay and prairie hay will probably give better results since leafy alfalfa fed in connection with [illegible] milk sometimes causes

Apple Blotch Easy to Cure by Sprays

Bordeaux Mixture or Lime Sulphur Favored.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Apple blotch, a destructive fungous disease attacking many of the leading varieties of apples, may be controlled by spraying with bordeaux mixture or lime-sulphur solution, according to the United States Department of Agriculture. Trees of susceptible varieties, unless systematically sprayed, are frequently killed by repeated attacks by the blotch on twigs and leaves, and nursery stock is often seriously damaged, says the department.

The disease, which is most severe in southern and middle-western orchards, was given the name "blotch" because it describes the characteristic spots appearing upon the fruit. As the disease progresses there is a running together of several spots and a change in color to a deep brown or black. A cracking of the fruit, usually in three directions from a central point, is very common. Small, nearly white spots and dark, sunken oval areas appear on the leaves, but only under extremely favorable conditions does blotch become a serious foliage disease.

Thorough sprinkling of thick, bushy trees is difficult or impossible, and these should be pruned before treatment. The spray is most beneficial when applied as a fine mist rather than a coarse stream. The latter is likely to injure both fruit and foliage, especially in the spring. Where blotch is only a minor disease the department recommends the use of lime-sulphur solution diluted at the rate of 1⅛ gallons to 50 gallons of water. However, if a fruit loss of more than 10 per cent has been caused by blotch during the previous year, the application of bordeaux mixture is advisable.

Farmers' Bulletin 1479-F, "Apple Blotch," just issued, contains much valuable information relative to the nature, economic importance and treatment of this disease. A copy of the publication may be had free, while the supply lasts, upon application to the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

Good Whitewash Recipe for General Farm Work

Numerous inquiries are received by the extension division of the North Carolina State college about the best whitewash to use for the henhouse or other outbuildings. The requests are particularly numerous during the summer. The following directions may give an effective whitewash.

"Slack a half bushel of quicklime or lump lime with boiling water, keeping it covered during the process. Strain this and add a peck of salt dissolved in warm water, three pounds of ground rice boiled in water until it is a thin paste, a half pound of Spanish whiting and a pound of clear blue dissolved in warm water. Mix these together well and let the mixture stand for several days. Heat it and apply as quickly as possible with a whitewash brush.

"Alum added to whitewash will make it stick better. Use an ounce to a gallon. Molasses makes the lime more soluble and makes it penetrate the wood or plaster more deeply. Use a pint of molasses to a gallon of whitewash. A pound of cheap bar soap dissolved in a gallon of boiling water and added to five gallons of thick whitewash will impart a gloss like that of oil paint."

Don't Neglect to Paint Various Farm Buildings

There is probably no one other thing that the average farmer neglects more than the judicious use of paint. The idea seems to be prevalent that paint is used primarily to beautify. Its use is regarded as a luxury rather than as a necessity. Paint does, of course, improve the looks of farm buildings, but it is far more useful as a means of protection, says the Indiana Farmer's Guide. Paint and varnish, while beautifying the home will at the same time lengthen the life of a valuable piece of property.

Paint is an economic necessity. It has been said that the life of a frame building will be lengthened from two to four times by constant painting. An inherited property, whose worth is beyond valuation, or a house that cost much to build may be preserved indefinitely, if it is properly painted. It may easily get beyond the painter's ability to save. Plasterers, carpenters and laborers, will cost nine times the price of the first "stitch," and in the end the painter will have to follow them.

Eradicate Burdock With Waste Crank Case Oil

The proper use of the waste crank case oil will soon rid a farm of burdock. The oil is cheap and may be secured in abundance from neighborhood garages. It is a real pleasure to watch this persistent pest give way to treatment with the waste oil. Any time before the hard stalk forms, the dock leaves should be shaved off even with the ground with a sharp hoe. On the stub, pour a little of the waste oil from a teapot or other suitable container. One application seems to kill and rot the roots of the plant. Those who have had a lot of trouble keeping the burdock down ought to enjoy using the waste oil.

WHAT A BANK SHOULD BE

The relation between a bank and its depositors is different from that between other lines of business and their customers. A bank can be useful to its clients beyond the mere depositing, paying and lending of money. A bank stands in confidential relation to its depositors. It has opportunities to help them and it has opportunities to take advantage of them. It becomes familiar with their financial transactions. It knows what deals they are planning and making. Not only their money but their business secrets are in its hands for safekeeping. Further, the bank is the support behind a man, upon which he can call for help when he needs it. It is like the reserve troops which a general keeps to use when he gets in a pinch.

Your bank, to be really useful to you, should have a strict sense of honor. It should be absolutely safe. It should be big and strong enough to furnish help when it is called for.

Where can you find such a bank?

VOL. XL ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, JULY 29, 1926 NUMBER 30

H. G. PROVINES COMES TO NEW HAVEN

Announcement was made Tuesday in the changes that will take place in principals for the Allen county high schools. H. G. Provines, who has been an instructor in the schools of Oklahoma City, Okla., for the past several years, will come to New Haven in August to resume the principalship of the New Haven schools when opened in September. Mr. Provines comes here very highly recommended, and with a knowledge of school management. Several weeks ago he met with several of the school patrons who were favorably impressed with his ability, and The Idea believes he is a man well chosen for our schools and one who will become actively engaged in New Haven civic affairs and a booster to the community.—New Haven Idea.

A CORRECTION

An item in The News of last week, under the signature of county assessor, gave the understanding that only a part of the people in St. Joe were assessed for household goods this year.

The schedules and assessors books show that almost exactly the same number of owners were assessed for household goods and for practically the same total amount as in former years.

The reduction in taxable personal property is because of mortgage notes being paid off and the money put into non-taxables, and also the leaving of the Rice Drug Store and a considerable reduction in the dry goods store.

In the township there was and is a great scarcity of feeding hogs, feeding cattle, also a shortage of brood sows and one-sixth of the sheep that could be kept.

SEEKING STATE ROAD THRU THIS SECTION

Hard surfaced roads are on the way for the east side of DeKalb county, at least those who attended the meeting of the DeKalb Motor Club at Butler, Friday evening, are quite enthusiastic over the prospects, of getting Butler and Fort Wayne linked up by a state road.

The new state road would extend north out of Fort Wayne on Parnell avenue, following the St. Joe road to the Mayhew bridge and continuing north along west bank of the river through Leo, Spencerville, St. Joe and terminating at Butler.

A committee was appointed to confer with the state highway commission in Indianapolis this week regarding the movement for the state road. It is hoped that the proposed state road will be paved within another year. The committee composed members of DeKalb and Allen counties.

Representatives at the meeting from Fort Wayne were J. P. Hutchens, manager of the Fort Wayne Motor Club; Ray Schomp, publicity director of the Fort Wayne Motor Club; Carl W. Rothert, publicity director of the Fort Wayne chamber of commerce; David Hogg, Congressman from the Twelfth district and William Tonkel, superintendent of Allen county road construction.

St. Joe and Spencerville were well represented with business men, who are backing this project, with the hope that the state commission will see the necessity of opening up this section of our state with a state road, and in this way giving our farmers an outlet for their produce as well as care for the heavy traffic east and west.

The program as outlined, will in no wise interfer with any county program of road building, but will lighten the burden of the county in the way of taxes for construction and maintenance.

The committee appointed by the meeting to go to Indianapolis, are: Harry Kees of St. Joe; Jesse Oberlin and M. S. Long of Butler and H. B. Willis, of Waterloo.

Mr. Willis presided at the meeting and he expressed the opinion that the new state road will be secured.

Mr. Tonkel gave a short talk at the meeting, telling of the building program for Allen county for 1926-27.

THE PRACTICE OF CULLING YOUR FLOCKS

Farmers who expect to realize should practice culling. It is easy to learn and when once acquired is a very profitable practice. Every person who keeps poultry will at some time during the year sort out a portion of their flock for sale. The basis for this selection is the size of the flock desired, the health of the need for money. These things are very important but if the hens are sorted according to their productive ability in addition to the above things, the sorting will be much more beneficial.

Attendance at one good culling demonstration should give one sufficient knowledg to begin work. There may be a few points that the individual may forget but if he will just make a beginning, study one of the bulletins which are usually given out at such demonstrations and then hold his culls for a few days to check his judgment, the secret of culling becomes an open book.

In culling one should always distinguish between two conditions; whether the hen is laying at the present time or not and her ability to lay.

A hen in laying condition is three or four fingers wide at the pelvic bones and four or six fingers wide between the pelvic bones and the keel bone or breast bone. She usually has a red comb, somewhat enlarged, compared with a dry scurfy comb of the non-layer. She has a large moist vent in the case of rocks and leghorns, the yellow color is faded from around the vent and the base of the beak.

The long-time layer should be laying regularly during July and August. She is identified by a broad back with the width carried well toward the tail, deep sides, square and with a "slab-sided" feel. Her head is neither beefy or too long and the body free from excess fat.

Another indication of the long layer if judged during August and September is the degree of molt. The high producing hen usually begins her molt later than the low producer. The degree of molt can be detected by the presence of pin feathers among the body feathers of the back, neck and breast, and the number of flights on the wing. The first feathers to drop are the flights. Normally there are ten but if the hen is molting, fewer will be found and a portion of the new feathers may be grown in. The new feathers are easily detected by their blue or red base caused by the presence of more blood than found in the old feathers.

Briefly, the advantages of culling during the late summer months are: the non-layers are disposed of on a higher market than if kept until fall, reducing the number of hens saves feed and leaves more room for the others, only the best layers are kept from which to save hatching eggs for the rearing of next year's pullets which practice if continued cannot help but increase the productive capacity of the future flocks.

County Agent, E. E. Stintson and Vocational Agricultural Instructor, R. L. Case, will hold a series of such demonstrations for all who are interested. You are especially urged to be present at one of these meetings.

Wednesday, August 4th., 9:30 A. M. at Chester Loucks, northeast of St. Joe and 1:30 P. M. at W. P. Miller's at Newville.

Thursday, August 5th., 9:30 A. M. at Israel Layman's, west of St. Joe and 1:30 P. M. at Wm. Staman's in St. Joe.

HOME-COMING AND DE-KALB CO. YEARLY MEETING

An 'extraordinary' event will take place in DeKalb County near Butler, Indiana, on August the first. The DeKalb County Christian Churches will hold their Annual Meeting this year in conjunction with the great Annual Home-Coming which the Newville churches have each year. This great double-header service and basket dinner will be held in the Grove on the Scoville farm, one mile east and one and one-half mile south of Butler, or three and one-half miles north of Newville, on the Township Line Road.

The choirs of six churches are uniting together to put over a big musical program and Mrs. Arlene Dux Scoville of Chicago, who has sung the gospel around the and who is said to be the greatest gospel soloist the American churches have ever produced will sing a solo at both the morning and afternoon services.

Evangelist Charles Reign Scoville, who was born between Butler and Newville and who has lived in Chicago since 1901 and who has held great revivals in nearly every English-speakking country on earth and also where he had to speak through an interpreter, is the chief speaker for the day. field." J. H. O. Smith

The Sunday Schools will convene at 10:00 A. M. Dr. Scoville will speak at 11:00 A. M. A great basket dinner for everybody at 12:00 noon. Union communion service at 2:00 P. M. A great afternoon sermon on, "America's Crime Wave, Its Cause and Cure," at 2:30 P. M. Men and women of all churches and no church invited. This is a great community service for everybody.

YOUNG PEOPIE HAVE RECORD MEETING

The Young Peoples Division of the DeKalb County Council of Religious Education, held their second annual picnic, Sunday, July 25th., in the Erick grove, south of St. Joe.

Sunday School began at 10 o'clock with Miss Myrtle Hamman of Waterloo, acting as superintendent. Music was furnished by Ross LaRue and Paul Grisky of Garrett. Ward Jackman, the County Administrative Superintendent, also of Waterloo, taught the lesson. Mr. Jackman left some thoughts that were well worth taking home and thinking about. At the noon hour a fine basket dinner was enjoyed by all present.

The afternoon was spent in playing games. Just before closing the afternoon program each township present performed a stunt which was very entertaining and thoroughly enjoyed by the young people. Immediately following the stunts the young folks joined hands and formed the Friendship Circle, and sang the first verse of "Blest Be the Tie That Binds," which is customary at the close of all Young Peoples gatherings. The significance of this verse is to show the deep Christian love and fellowship of youth for youth the best example of the Christ life we know.

There were 150 young people from over the county present which goes to show that the Young Peoples Division is on to their job. We as young people today hear the remark sometimes from our elders that we are losing our hold on Christianity and what it stands for, but when you get as fine a bunch of young folks together as were at this picnic we know that youth feels the power of Christ, and wherever they are assembled in his name you will find a true example of the highest type of Christianity.

Elegantes Are to Return in Autumn

New Frills Coming—Mauve Decade Gone Forever, Fashion Writer Says.

The victorian elegantes are to return next autumn—all elegantes are buried forever with the fettered past. You may take your choice—both opinions have been freely expressed by authoritative and not so authoritative sources ever since word filtered over from France that Paris was determined to add more elaborate details to the costumes which shall be shown at the coming August openings. On the one hand, says a fashion writer in the New York Herald Tribune, you are told that the modern woman is free, independent and whatnot—never, never will she go back even to the merest suggestion of the burdensome frilleries of the mauve decade—and another oracle will declaim, just as solemnly, a return to those gentle furbelowed days when women were women. Neither judgment is correct—indeed, neither has more than the merest essence of fact as its basis.

Of course, the serene debutante of the early nineteen hundreds is not to be resurrected for autumn. Though you may depend upon it that Paris is strongly inclined to feminize and make more complex the still simple styles which are the heritage of the war, that does not mean a revival of leg-of-mutton sleeves any more than it indicates the restoration of the Eighteenth century Watteau costume. What, however, is evident is that there will be a distinct reaction from boydenish dress next August.

The Eternal Feminine.

There is another post-war heresy which it is time to demolish. That is the sentiment that the contemporary fashionable is intrinsically different from the modish mesdames of other periods. The modern woman, according to this belief, dresses for comfort first. Let no haute couture attempt to inflict a style upon the smart demoiselle of today which shall not first consider ease of motion, freedom from stays and all the other manifestations of fashion which have gained a place in the mode since the war. Style, of course, has its place, but no style can hope to succeed which does not primarily defer to the comfort of the swiftly moving lady of this progressive age.

All this, of course, is rationalization to the nth degree. No woman has ever yet placed comfort before chic—no woman ever will. And to explain modern fashions in that way is merely the pose of an early century conscience attempting to justify styles which secretly distress it. "Short skirts," apologizes your victorian ghost, "how could you possibly get about without them? Scant bathing suits—one must swim, you know." And you don't dare disillusion the pathetic little ember of your younger days.

Yet, as a matter of fact, it isn't freedom or comfort or necessity that is at the base of modern fashions. All of these are contributing causes, but the foundation of the present mode is the late World war. If there had been no war there would have been no snug silhouette, no knee-length skirt. It is a matter of history that after every war comes a psychological aftermath, a series of fashions in which sparsely cut garments and close-fitting girdled effects are paramount. The flowing, dignified robes of peace times are discarded and there is an era which, when it has lapsed, is invariably referred to as decadent. The war cycle of fashions usually lasts from seven to ten years, and the transition back to more decorous dress is gradual, at times almost imperceptible.

Away From Mannishness.

Clearly we are now in the last seasons of the current cycle of the World war mode. Gradually tasteful women are drawing away from exaggerated mannishness. The post-war expressionists, advocates of extreme short skirts, natural outlines and similar uninhibited themes, are rapidly declining in numbers. Foibles, feminine fancies, frills and furbelows are quietly re-entering the mode, and one fine day we shall awaken to find that, sartorially, the war is really over.

Les elegantes will not return this autumn. In their ingenuous pre-war estate they will never return. But that should not obscure the fact that fashions are daily becoming more decorous, that the boydenish costume is following the simple chemise dress into oblivion, and that before another year has passed a modern species of elegante will occupy the stellar place in the mode. She will not be as heavily ornate as the belle of the mauve decade, but she will be frillier and infinitely more feminine than the extremists who have dominated fashions since the war.

Bloused silhouettes, boleros, all manner of plaits, cape effects, fringes, shawls, scarfs, are all essential requisites of the new chic, and they represent a drastic contrast from the chemise theme of 1924 and the simple jumper of last year. They are even further removed from the puffed sleeves, wasp waist and sweeping skirts of the pre-war fashionables.

Those who make their own dresses will notice a vast difference in the character of the models sketched this season in comparison with the much simpler made costumes of the two preceding summers. Two years ago, when the chemise dress was the alpha and omega of the mode it was possible to make every sketched frock from the same pattern. Last year the simple jumper was the leading theme, and even the apprentice home dress maker was able to negotiate her wardrobe without any great difficulty.

Interesting sketches portray a host of different themes, none of which can be termed simple from the viewpoint of the lady who sews her own. Some attractive models have been selected because they are among the simplest and easiest to make of the new smart Paris styles, yet the novice will find even these frocks a problem requiring careful workmanship and earnest application.

A winsome dress which you can make in linen, kasha or a washable silk, is a straight-line affair exploiting the bloused silhouette. Its effect is achieved by means of two large inverted plaits, front and back. Four oval pieces at the waistline are stitched on after the plaits have been laid. Polka-dot design on the tie, belt and cuff inserts add a chic touch which is worth copying.

Making the Coat Dress.

An afternoon dress you may make of printed silk, georgette crepe, mousseline de soie or organdie, as you prefer. The fullness at the hips is achieved by means of tucks. The foundation of this dress is a slip of the printed material. Over this is worn the coat effect overdress, which has either side of its front bordered with strips of plain materials. Here is an apparently intricate frock which you will find comparatively easy to make.

If you are still committed to the flare, another sketch may be of interest. The original of this model was made in pale green georgette—if you are thriftily inclined, substitute organdie. The only decorations on this dress, which was sketched at the Paris opera, are the half-inch tucks which appear at the waist and hemline, and the large bow of grosgrain ribbon. The skirt is cut on circular lines both back and front.

Only the venturesome will attempt to make a wrap du soir, and for those intrepid souls there is the flowered chiffon, and fox is the trimming fur. The foundation of this wrap is a huge circular cape with a smaller circle superimposed, the latter set on low in back and high in front.

An attractive accessory which is quite essential this season and easily made is the Spanish scarf. If you intend to make a scarf use some such material as a square of lame, brocade, printed silk or chiffon, and don't forget the silk fringe. The flower at the shoulder of this model is also of chiffon—the scarf itself is merely a square of chiffon, picoted.

Half of the joy of life is in little things taken on the run.

Who has no inward beauty, none perceives, though all around is beautiful.

GOOD THINGS TO EAT

For an afternoon tea cake try this tasty little one which you will like:

Orange Cakes.—Cream one-third of a cupful of butter, add one-fourth of a cupful of sugar, cream well and add four teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one-half teaspoonful of salt, the grated rind of an orange and two cupfuls of flour. Pat out thin into small cakes, prick with a fork and bake in a quick oven. Immediately after taking from the oven, open with a fork and insert a lump of butter. Serve at once.

Maple Cookies.—Take one cupful of granulated sugar, one cupful of maple sugar, one cupful of butter, two well-beaten eggs, two tablespoonfuls of water and flour to make a stiff dough. Cut into balls, roll in powdered sugar and bake in a hot oven.

Cheese Balls.—Take one and one-half cupfuls of grated cheese, add one tablespoonful of melted butter, two tablespoonfuls of flour, and when well blended add three tablespoonfuls of milk, a dash of pepper and salt and stiffly beaten whites of two eggs. Form into balls, roll in cracker crumbs and fry in deep fat. Drain on brown paper. Serve with lettuce salad.

Cheese Salad.—Dissolve a tablespoonful of gelatin in four tablespoonfuls of water, add half a pound of grated cheese and a pint of whipped cream, season well with salt and paprika, with a few dashes of cayenne. Pour into a wet mold and allow to become firm. Turn out and cut into slices, serve on lettuce with mayonnaise dressing or with any desired dressing.

Peach Sherbet.—Put a pound of sugar and a quart of water on to boil for twenty minutes; let cool, then add one and one-half cupfuls of peach pulp, the strained juice of an orange and the juice of half a lemon. Freeze. Half of the water may be used and a pint of rich milk, making a richer ice.

For a mint sherbet, use a bunch of mint cooked in the water and add the other ingredients and thin cream; freeze.

Duchess Cream.—Take six tablespoonfuls of tapioca, cook until clear in water to cover, cool, add a pinch of salt, one cupful of sugar, the juice from a can of pineapple, the juice of two oranges and two lemons; cook until thick. When cool add the pineapple cut into dice, one cupful of nuts and a pint of whipping cream. This makes enough to serve a dozen amply.

A Few Choice Desserts.

A delicious and well prepared dessert will often help a plain meal which precedes it, when the dishes were not all that one wished. A plate of stuffed figs, dates or prunes will often serve for a finish to a meal, leaving one fully satisfied.

During the warm weather iced dishes and frozen creams and water ices are greatly appreciated. The water ices are not especially nourishing, and with a hearty meal one needs a light dessert.

Two or three foods digest better in the stomach than a combination of six or more. If we treat the body as we would a nice piece of machinery we will not overfeed it nor overwork it.

When we overeat we waste fuel and choke the fires of the body engine through imperfect combustion. A stuffed furnace can neither draw well nor give off heat.

Orange and Lemon Sherbet.—Take the juice of two oranges, two lemons, and two cupfuls of sugar with a quart of thin cream and freeze as usual.

A mint sherbet to serve with a roast leg of lamb is prepared with a cupful of shredded mint, fresh and well washed. Pour a cupful of boiling water over it and let stand well covered to steep for ten minutes, then drain and add the mint water to the juice of two lemons, a cupful of sugar and a cupful of thin cream, adding enough water to make the mint liquor an even cupful. Freeze as usual.

Apricot Sherbet.—This is delicious with any dinner. Take a can of apricots, put them through a sieve, add more sugar and a can of water. Freeze.

Dainty Dessert.—Take a pound of marshmallows and a cupful of pecan meats, cut fine, cut the mallows into quarters and add enough whipped cream to blend and hold them and the nuts together. Put a tablespoonful of pineapple juice into a sherbet cup, fill with the whip and garnish with pineapple or a cherry.

Cream Peach Cake.—Bake a layer cake, using two tablespoonfuls of butter, one cupful of sugar, two well-beaten eggs, one-half cupful of milk and one and one-half cupfuls of flour sifted with two scant teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Put very ripe peaches, peeled, through a sieve, sweeten and mix with almond-flavored whipped cream. Use for filling.

INDIANA BREVITIES

The summer meeting of the Indiana Typographical union was held in Marion.

Arthur Wiseman, age seven, son of Mr. and Mrs. David Wiseman of Greenville, Floyd county, is dead of hydrophobia after being bitten by a dog.

An ordinance prohibiting low flying of airplanes over Richmond probably will be the outcome of complaints filed with police as a result of actions of Richmond aviators.

The annual state conference of the Methodist Protestant church will be held at the camp ground in Marion, August 17 to 23. The week preceding the conference will be occupied with religious services.

Traveling in five automobiles and trucks, 30 boy and girl scouts of Camden are on a 1,000-mile automobile trip through the East. Scout executives are accompanying the youngsters upon their expedition.

Extensive remodeling to meet the plans of President Louis B. Hopkins have been started on the interior of Center hall at Wabash college and on the Caleb Mills house, which is to become the home of President and Mrs. Hopkins.

Between 4,000 and 5,000 women will take part in the convention of the International Federation of Catholic Alumnae at St. Mary's college September 4-10. The organization embraces a membership of 60,000, representing more than 500 institutions of learning.

The proposal of Allen county authorities to issue $87,000 in bonds to build a bridge across the St. Joseph river at Parnell avenue, Fort Wayne, has been approved by the state tax board. This is part of a total bond issue of $150,000 by that county to build three bridges.

Charles Wright, fifty-eight years old, died in Terre Haute of a pistol bullet wound received in a quarrel with Tommy Ryan at the Wright residence in Taylorsville. Ryan, who is in jail without bond, told police that Wright fired at him twice before he used his own gun.

The American Legion of Indiana will go to its state convention at Marion, August 30 and 31, with the largest membership increase in its history, Clarence A. Jackson, state commander, asserted. A membership gain of at least 80 per cent over last year's total practically is assured, he said.

Contracts for the construction of three county buildings in Crown Point at a total cost of more than $200,000 were awarded by the county commissioners. Work started at once on the Criminal court building, an extension to the county jail and a comfort station in the Lake county fairground.

Purdue university is to have a new department of instruction, forestry, it is announced by President Edward C. Elliott, and Prof. B. N. Prentice of the biology department will be placed at its head. The new department will come under the direction of the school of agriculture and the agricultural experiment station.

In an effort to relieve mail congestion in the South Bend post office, a movement is being fostered to place South Bend among the airports of the nation. Mail planes now fly a few miles south of South Bend, and it will be an easy proposition to arrange with local commercial flyers to make connections with the New York flyers at Lakeville, St. Joseph county.

The members of the executive committee of the Indiana Historical society will hold their annual meeting at Terre Haute this year, probably in August. They will visit a number of points of interest to historians at Terre Haute and vicinity, including Fort Harrison, the scene of one of the struggles the pioneers waged with the British and Indians for the possession of this territory.

Lake James state park—the gift of the people of Steuben county—was dedicated with appropriate ceremonies. The new park is located in the extreme northeast corner of Indiana, and is only a few miles from both the Michigan and the Ohio state lines. It is one of the most accessible parks in the state, being very close to state road No. 25, which recently was designated as federal highway No. 20. It also is in the path of transcontinental traffic.

The revival of the Prohibition party in Indiana was started when a small group of members of the party held a state convention in Indianapolis. Rev. William H. Harris of Indianapolis, was nominated for United States senator, long term, and Dr. Albert Stanley of Indianapolis, was nominated for United States senator, short term. Other nominations were as follows. Secretary of state, Robert Dyer, Lapel; treasurer, Mrs. Margaret M. Nold, South Bend; auditor, Dr. John Wert, Frankfort; superintendent of public instruction, Floyd Beghtel, University Heights, clerk of the Supreme court, Mrs. Etta Miller, Indianapolis.

Rats have infested the town of Orange, and citizens are planning to unite to eliminate the rodents, which in many cases have killed chickens, causing heavy loss. Wilbur McKee reports killing 62 rats in one day with a club and poison.

Judge Robert C. Baltzell of the Federal District court in Indianapolis issued a temporary restraining order against 71 striking employees of the Nurre Mirror Plate company of Bloomington, prohibiting them from interfering in any way with other employees who wish to work.

WHY WE COUGH

MOST everyone coughs more or less, at some time in the year. Some of us have a good reason, some of us do it from force of habit. It is not a disease but a symptom and a symptom of so many conditions and due to so many causes that, as one cause will not explain all coughs, so one remedy will not help all coughs. People who suffer from a constant cough are always being told by their friends to try this or that cough sirup, lozenge or troche which has proven "just wonderful" for them but may not fit their friend's case at all.

A cough, says the Medical Journal and Record, usually arises from some cause in the chest, lung, larynx or nose, although it may be due to some disease or irritation in some distant part of the body. It is caused by stimulation of the nerves which go to the mouth, throat or lungs. As these same nerves are also distributed to the nose, irritation of the nose may cause tickling in the throat and a cough as a result. Inflammation and congestion of the nose may cause a dry hacking cough in the throat. In children, adenoids in the nose not only irritate the nerves but cause mouth breathing, so that the patient is compelled to breathe through the mouth and especially to sleep with the mouth open, so that the throat is always dry. This is very apt to produce a cough especially early in the morning.

If the soft palate is too long or is relaxed, so that the uvulva, the little point which hangs down in the center of the back of the mouth, is constantly tickling the throat, a dry, persistent cough will result, especially on going to bed at night.

Irritation or inflammation of the pharynx, the space where the mouth, the larynx and the back of the nose come together, will frequently produce cough. Inflammation of the tonsils will cause a cough, especially at night. The cough in croup is brasen and barking and once heard is never forgotten. Nervous and hysterical persons often have a dry, short, nervous cough which is worse and more frequent if the patient is excited and nervous. Indigestion causes its own peculiar cough, due to the presence of gas in the stomach and so usually noticed after meals. Gallstones, tapeworms, heart disease or inflammation of the kidney may also cause cough. In the first stages of pneumonia there is a dry, painful cough, becoming later more constant and accompanied by profuse expectoration as the disease progresses. Pleurisy has a dry, sharp, painful cough with no expectoration.

LOCKJAW IN CIVIL LIFE

EARLY in the World war, the French and English surgeons were greatly disturbed by the amount of lockjaw that developed in wounded men. The area in France in which most of the fighting was done was the agricultural district, where for centuries the French farmers had fertilized their fields with various kinds of animal manures and fertilizers. Owing to the universal mud, trench warfare and the fact that wounds caused by high explosives were generally torn and lacerated wounds, almost every wound received was more or less contaminated by field dirt. As a result, lockjaw followed a large percentage of wounds.

It has been known for many years that jockjaw was caused by a germ found in soil. In 1885, Nicolaier found a germ in the top soil of fields and gardens, which was the same as the germ found in wounds in cases of lockjaw.

So frequent was this infection among the wounded in France that in the later years of the war every wounded soldier, as soon as he reached a dressing station, was given a preventive dose of tetanus antitoxin. Tetanus is the scientific name for lockjaw and the two names, the popular one and the scientific one, describe the two most prominent symptoms of this terrible disease; the locking of the jaw through the rigid condition of the jaw muscles and the spasms of the muscles of the whole body which cause convulsions.

While it is so widely scattered as to attract little attention in times of peace, the reports of the United States government show that every year there are about fifteen hundred deaths in this country from lockjaw. About 20 per cent of these are due to accidents around railroads, mines, mills and factories. The remaining 80 per cent, or about one thousand two hundred deaths per year, are caused by accidents on the farm due to farming tools and farm machinery. Naturally, they are more common in warm weather than in cold weather.

Lockjaw may develop in any cut scratch or other injury in which the skin is broken and where the wound comes in contact with top soil or stable dirt. It does not develop until three or ten days after injury. It may be as long as sixty days. There is fever, pain, a chill and spasms of the muscles with contracted muscles of the neck and jaw. The mortality is very high, from 85 to 95 per cent of all cases.

The only treatment of any value is antitetanus serum given early and in large doses.

DELIVERANCE AT THE RED SEA

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 14:1-31.

GOLDEN TEXT—The Lord is my strength and song and he is become my salvation.

PRIMARY TOPIC—God Takes Care of the Children of Israel.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Israel Saved at the Red Sea.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How a Nation of Slaves Was Set Free.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Divine and Human Leadership.

I. Israel in Straitened Circumstances (vv. 1-12).

1. Going out of the land of Egypt (13:18).

The tenth stroke from the strong hand of the Almighty made Pharaoh willing to let Israel go. The Israelites went out from Egypt on their way to the promised land with a high hand. Through the land of the Philistines the journey would have been comparatively short, but God commanded them to turn from that way lest going through the land of the Philistines they would see war and desire to turn back to Egypt. The way of the wilderness was a longer route, but it had many valuable lessons for them. By this way they escaped the experiences of war which would have come to them at the hand of the Philistines, but they learned the crookedness and perverseness of their own hearts (Deut. 8:12).

2. Hemmed in (vv. 1-3).

At the Lord's direction they turned from their first course and were made to face a great difficulty. The Red sea was before them and mountains on either side. However, they should have been encouraged because the Lord went before them by day in a pillar of cloud to lead them the way and by night in a pillar of fire to give them light. He took not away the pillar of cloud by day, nor the pillar of fire by night (13:21, 22).

3. Pursued by Pharaoh (vv. 4-12).

The stricken Egyptians had now recovered from their sorrow, and perceiving the straitened circumstances of the Israelites they interpreted this to mean that Moses was unable to lead them out of their difficulty. Therefore they went in pursuit, hoping yet to prevent them from leaving the country.

II. The Miraculous Escape of the Israelites (vv. 13-22).

Though they were in a straitened condition they had no reason to fear, for the Lord had led them there. There seems to have been a twofold object in leading them into this particular place.

1. To strengthen the faith of the people. To be delivered from such circumstances would impress upon them anew the reality of the love and power of God. The people, as usual, displayed their unbelief and even censured Moses for leading them out of Egypt. Moses replied, "Fear ye not, stand still and see the salvation of the Lord." Standing still in such a trial is faith taking hold on God's promises. God said, "Wherefore criest thou unto Me? Speak unto the children of Israel that they go forward." The lifting up of the rod simply served as something tangible upon which their faith could act. They were to go forward a step at a time without raising any question as to the outcome, for from the source from which came the command, came the power to obey.

2. To lay a snare for the overthrow of the Egyptians.

Those who will not heed the warning judgments of God may be allowed to go to their destruction under the presumption that the Almighty is helping them.

III. The Overthrow of the Egyptians (vv. 23-27).

Having seen the Israelites go across the sea dry shod, Pharaoh and his people madly pursued them. They insanely thought that they in their unbelief could follow in the wake of God's children. The Lord looked forth from the cloud and wrought confusion among the Egyptians. He not only looked upon them but took off their chariot wheels, which caused them to realize that God was fighting against them. He then directed Moses to stretch forth his rod and bring destruction upon the Egyptians.

IV. The Song of Triumph (15:1-21).

Standing on the other shore of the Red sea they could fittingly sing the song of triumph because of their miraculous deliverance and the overwhelming defeat of the Egyptians. They attributed it all to God. All self-consciousness and importance were left out. In a glad coming day, a similar but much larger company, will sing the same song with an important addition, namely, the "Song of the Lamb." (Rev. 15:3).

The Deep Well of Life

Oh, ye poor, dry and dead souls, why will ye not come hither with your empty vessels and your empty souls, to this deep and sweet well of life, and fill your empty vessels.—S. Rutherford.

Help Improve the World

The world was never meant to satisfy. It is man's business to do what he can to improve it; then he is to leave it and pass on to a higher life, to eternal joy.—W. Robertson Nicoll.

RADIO

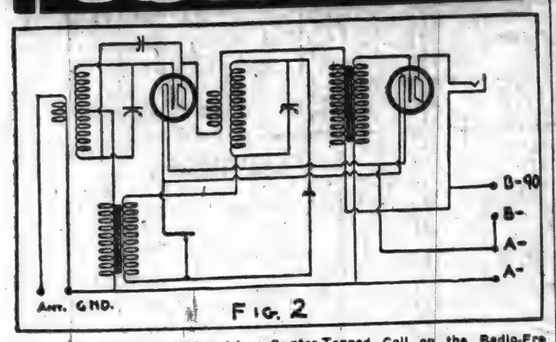

Diagram of Circuit Employed in a Center-Tapped Coil on the Radio-Frequency Stage.

By R. S. DORNBROCK,
In the Chicago Evening Post.

It is the purpose of the writer to herein point out the application to a well-known type of reflex circuit of a circuit modification long known but little used.

This is the use of a center-tapped coil in the radio-frequency stage, the lower terminal of which is connected to one of the small midget condensers, the opposite side of this midget condenser being connected to the plate terminal of the tube.

This circuit modification is probably most used in certain superheterodyne circuits, wherein a center-tapped loop is employed in connection with the midget condenser "to obtain regenerative action." Then again we see circuit diagrams showing the same arrangement in a tuned radio-frequency circuit, where it is described as "the Rice method of neutralization."

Cuts Out "Blanket" Stations.

A diagram of this circuit modification is shown in Figure 1. Whatever its action, the point is that it exerts a most beneficial influence upon the reflex circuit.

In the circuit set up by the writer, selectivity was very greatly increased, local stations which covered from 15 to 25 degrees in the regular arrangement were made to cover only 4 or 5 degrees on the dial. This was in a location about ten miles from the nearest station, and on an antenna 100 feet long with 35-foot lead-in.

In another location nearer to the bulk of the stations, and on an antenna 75 feet long with 30-foot lead-in, locals were confined to 2 or 3 degrees on the dials, excepting one which was only a few blocks away. This station operates on 250 meters, and blanketed about everything below it on a straight-line frequency condenser, but slightly below 300 meters even this station could be entirely eliminated. All stations above were received excellently.

Tap Is Only Change.

A diagram of the circuit employed is shown in Figure 2. Nearly every one possessing a set employing the circuit which is shown modified in this diagram will recognize it. It has been very popular and the modification outlined in this diagram will help it perform more efficiently in an area where a great majority of sets will pick up at least a couple of stations at once. This circuit is noted for its great volume and low operating upkeep, but in its original form tunes a little too broadly for efficient service.

No information of a technical nature is given, as those of the listening fraternity who do their own tinkering will understand from the diagram exactly what is to be done. No changes in apparatus need be made excepting to bring a center tap from the antenna tuning coil secondary.

Controls by Midget Condenser.

The midget condenser should be located on the panel, since it provides an excellent volume control.

Incidentally, the writer has observed in very recent issues of various radio magazines that this method of controlling radio-frequency is being quite frequently advocated.

Your Grid Leak and Its Important Duty

The action of the grid leak seems to be little understood by the average fan. Great care may have been taken in wiring up the set and in buying the best of parts. Yet when the receiver is put into operation the results secured are very poor. Very often the whole trouble lies in the grid leak, which may not be of the correct value or may be noisy in operation.

To make the action of the grid leak clear we will compare it to the carburetor on an automobile. The carburetor vaporizes or breaks up the gasoline, then mixes it with a certain proportion of air to form an explosive mixture. The supply of air taken into the carburetor is regulated by a choke valve. The carburetor of a radio receiver is the detector tube and the choke valve is the grid leak.

If the choke valve on the carburetor is closed too much, it does not allow enough air to enter and makes the mixture rich with the result that the motor chokes up or may stop altogether. If the grid leak is of such a value that it allows too high a negative charge to accumulate on the grid the tube chokes or paralyses and the set will not operate or operates very poorly. This is the same effect as when the choke valve on the carburetor is closed too far and does not allow enough air to enter.

If, on the other hand, the grid leak is of such a value that the negative charge on the grid leaks off too rapidly the receiver loses its sensitivity. You can readily see, therefore, that it is important that the size of the grid leak be correct so that the amount of energy the grid can handle is always just right. Use a good-quality grid leak. Secure three or four different sizes and try them out until you find one that gives the best results. Do not try to save money by buying a cheap grid leak or one made by an unknown manufacturer, for very often a poor grid leak is the unsuspected cause of poor or noisy reception

Shield Transformers

When your tuned radio-frequency receiver oscillates so readily it is hard to tune, try shielding the R. F. transformers by inclosing them in a metal box. Intercoupling probably is the trouble with the set.

Prevents Damage

Ammonia or soda water, quickly applied, will prevent damage from acid dropped while taking a hydrometer reading of the "A" battery.

When the Tubes May Be Cause of Your Trouble

When you notice that your radio set is losing in volume, the distant stations fade and disappear, and the quality sounds like a rock crusher, what do you do?

Very likely you look for poor connections, test the batteries or possibly replace them, change the tubes around, add a "C" battery and juggle grid leaks. And to discover? Probably, that the quality remains as poor as before. What next?

Under such perplexing circumstances did you ever give the tubes a thought? Tubes do not last indefinitely. Gradual deterioration of their filaments ultimately results in poor reception. The filament of a tube may still burn, but the coating put on its surface to aid emission of electrons—those tiny particles which give the tube its "life"—eventually disappears. When the coating vanishes the radio set loses its sensitivity and volume and may become very noisy. It is then time to buy new tubes.

When Buying Your "B" Battery Eliminator

It is important when buying a "B" battery eliminator to determine whether or not the device is capable of supplying enough current to operate the set, for if it does not distortion will result. To test the capacity of a "B" battery eliminator connect it to the receiver with which it is to be used and connect a high-resistance voltmeter across its terminals. If, when a loud signal is tuned in, the pointer of the voltmeter remains almost stationary at a voltage which is sufficient to properly operate the set, the device will prove satisfactory.

Electric Machines Are Notorious Intruders

X-ray machines are notorious generators of vagrant radio waves that make themselves audible in near-by receiving sets as harsh, grumbling noises. The small portable "violet ray" affairs sold for home electro-therapeutic treatment are also bad offenders and their use during evening hours should be as limited as possible.

Worth Knowing

An insulated wire will pick up the broadcast programs just as easily as a bare wire, as the waves penetrate the covering without the least difficulty. If the lead-in is insulated it will act as a part of the aerial.

It Was a Thing of Beauty

By JANE OSBORN

(Copyright.)

JIM DAWSON had smoked so many pipes that dreary December day that there was no satisfaction to be found in smoking another. And for a day or so there wasn't much work to be done—just watchful waiting for himself and his companion, Barry Brown.

Jim Dawson and Barry Brown, two promising young men who had specialized in ceramics in college, had been sent out here to this forlorn, almost deserted settlement in the woods, to reopen the deserted clay works in that region. The few laborers whom they needed to start with drove their ancient flivvers over the soft sandy paths to the works every day, rather than risk the ennui of living there. It had seemed best that Messrs. Dawson and Brown and a man to cook for them should remain there night and day.

"Wherefore and why the smile?" asked Jim Dawson—for Barry Brown sat there, pipe in hand, gazing at the discolored wall on the opposite side of the room with a suggestion of a smile on his face.

"I contemplate the beauty of the wild cherry," replied Barry. "My physical eyes may be looking at that mangy space of discolored, peeling plaster, but my 'inward eye' is feasting on a vision of massed blossoms against a blue spring sky."

Jim snorted his disgust.

"You could also contemplate the beauty of wild cherry," went on Barry. "At least that's what a young Jap I knew used to tell me. He was a student in college getting along on next to nothing and, honestly, his theory seemed to work."

"Well, I never did have much imagination," said Jim, shifting uneasily in his kitchen chair.

"But it isn't imagination," persisted Barry. "At least my Jap friend said it wasn't. He said it was just close observation and a good memory—faculties that any one can cultivate. Whenever you see some joyous object—which to our Jap would have been a wild cherry tree—you observe it intently. Later when you need something to cheer you up you just have to draw back the curtain."

"Aw, bunk," said Jim. "The whole idea is all wrong."

Two days later Barry sat lingering over the bare wooden table where he had just dined with Jim, and regarded the discolored walls opposite with a look of dire gloom. Then he looked at Jim and he whistled, for Jim—for the first time in many weeks—wore a blithesome smile.

"I contemplate the beauty of wild cherry blossoms," paeroted Jim.

Apparently Jim's happy mood was not a mere transitory affair. He smiled at times for a full week. At length Barry could stand it no longer. "See here, Jim," he said. "When I told you about that crazy Jap and his theory of happiness you were right in what you said. It's no sort of notion for a white man. And, great Scott," he went on with considerable animation, "you seem to be bitten by it. Well, you've got a good imagination—"

"Not at all," cried Jim, jumping to his feet and waving his pipe at Barry. "Imagination wouldn't satisfy me at all. It's just close observation and a good memory. That's what you said yourself. I acted on your advice. I observed — my cherry blossoms — and then as I sit here of a dull evening I exercise my memory."

"Cherry blossoms—you are crazy," Barry scoffed. "Where have you seen cherry blossoms around here?"

"Figuratively speaking, Barry—your Jap friend would have told you that any beautiful object would answer—the exquisite beauty of the seagull's flight, the magic of wild cherry in bloom, or perchance even a country schoolma'am hurrying through the woods on a dreary December afternoon. All schoolma'ams are not ungainly. This one was charming—as charming as cherry blossoms—so, to make a long story short, I profited by your instruction and that of your Jap friend—and observed. To observe more fully I followed her. Not understanding my purely philosophical interest the little school dame was frightened and ran and I had to run after her in order to catch up with her and apologize. She accepted my apology and I escorted her home. Later—when I had my afternoon off and you thought I'd driven into the city—I called again. Then I explained the cherry blossom theory—or rather your cherry blossom theory, Barry—"

"She must have thought you were in love with her," said Barry.

"Naturally I wanted her to think I was in love with her," announced Jim, "and to prove my sanity I told her that the cherry blossom theory was not my own. That it was you who suggested it—and I said I'd bring you around to call this evening. We are practically engaged—"

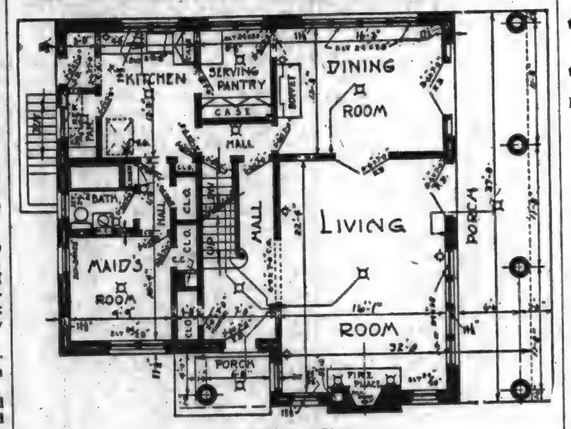
"Let me out," began Barry, but Jim continued:

"She said she would have another girl with her—the other teacher in the country school—a charming damsel—a possible cherry blossom for you."

America's First Theater

The first theater in America was built in 1716 in Williamsburg, Va., on a site facing what was then called and is still known as the Palace Green, a narrow park running north from Duke of Gloucester street, and, in colonial days, extending to the ... governor's palace.

Attractive and Well Arranged Home of Eight Rooms for Large Family



First Floor Plan.

By WILLIAM A. RADFORD

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give ADVICE FREE OF COST on all problems pertaining to the subject of building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as editor, author and manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on the subject. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 1827 Prairie avenue, Chicago, Ill., and only inclose two-cent stamp for reply.

In spite of the vogue of small compact houses, there are still many families which require a rather large house, one which has a number of bedrooms and plenty of space for the large family. But even such a family wants as compact an arrangement as is possible in order that the care of the house may not involve too great an amount of labor and the construction cost may not be too great.

An unusual amount of space is available in this eight-room house, and it is conspicuously well arranged. There is an entrance from the grade-level porch directly into the living room, but a second entrance at one side opens into a reception and stair hall from a second and smaller porch. The living room and dining room extend across the front of the house. Back of these are service arrangements. These include the kitchen with a large serving pantry, separated from the dining room by a short hall, and the maid's room with separate bath. The latter rooms are also separated from the kitchen by another short hall in a most satisfactory manner.

In addition to a closet in the maid's room there is also a closet in the adjoining hall, a small closet off the kitchen, and a coat closet in the reception hall. Besides the large serving pantry there is a smaller pantry for the refrigerator off the kitchen, and of course a rear entrance through an entryway.

The stairs lead from the reception hall to a central hallway on the second floor. Here we find four full-sized bedrooms and two bathrooms. The provision of closets on this floor is most complete. Each of the three bedrooms has a large closet, while the fourth bedroom has two closets. This latter room is also provided with an attractive window seat and opens into one of the bathrooms. This bathroom may also be reached from the hall, and adjoining it is a large closet. At the other end of the hall is still another closet, while a linen closet is provided in the second bathroom.

Each of the bedrooms has windows on two sides and excellent cross ventilation is possible. While all are of good size, one is an exceptionally large bedroom, measuring 16 feet 11 inches by 22 feet 3 inches, and the second bathroom opens off this large bedroom.

A conspicuous and important feature of this home is the very complete electric wiring which has been provided. It is truly an electrical home, lights being provided at every desirable point even to those inside the closets. There are also convenience outlets to care for all the electrical appliances which are considered almost a necessity in the modern home and which do so much to relieve the labor of housekeeping.

In exterior appearance this home gives an impression of strength and permanence, not only because of the low foundation line and the roof lines, but also because of the solid pillars which support the porch roof. This roof is formed by the overhang of the second story, but heaviness is avoided by the use of the dormer on the second floor. In finish the walls are of stucco up to the second floor, and above they are of shingles laid wide to the weather.

The chimney, too, is of stucco finish as are also the porch pillars. Double hung windows have been used and the upper ones are equipped with shutters which add much to the general effect. With the background of trees and the well-planned planting of shrubbery, the whole effect has been enhanced, demonstrating the importance of the landscaping as the finishing touch to the well-planned home.

Flashings May Fail Causing Much Trouble

Construction experts state that there is no more frequent cause of roof-failure than a rusty flashing. And yet one can easily avoid this expensive trouble by using sheet copper for this purpose.

By "flashing" is meant the sheet metal used on roofs at points where there are angles or valleys in which the roofing material comes in contact with the chimney, dormer windows, or other vertical projections through the roof.

Many are the times when, all unnoticed, a poor flashing material rusts and the resulting leakage causes costly damage to the interior of the house.

Concrete Forms

Spruce and Norway pine are acceptable for making forms for concrete and are reasonable in cost. For form work which requires great precision, such as window-sills and lintels and other pieces of ornamental concrete, white pine will be found the best lumber to use.

Good Roofing

Thousands of buildings go to ruin each year, because of poor roofing. Many other buildings are saved for long terms of future service by re-roofing with slate and no inconsiderable amount of the roofing slate quarried is utilized for re-roofing purposes.

Slip-Proof Tile

Stair tile that is slip-proof should be used wherever hard service is called for or there is slip hazard. Thoughtlessness here may cause an unfortunate accident.

THE DIVINER

SYNOPSIS—Idly fishing Hermanos creek, in California, Caleb Warner, civil engineer and a New Englander, is witness of the end of a coyotte pulled down by two wolfhounds, urged on by a girl rider. Admiring the hounds, he introduces himself, and learns her name is Clinton. With western hospitality she invites him to the ranch to meet her father. At the Clinton home Warner learns his new friend's name is Betty. He is welcomed by her father, Southern Civil war veteran and owner of Hermanos valley. He tells them something of his ambitions and his feeling that he is destined to be a "Water-Bearer." In the town of Golden Warner shares an apartment with his old Columbia college chum, Ted Baxter, careless and somewhat dissipated youth, only child of his widowed mother, who controls the family fortune. At a club luncheon Baxter introduces Caleb to Wilbur Cox, leading business man and president of the water company which supplies the needs of Golden. He gives Cox an inkling of his ambitions, and Cox, impressed, invites him to dinner that night. During dinner Cox asks Caleb to call at his office next day. He does so and Cox arranges a meeting between Caleb and Hinckley, the water company's chief engineer. Baxter tells Caleb he is in difficulties with a girl, Mary Morgan, Cox's stenographer, who insists he must marry her. With Hinckley, Caleb looks over the water company's source of supply, the Crystal springs, in Hermanos valley.

"Surely. Had to. Still have to. If you ever build a dam anywhere along the line of the Great Fault, don't forget that. Every major quake runs along the same line, out of the sea at a tangent, nor'west to sou'east down the original crack. The big tumbler in 1812 that wrecked the Missions, and the quake in 1906 that wrecked Golden and Santa Rosa, moved over an identical trail. And that trail went clean through my big dam down there."

The long lake had once been a peaceful valley, Hinckley told Caleb, a stage road winding through it on the way to the sea, farms, farmhouses and a hamlet with a famous roadhouse at the Crystal Springs for which the valley was named. All these had been razed to prepare the bottom of the great reservoir, fences taken up, trees eliminated, the place devastated as the big dam rose in the great notch that formed the main outlet to the valley.

Caleb turned the talk to the question of Golden's impending shortage.

"Mr. Cox," he said, "stated that there was no more watershed available on the peninsula."

"That is true. We own a certain number of artesian wells around the lower end of the bay but they are only a drop in the bucket. The outlook is not very encouraging."

"How about across the bay?" Caleb put the query with a degree of nervousness. He feared that Hinckley was about to uncover his own precious theory and demolish it.

The engineer's eyes twinkled.

"They say that water, like gold, is where you find it. And findings—keepings! There is water over there that ethically belongs to Oakville. Our company naturally considers Golden more important. But it is difficult of development. Means large expenditure. We should have a hard job to get water rates raised sufficiently to warrant it. Filtration is the big trouble. The work would be elaborate and expensive. We can't see our way clear."

Caleb kept his face clear of everything but earnest attention. But he was breathing more easily. His theory was still virgin.

Hinckley proceeded to go into the present filtration system and the layout of the conduits that supplied the hydrants of Golden. Caleb's interest in Crystal lakes had been satisfied but he followed the technical talk with intelligent comment and left the engineer at last on terms that were more than merely friendly. He reached Golden after the stores were closed for the day but, early the next morning he obtained geodetic section maps of the quadrangles covering Caliente valley and the Gabilan range. He put in most of the day studying these and making little drawings to scale in vertical plane.

It was all in support of a mere theory but it was his habit to be painstaking, even in preliminaries, and he surveyed his sketches with a good deal of satisfaction. If the theory panned out it meant, not merely money and fame if he handled his discovery properly, but it would make him, Caleb Warner, an actual factor in pioneering, in city building. He quoted to himself what Betty Clinton had said at El Nido.

"That is what I should choose, if I was a man. To create something, to be a water-bearer, to the thirsty earth or to thirsty people."

Baxter, coming in, broke through his reverie.

"You look like a latter-day prophet seeing visions," said Baxter. "What's the big idea?"

"Just a hunch, so far, Ted. I'm going across the bay tomorrow, prospecting."

The other looked at him oddly.

"Expect to uncover a gold mine at El Nido? Beware of the sirens who lie behind the rocks! As I remember her, that day at the dog show, the Clinton girl was a looker. Beware!"

"I'm not looking for that kind of a mine, Ted. And I hadn't thought of going to El Nido this trip. You seem fairly happy yourself."

"I am. I've heard from my parties in the land deal. They'll be out in a few weeks. Probably some time next month. Thereby greatly relieving the general situation. Now it's up to me to attend to the little formality of finding the land to please them. I wonder if there's anything across the bay? I must look up my notes. Want me to come along with you, Cal? I wonder if the El Nido valley is for sale?"

The Long Lake Had Once Been a Peaceful Valley.

He glanced mockingly at Caleb and laughed.

"Old Chief Wooden Face, aren't you? Don't worry. I won't butt in to poach on your preserves. Give my regards to Miss Clinton. She may vaguely remember me. I was introduced to her at the Show. But, remember my warning. Stoics like you, when they fall, fall hard!"

CHAPTER VI

The Diviner

Caleb caught an early ferry for the six-mile water trip across the bay from Golden to Oakville. At Oakville he took a local train that paralleled the shore of the lower bay for a time before striking east through Coyote canyon, the natural gateway through the hills for the overland trains. As he had done on Hermanos creek, Caleb noted flood signs. Then he gave himself up to studying his sketches, covering the region he was going to prospect, going over them while the train tugged up the canyon until he knew them by heart.

He left the train at the same station he had used on his previous trip, buying some fruit to serve as luncheon before he crossed the bridge and started up Hermanos. He had brought along rod and creel, more as a mask to his real intentions than from any idea of fishing.

The scanty flow ran in a deep channel gouged out by floods. He examined the sides and found them all of gravel. A wagon road that had followed the creek up from the railroad turned off to wind behind a low ridge. It was deep-rutted and Caleb traced it. He found that it ended at a gravel pit, dug into the side of the ridge, used probably for roadmaking purposes. The pit had been bitten out in the shape of a horseshoe and, standing where one of the calks would come, he saw a dilapidated shed from the roof of which smoke was rising through a rusty stove pipe. A man, leaning against the open door, surveyed him curiously.

Caleb nodded to him as he walked over to the shack, crunching through the gravel. The man was lank and tall, stooped of shoulder and constricted of chest. A hooked nose stuck out boldly from the peaked and sunken face between eyes that glittered strangely. Long hair fell below his shirt collar.

As he rested against the door jamb a fit of coughing attacked him and he shook with it like a reed in the wind. He was so helpless in the grip of the attack that Caleb hurried to support him, thinking him about to fall.

But the violent efforts ceased and the man rallied, smiling wanly, with a grimy handkerchief set to his lips. Caleb caught sight of telltale flecks of bright-red blood quickly folded into the rag. The cough was from the lungs, the man tubercular.

"'S all right, stranger," said the man. "I've bin a sight worse. I'm gettin' it baked out of me here. Lungs teched but they're healin'. Fishin', are ye? Better work up to the canyon yonder. No use wastin' yore time down here. Folly the road below the pit an' then trail the crick. It's tough goin'. Sile's chokin', what little they is of it."

"Mostly gravel underneath, to judge by the pit," Caleb answered. "Thanks for the tip. Have a cigar?"

The man took it wolfishly and bit off the end.

Caleb gave him a match.

"I thought that perhaps you owned the gravel pit."

"Me. I don't own nothin'. 'Cept this cough, and I'm willin' to get shet of that. Mine's a charity job. It's good gravel an' the hill makes it handy to git at. I can't work at my trade no longer. It takes it out of me, you see."

Caleb didn't see. The glitter in the man's eyes was not so much that of fever as of the spirit, he decided. He fancied him a little demented, by way of being a crank or a fanatic.

"I'm glad the land's worth something," he said. "It doesn't look like it." The man shot over a quick, burning look.

"That's to them as looks only on the surface," he said.

"What do you mean?"

The man led the way into the shack. From the two-by-fours that supported the corrugated iron roof hung some switches of freshly cut willow and hazel. Some were old and dried. And all were forked.

"Know what those are?" asked the man. "Them's divinin' rods. I'm a diviner. A Water-Finder. That's my trade. It's the power within me that goes out an' leaves me weak. Too weak to work at it. Each job means another nail in the lid of my coffin. Mebbe you're one of them that laugh at it?" he demanded fiercely. "But there's many in the upper valley as has blessed me when I showed 'em where to bore."

The thing seemed uncanny. Yet, somehow, it fitted in. The hunch stirred in his brain. To Caleb, under the spell of his vision, it seemed predestined that he, the Water-Bearer, should meet this Water-Finder to confirm his hope, a living signpost that he was on the track.

He knew that within the year the French Academy of Sciences had accepted the demonstration of a number of scientifically controlled cases where the "water-divining rod" had proved beyond a doubt that certain persons were gifted with the power to discover subterranean springs and reservoirs. Scientists did not attempt to explain the mystery, but accepted the phenomenon and were making it the subject of expert research to discover the natural causes.

"I have known many cases back in the East, where I come from," Caleb said, "where water has been found by the use of the rod."

The man was instantly mollified.

"Ah," he said. "It's all true. I ain't quite human, mebbe. It's a gift, the power. Like a medium's. Supernatural. The spirits talk to me about it sometimes. I'd like to show ye, but I'm too weak. But you can take my word for it—me, David Evans, the Welsh Water-Finder, what's discovered a score of wells north of Coyote crick; that there's water all under here—under this gravel.

Apparently this David Evans is to play an important part in the story. What does he do?

Man Ever Waging Fight on Disease

Happy legends to the contrary, there seems no reason to believe that the world ever has known a golden age of health. Geologists find diseased bones which are thought to show that even great prehistoric lizards, and after them the early mammals, suffered from tumors which, according to the advertisers, will claim the teeth of four out of five of us. Man probably falls heir to troubles which other flesh suffered before him.

By herding in crowds, by giving up his dower rights of sunlight and space, he even has added to many of those troubles has created wholly new ways of wracking body and mind. For a time the balance of life and death promised doom to cities: they survived only because life was produced abundantly and cheaply without their walls, and the best and most adventurous were fed into them. The slow process of observation and control which has made it safer now to live in a big city than in a village (and often safer to live in a city than in the open country itself), is the science of public health.—Survey Graphic.

Of all European countries, Ireland accommodates the fewest

GOOD ROADS

MORE AND BETTER ROADS EXPECTED

Highway construction for 1926 will result not only in better and smoother roads, but new records are expected to be made in roadway building, according to a survey just completed by C. R. Stokes, manager of the highway construction department of the National Lime association.

A series of tests made in various sections of the country show that by adding hydrated lime to the mix, a material saving in time is secured, particularly on grades and curves, according to leading engineers and contractors who took part in the tests. Experiments in building a road in marathon county, Wisconsin, showed that an average of 77 more lineal feet of 18-foot road was laid a day when lime was used.

"All of the reports showed that lime added to the concrete mix allows it to be placed easier, and permits a quicker finish," Mr. Stokes said. "The contractor's report that there is lack of segregation, that there is no excess of water to be removed from the pavement surface, and that maximum consistency can be maintained through better control of the water content." The contractors reported that the use of lime not only conserved time, with a resultant reduction in pay roll expenses, but also gave the road to the public for use at an earlier date.

According to T. Warren Allen, chief of the division of control of the bureau of public roads, the "lost-time" element is a problem that is of the gravest importance in road building.

Appearing before the house committee on roads recently Mr. Allen declared that the bureau of public roads was collecting information to show the results of poor management and good management in the building of highways.

"There are a great many more items in the lost-time category than would appear possible at first thought," he said, "and during the time that work is actually performed there are widely varying results, ranging from excellent progress due to good management, to slow progress due to poor management."

"On the Janesville road in Wisconsin, as well as on roads in Ohio, the mix containing lime was so dry that rolling was unnecessary, reports received by Mr. Stokes from those states show.

"The elimination of this operation increased the efficiency of the job and enabled the finishers to work close to the machine, which resulted in a large saving in overtime finishing costs," Mr. Stokes declared.

"Reports from all sections of the country being received at present indicate that more headway will be made during the coming summer months in highway construction than ever before, and that the roads will be open to the public much sooner as a result of our tests, showing a large saving of time in the laying of concrete roads," he said.

Chicago Promised Real Traffic Congestion Soon

Within the next five years Chicago will have twice as many automobiles as it had in 1925.

This is the forecast of Cook county traffic issued by the bureau of good roads of the United States Department of Agriculture.

In its statement making this prediction the bureau outlined a plan for highway improvement to prevent traffic congestion on the county highways at that time, when there will be an average of one car for every 4.86 persons in Chicago.

These figures, bureau officials stated, are not guesses, but careful estimates based on traffic data obtained in Cook county, together with population trends and the rate of motor increase during the years 1914 to 1924.

Good Roads Notes

Throughout the United States there are 96,929 state and federal government-owned motor vehicles.

* * *

Rough roads cause considerable damage to the working parts of an automobile. Uneven roads are often unnoticed while driving, as the body of the car does not shake with the axles and differential.

The 11 states traversed by the Lincoln highway, between New York city and San Francisco, with the aid of the federal government, spent more than $9,000,000 during 1925 to put the route in first-class condition.

* * *

There are many wide streets and broad boulevards paved in the United States, but the widest city thoroughfare on record is in San Bernardino, Calif. It is Third street, paved its entire width of 180 feet from curb to curb.

* * *

The most heavily traveled grade crossing in Los Angeles is to be eliminated by the construction of a subway underneath an elevation of the railroad tracks. The cost is estimated at $237,000, exclusive of property damages.

DR. W. B. CALDWELL AT THE AGE OF 80

Mother! It's Cruel to "Physic" Your Child

To Dr. W. B. Caldwell, of Monticello, Ill., a practicing physician for 47 years, it seemed cruel that so many constipated infants and children had to be kept constantly "stirred up" and half sick by taking cathartic pills, tablets, salts, calomel and nasty oils.

While he knew that constipation was the cause of nearly all children's little ills, he did not believe that a sickening "purge" or "physic" was necessary.

In Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin he discovered a laxative which helps to establish natural bowel "regularity" even if the child is chronically constipated. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin not only causes a gentle, easy bowel movement, but, best of all, it never gripes, sickens or upsets the most delicate system. Besides, it is absolutely harmless, and so pleasant that even a cross, feverish, bilious, sick child gladly takes it.

Buy a large 60-cent bottle at any store that sells medicine and just see for yourself.

SUGGESTIONS TO AVOID ACCIDENTS

Seasoned Drivers Fail to Make Allowance for Faults of Novice.

As a result of several recent investigations into accident causes in which it was shown that collisions often result from the inability of seasoned drivers to make allowances for the shortcomings of beginners, the accident prevention department of the Chicago Motor club has outlined for motorists some suggestions as to safeguarding car users through better understanding between drivers.

Special Recommendations.

The recommendations of especial importance are as follows:

"Whenever a driver seems to be asurping the right of way at an intersection when he is not entitled to do so it is safer to assume that he is inexperienced and not willfully disrespectful of law and order. Too many motorists seek to 'teach others a lesson' at the wrong time, and the inevitable result is an accident.

"The proper time to teach the new driver the rules of the game is before he has to apply them. The experienced driver who leads the beginner into believing that the only way to learn to drive is to enter heavy traffic and 'sink or swim' is only encouraging the worst form of recklessness.

Willfully Reckless Driver.

"The willfully reckless driver may change his mind at the last moment and avoid trouble simply because he drives well enough to know how to avoid it, but the inexperienced driver has no such advantage.

"There will be about 1,000,000 new drivers this year if car sales continue at the present rate. Although skill in operation of the car is an easier matter to acquire by reason of the great improvement in controls, traffic conditions are more complicated than at any time in the history of the automobile and knowledge of rules of driving and courtesy has never been more important. In view of present conditions the experienced motorist cannot afford to mistake ordinary inexperience for willful recklessness."

Proper Tire Equipment for the Vacation Trip

The motorist who starts on a vacation trip without proper tire equipment is likely to find that he has been penny wise and pound foolish. Nothing so quickly ruins the pleasure of a vacation trip as tire trouble. Repairing tires out in a broiling sun is anything but fun, and, besides this, it causes delay which many times upsets schedules and definite plans.

If a motorist has to purchase tires at some mountain or canyon resort he usually finds that freight and extra profit have been tacked on, so that the price is extremely high.

By carrying two or three spare tires, depending, of course, upon the length of the trip, the vacationist is prepared in case of punctures or blowouts to quickly change and proceed on his way. The safest course of all is to put the new tires on the wheels and use the old tires as spares. There is much less likelihood of puncture in a fresh new casing than there is in a thin, worn tire.

Tube Vulcanizing

It often happens that in vulcanizing a tube, particularly in the open air, the rubber is burned. This may be obviated by making a collar about four inches high to fit around the vulcanizer, using several thicknesses of ordinary wire mosquito netting, fastened together with a couple of rivets of wire run through. This should be placed over the vulcanizer just before lighting the gasoline.

Constant Driving Will Keep Car in Good Trim

"I don't believe I can drive that far in a day," says the typical motorist, contemplating a 300-mile jump. "I'm not in trim."

And yet this same motorist will expect his car to take him any distance any time regardless of whether it is in trim.

The car that is going day and night always is ready for the long trip, or the hard trip, because it has to be in good condition to stand the daily grind. The car that is never really ready is the one that stands in the garage all week. It may have a water leak, or its carburetor may not be adjusted for the change in the weather. Cars are like their drivers in a great many respects, and the matter of being in trim is one of them. Exercise is vitally essential to good service from a car.

This is clearly demonstrated when a car has been in storage for a long period. Everything is stiff when the car starts. Things do not work at their best. Tires are low, springs are rusty, even the stale gas in the tank makes the engine loggy. The car that is in trim never acts this way. It is always ready, always capable of meeting the demands.

Accidents Prevented by Proper Control of Horn

The inexperienced "Sunday driver" type of motorist thinks the only thing the horn is for is to play a never-ending concert in the ears of pedestrians. Horn control is a fine art and its proper use can prevent accidents.

Excessive use of the horn indicates a novice driver, but its proper use shows the veteran. The novice relies upon his horn to keep others out of danger. The veteran relies upon his control of the car. He slows down for people crossing the streets. He doesn't toot his horn and force them to jump. The novice has to rely upon his noise maker because in nine cases out of ten he is outdriving his brakes.

Watch the novice as he approaches a corner. He doesn't slow down, figuring another car may be coming at the rate of 25 feet a second. No, no—nothing like that. He starts "squawking" 25 feet from the corner depending upon his noise to get him through. The veteran driver slows down and uses the horn less in all instances.

A really good driver can do without a horn in most instances. The novice seems to feel he could do better with a steam calliope.

BUSSES NOW ARE LARGEST USERS OF GAS

Schoolgirls Make Splendid Use of Busses on Trips Into Country.

The increased use of busses in this country is causing a noticeable jump in annual gasoline consumption.

One bus in constant operation consumes from ten to twenty times as much gasoline a year as the average passenger car.

The 70,000 busses in operation in the United States last year used 271,000,000 gallons of gasoline, a supply sufficient for 700,000 pleasure cars.

The busses covered a total distance of 1,900,000,000 miles and the gasoline consumption for each vehicle has been estimated at from 4,000 to 10,000 gallons.

The rapid expansion of bus lines is expected to show a greater increase in gasoline consumption during this year.

Bricks Lasted Long

Six bricks, said to be nearly 300 years old, were removed from the debris of a building being torn down in Albany, N. Y., recently. Cuyler Reynolds, Albany historian, carried them to the mayor's office, and declared them to be the oldest in the United States. He said that when the building was reconstructed more than 50 years ago, the same bricks were used, and that this had been the custom when the structure was rebuilt on several previous occasions. Mr. Reynolds intends to send the bricks to various historical societies.

Quite logically the public knows that when any improvement which really gives an enhanced measure of safety, comfort and luxury is perfected, Fisher will be the first to present it just as Fisher has created and been the first to present every important improvement in body design and construction of the past decade.

LIFE OF DAVID R. KOSHT

Simon Peter Kosht, son of Daniel and Elizabeth Kosht, was born in Ashland county, Ohio, August 24, 1858, and departed this life very suddenly July 25, 1926, age 67 years, 11 months and one day

At the age of seven years he came with his parents to DeKalb county and has made it his home ever since.

He was united in marriage with Elizabeth Krabill May 4, 1884, were born. About thirty-three and to this union two children years ago he united with the Church of Christ at Newville, during one of the evangelistic campaigns of Charles Reign Scoville. Since then he has lived an active christian life, doing whatever he could for the good of the community and church. On the day of his death his one desire was that he might be in the services of the day, but he was unable to do so because of ill health. Just a few moments before his departure he told them that he was going home and that he was ready. He told them not to weep, but to continue being good to one another. As a husband and father there was none better, for he was kind and loving at all times, thinking only of the welfare of those he loved, bearing his affliction without a murmur. Those who are left to mourn his departure are:—his faithful companion, Elizabeth Kosht; two children, David Ralph Kosht, who lives on the home place and Anna May Hindman of Auburn; five grand children; one brother, Francis Kosht of Auburn and three sisters, Sara Cobbler of Findlay, Ohio, Emma Eversole of Kokomo, Ind., and Cora Furgeson of Auburn. Also numerous friends and relatives.

Mr. Kosht had splendid neighbors because he was neighborly and friends because he was a friend.

Yes we shall miss him; there will be a vacant chair; the one we loved is absent. But may we live as brother Kosht lived so we too may say in the language of the poet:—

If this is the only thing fortold
Of all my future, then I pray
That quietly watchful I may hold
The key of a golden faith each day
Fast shut in my grasp, that, when I hear
His step, be it at dawn or midnight dim
Straightway may I rise without a fear,
And open immediately to Him.

The funeral was held at the Newville Christian church, Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock. Rev. Fred Thomas, officiating assisted by Rev. Merle Neer. E. R. Kinsey, funeral director. Burial at Newville.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to thank our friends and neighbors for all acts of kindness and for the beautiful floral offerings, during the death of husband and father.

FARMERS LEARNING CARE OF SOILS

The increased difficulty in getting a stand of red clover, experienced in late years by growers in many sections of the country, is largely due to improper soil conditions, disease, nonadapted seed, wrong methods of seeding, or to the use of harmful nurse crops. Improper soil conditions result from constant cultivation and the consequent loss of lime, phosphates, potash and organic matter, making the soil unsuited to the growth of clover.

Such conditions can be remedied by applying the elements lacking and by working in manure and other forms of organic matter.

When clover failure is caused by disease, a disease-resistant variety should be used if available, or some other legume substituted, for red clover. If red clover fails on land well supplied with lime, sweet clover can often be used in stead.

SHEEP KILLING DOGS IN KOEPPE FLOCK

Last Thursday, discovery was made by the Koeppe Bros., five miles north of St. Joe, that dogs had mutilated a number of their ewes and lambs and that nine were found dead in the pasture field and three are still missing. In the drove were twenty-three sheep, some being spring lambs, and of this number they report that they will lose twenty. Of those being crippled, it is almost impossible to bring them through this hot weather.

Mrs. Koeppe made the discovery on Thursday evening as she went to the woods to bring up the cows, and dogs were there then.

The loss will be considerable to the young farmers.

OLD TIME RELIGION SURVIVES, SAYS DAVIS

Old-fashioned religion, with its real belief in God, is stronger today than ever in its history, James J. Davis, sceretary of labor said in an address to a community meeting held by civic organizations and chamber of commerce of the Calumet region of Illinois and Indiana.

He recounted the fall of the Roman empire and remarked that while it is not true that the church brought civilization into the world, it was the church that saved civilization for mankind."

"Again it is said that the world is beginning to lose the fruits of Christian experience and teaching," he said, "and that the people are losing their ancient faith in God and immorality, are ceasing to venerate the bible, and are more interested in science than religion.

"It is my opinion that, while there may be some justice in this complaint, the complaint itself is somewhat exaggerated," said Mr. Davis. "I believe that statistics will show there has never been a time when church membership was larger in proportion to the population than it is today. Surely there has never been a time when it was easier to raise church funds. It is probable that there never was an age when more people believed in religion than believe in it today."

Summer Fashions Varied, Charming

Winsome Evening Wraps and Gowns in Many Interesting Versions.

Social activities being directly influenced by the seasons, it followed that the unusually cool and backward period had the effect of causing the transfer indoors of many activities which might otherwise have been held in the open air. This has perhaps called forth, broadly speaking, more formal and elaborate costumes for occasions than is usually true. But fashions adapted to the needs of the season are nevertheless unusually pleasing, declares a fashion writer in the New York Times.

Evening gowns, always the delight of the designer, are full of charm. They are much the same in type as the styles of the winter season. There are, of course, changes in the fabric, eliminating the heavier brocade and satins, velvets and metallic materials. But character and importance are given to the handsomer gowns and wraps in stuffs equally beautiful, some of them quite as costly as the gorgeous velvet and metal brocades one sees at the height of the town season. There are now even summer velvets, which are really silken chiffon velvets in embossed patterns, light as a feather and very supple. There is also a summer version of satin which has that chiffonlike texture that lends itself to the most graceful arrangement in drapery. These materials are shown in models from representative houses, both French and American. Most of them are for daytime, to be worn on more or less formal occasions, and they are also seen in "dressy" wraps for both day and night wear.

Summer Wrap in Demand.

The summer wrap is of distinct importance at the moment because there has been continuous need for it, and its many variants are alluringly interpreted in chiffon velvet, and crepe satins as well as in lighter silks and more sheer materials that belong to warm weather dress. Regardless of the calendar some of the most delightful and effective gowns are being made of soft satin, for many fashionable women prefer for formal evening dress the more sophisticated mode expressed in a satin or silk.

Callot Soeurs are making some lovely gowns of satin or of moire, which is one of the conspicuous successes of the year. A detail in some of these models from Callot is a wide sash girdle fitted loosely over the hips and finished with a large butterfly bow, no hanging ends. An evening gown designed for an American woman of stately carriage and little figure is made of starkrepe, a new crepe satin, very pliant and lustrous, in chartreuse, the delicate yellow green now so fashionable. The model is a flaring princess, straight in front and cut to ripple around the bottom, from the knees toward the back, where it is drawn upward, with a cascading edge that ends in a short jabot-like tie. The foundation of this gown is a straight slip of the satin, the neck being cut in a deep V—in surplice arrangement at the back, quite high in front. A band of gold passementerie is added to finish the neck and the bottom of the underdress, and no other trimming is used on the gown, which is sleeveless.

Moire Having a Run.

Moire is having what in the theater would be called a "run." This is now made in lighter, softer weave than the stiff moire that once was tested by the quality that would "stand alone." Some very handsome gowns of dignified simplicity are shown in moire, in white, in sunni, the new yellow; in several shades of green, blue, chartreuse and coral sand. Because of the ornate character of the material, these moire gowns are cut after simple designs, some of the best in princess style and little trimmed, with a narrow galloon of straw beads, in gilt or silver.

Taffeta is the other name for silk in the summer evening gown, this being the acknowledged "hit" of the season. There is in it a frosty luster and delicacy that seems to be achieved in no other silk fabric. In the revival of taffeta Lanvin has led the way with her period gowns, and other designers on both sides of the water have contributed each in his or her particular way to the popularity of this ideal "summer" silk. The demand has been so heavy and so general that the dressmakers are saying there is no more taffeta to be had.

An evening gown from Callot in silvery white taffeta is made with a plain bodice, cut in round, moderate decollete and sleeveless, with the opening on one shoulder and under the arm. The normal waistline is outlined with a dull silver passementerie and a tiny, upstanding frill of narrow lace, and the entire skirt, very bouffant and ankle length, is made of ruffles of the taffeta, each edged with a line of silver, a large, stiff rosette of lace and silver being placed as a motif at one side of the belt. This delightful model illustrates the feeling for quaintness which inspires the modiste who works in taffeta.

Like Fringed Ruching.

American designers have a fondness for the fringed ruching made of taffeta with which some of the prettiest frocks, particularly for the younger women, are trimmed. Some evening gowns of unusual design in taffeta are made severely plain and given distinction through an embroidered motif. Some of these are extreme in pattern and size, extending from shoulder to hem, or in large plaques on the skirt or bodice or both. Quite lovely is a little frock of mauve taffeta with a simple bodice finished all about the edges of skirt, neck, and little cap sleeves with a bound scallop. The skirt, which is plain in front, is embroidered in a large spider's web in gray floss and is gathered to the waist full at the sides and back. Another model of simpler type, altogether Parisian, is done in rose-gray taffeta, having a huge conventionalized rose made of narrow grosgrain ribbon pleated on the front breadth of the full skirt, a spiral of floss trailing over the length of the frock.

Handsomer evening toilettes include some in silver lame and silver lace, used with brilliant effect, especially in combination with satin, which is shown this season on some of the most elaborate wedding gowns. In all lace, which is very much in vogue at present, some enchanting evening gowns are shown. The dyed laces are very chic and make frocks that are graceful and showy for informal affairs. The dyeing of these laces is done with great skill and most charming results are achieved.

One frock of sea-green lace, made over peach chiffon, is an ideal dance frock for summer. A model of blond lace combined with chiffon of the same shade is gentle in tone, always flattering, and has the advantage of being the sort of frock that will be equally suitable for a tea dance or an evening affair, and that may be worn with a wrap of any sort. A beautiful evening gown of French authorship is made of black chantilly lace over pink satin crepe, illustrating one of the latest color combinations.

Logically the stuff of which evening gowns and all the other formal costumes for summer should be built is the sheer material in all of its present variants—chiffon, georgette, mousseline de soie and all the crepes, both flowered and in plain colors. Chiffon in different weights and weaves is the medium of far the greater number of modes for evening and all distinctly summer dress. The artistry with which chiffon is embroidered, beaded, weighted with passementerie and fringed is amazing, the ideal accomplishment being to retain that subtle clinging action and yet produce a dazzling effect.

Fringe is one of the ultra-fashionable trimmings shown by the foremost designers of Paris and very much reproduced by modistes on this side. A high light in the summer collections is an evening gown from Premet, all in one shade of blue. It is of georgette, the upper part being finely plaited and bloused into a soft girdle

A COLLECTION OF CAKES

Cakes are always in season and the larder is never quite complete unless there is a cake for an emergency.

White Fruit Cake.—Cream two-thirds of a cupful of butter until creamy and add gradually, beating constantly, seven-eighths of a cupful of pastry flour, sifted with one-fourth of a teaspoonful of soda, then add one-half tablespoonful of lemon juice. Beat the whites of six eggs until stiff, using an egg whip, add gradually one and one-fourth cupfuls of powdered sugar. Combine mixtures and when well blended add two-thirds of a cupful of candied cherries, one-third of a cupful of blanched and shredded almonds, one-half cupful of citron and one teaspoonful of lemon extract. Bake in a moderate oven one hour.

Old-Fashioned Pound Cake.—Cream one cupful of butter and add gradually one and two-thirds cupfuls of granulated sugar, beating until creamy; add five eggs, one at a time, beating vigorously between the addition of each. When the mixture is foamy fold in two cupfuls of pastry flour sifted with two teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Bake in a slow oven.

Six Months' Cake.—Mix one-half cupful of butter with one cupful of sugar; when creamy add two well-beaten eggs and one-half cupful of molasses. Mix and sift two and one-half cupfuls of flour, one teaspoonful of cream of tartar, one-half teaspoonful of soda, one teaspoonful of cinnamon, one-fourth teaspoonful of cloves and the same of mace. Add alternately with one-half cupful of milk to the first mixture and beat vigorously, then add one cupful of raisins cut into small pieces and dredged with two tablespoonfuls of flour. Turn into two bread pans and bake in a moderate oven forty-five minutes.

When baking pie prepare and bake another shell. This if kept in a cold place will be crisp and good for several days. Fill with crushed berries mixed with sugar and top with whipped cream. Such a dessert is quickly prepared and is especially well liked.

Cherry Ice Cream.—Use a cupful of rich cherry juice and a pint of cream with a few drops of almond extract. Sweeten to taste and freeze as usual. Serve in sherbet cups and garnish with a cherry or a spoonful of the minced cherries and some of the syrup.

Inviting Dishes.

A most delicious filling for cake is prepared as follows: Bake two cupfuls of sugar with four tablespoonfuls of water until it threads; pour over three well-beaten egg whites, add one-half cupful of citron shredded fine, one-half cupful each of chopped raisins and blanched almonds and the same of figs. Spread between the layers and on top of the cake.

Layer Prune Cake.—Take one cupful of sugar, two tablespoonfuls of butter, one cupful of finely chopped cooked prunes, one-half cupful of prune juice, one-half teaspoonful of soda dissolved in the prune juice, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one teaspoonful each of cinnamon and nutmeg and one-half teaspoonful of cloves. Mix in order given, adding two cupfuls of flour sifted with the dry ingredients. Bake in two layers about thirty minutes. Ice with one cupful of powdered sugar, three tablespoonfuls of butter and cream to spread.

Fruit Salad.—Cut into small pieces two cupfuls of celery, two oranges, two-thirds of a cupful of raisins seeded and plumped over steam, one cupful of grated apple and a cupful of mayonnaise dressing. Cover the salad with the apple, then the mayonnaise.

One-Piece Dish.—Arrange a layer of thinly sliced uncooked potatoes in a baking dish, season well, add a layer of thinly sliced onion and cover with lamb chops. Bake until all are cooked. Serve from the baking dish. Peas may be substituted for the onion if preferred.

Fruit Salad Dressing.—Take one-fourth of a cupful of pineapple juice, one-fourth of a cupful of orange juice, one teaspoonful of acid phosphate, three teaspoonfuls of water, two eggs, one-half cupful each of whipped cream and sugar. Beat the eggs, add the sugar, heat the fruit juices with the phosphate, add the hot mixture to the eggs, cook over hot water until it coats the spoon. This makes a pint of dressing.

Chicken Salad.—Cook a chicken with a lean piece of veal until both are tender. Cut up into small cubes, add twice as much celery as chicken, a half cupful of finely cut blanched almonds and any good highly seasoned salad dressing.

A few spoonfuls of leftover oatmeal may be stirred into the morning griddle cakes or muffins, or it may be fried and served with bacon as a breakfast dish.

"Leaf hoppers" are playing havoc with the potato crop in north central Indiana, according to Thomas A. Parker, county agricultural agent. Kosciusko county has more than 1,000 acres in potatoes and most of the fields have been attacked by the hoppers.

Hog cholera has appeared in herds of hogs in Clay and Lake townships in Kosciusko county. The disease is believed to have been brought into the county by animals purchased at public stock yards and a further spread of the disease is expected by Thomas A. RADIO

Diagram of a Simply Constructed Short-Wave Receiver That Can Pick up Programs Under 150 Meters.

By LEO HUGO KRUGER,
In the Chicago Evening Post.

If you haven't been listening to KDKA regularly (I mean by direct broadcast) then you are missing something. Of course a lot of folks have heard about short waves, but very few have ever listened to a program broadcast on short waves. (I mean direct, not rebroadcast.) KDKA has been offering some real programs the last few months, and if you are the kind of fan that likes to reach out for DX every night and you are willing to build a radio set just to be able to hear one DX station any time it is on the air, and also without the customary static read on.

All that is necessary is to construct a two-tube set, which should not cost more than $15. The diagram clearly explains the different connections. The main parts are the B.-T. old-style short wave tuner and the .00014 Karas straight-line frequency condenser. The rest can be made up from odds in the old junk box.

Ranges From 50 to 150 Meters.

Stations should come around 25 or 80, using the Karras condenser (an old-style .00025 condenser can be used), but KDKA comes in close to the end of the dial, somewhere between 4 and 10.

After the set works well another stage may be added. But two tubes should be sufficient to put KDKA on the loud speaker. The set has a range for 50 to 150 meters.

Between 50 and 75 there is a lot of code, this is the amateurs' own 80-meter band, and when one knows the code it is nothing new when you should happen to hear one amateur talking to another 7,000 miles away.

Long Aerial Not Essential.

One more word about the set: A long aerial is not essential. I've picked up KDKA without either aerial or ground, but I recommend for the best all-around use about 65 feet. If your aerial is too long you might hear harmonics from local stations, but by putting a .00025 fixed condenser in series with the aerial the harmonics should become very weak.

Also, if the loud speaker or phone tips are reversed a steady ticking will be heard.

The list of parts needed:

One short-wave tuner, B.-T. old style.

One .00014 straight line frequency condenser.

One .00025 fixed condenser.

One grid leak.

Two 25-ohm rheostats (amperite may be substituted in last stage).

One .001 fixed condenser.

One 4-to-1 ratio, or higher, audio transformer.

One single-circuit jack.

Two 201A UV or UX tubes.

Two sockets.

The panel may be 7 by 14 inches and the baseboard should be of practically the same measurements.

How Condenser, Choke Circuit Helps Music

Loud-speaker reproduction may often be improved by introducing a choke coil and high-capacity condenser in the output circuit of the radio receiver.

The method of connecting is quite simple. The choke coil, which should have an inductance value between 50 and 100 henrys, is connected across the output terminals of the receiving set. One terminal of the loud speaker is connected to a terminal of the choke. The other connection to the speaker connects to one side of the high-capacity condenser, which should have a value of four microfarads. The second terminal of the condenser connects to the other connection to the choke coil. In reality, the condenser and loud speaker are connected in series with each other and in parallel with the choke coil.

A in the diagram shows the usual method of connecting the loud speaker. B shows the loud speaker connected in the circuit, using a condenser choke coil output system.

In addition to improving the quality of reproduction, such a device facilitates the use of higher plate voltage on the plates of the audio-frequency amplifier tubes.

Its purpose is to allow the direct current applied to the plates to pass through the choke coil, and the alternating current or modulated signals to pass through the loud speaker. Incidentally, this arrangement will insure against burning out of the loud speaker.

The choke coil used should be capable of passing a current of at least thirty milliamperes.

Improve Regeneration

A choke coil having about 120 turns wound on a one-inch diameter tube and connected in series with the plate circuit of a regenerative receiver often will make the set oscillate more easily and steadily.

Recharge Dry Cell

To recharge a dry cell, bore two holes one-fourth inch in diameter and three inches deep on opposite sides of the center connection. Then fill the holes with cider vinegar and plug up with paraffin.

Hints on Testing of Wet and Dry Batteries

Never test a "B" battery with an ammeter. You may ruin the ammeter and you will certainly shorten the life of the battery by subjecting it to so heavy a current output. Placing an ammeter across a battery is the same as short-circuiting it with a wire. Use a voltmeter.

To test dry cells you may use an ammeter for just an instant. The cell should show at least 25 amperes if it's in good shape. The voltmeter should show full 1½ volts, even if the battery be badly shelf-worn. Never use the ammeter if you can help it and then only for a fraction of a second, and use it only on large dry cells meant for "A" battery work.

For the storage battery, the only test of any real value is that made by a hydrometer. It shows the gravity of the liquid (electrolyte) and tells the exact point between "full charge" and "dead battery."

Only a "high resistance" voltmeter is useful to test the voltage at which vacuum tubes are lighted.

Fixed Resistance and Condensers Aid Quality

With certain audio amplifying transformers the connection across the secondaries of fixed resistors of about 250,000 or 500,000 ohms value works wonders in clarifying reception in general and in reducing the exaggeration of high notes. Fixed condensers of .0006 or .001 mfd. in the same position have a similar effect, while combinations of condensers and resistors often turn a hitherto poor amplifier into a fairly acceptable one.

Resistance and condensers so employed are not infallible cures for distortion due to bad amplifier construction or design, but in many cases they bring about enough improvement to warrant their cost and installation.

To Determine What Is Cause of Receiver Noise

To determine if the noise in the radio receiver is due to a fault in the set or is actually interference coming in on the air, disconnect the aerial and ground wires, and if there is no reduction in the intensity of the noise while the broadcast music is stopped by the disconnection, the probability is that the source of the noise is in the receiving set, in the form of a loose connection, faulty batteries, or defective tube. Also shake the ground wire near the connection, to make sure that the noise is not caused by a bad connection.

To Tune Short Waves

If your set won't tune to the short wavelengths, tap the secondary of the inductance coil on the filament side by means of a tap-switch arrangement that will enable you to cut in and out at will.

A Ground Substitute

A wire fence often makes an excellent substitute for a ground. Its action is that of an efficient counterpoise.

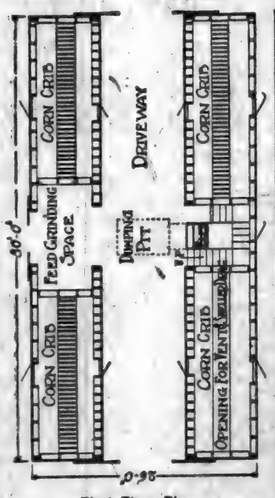
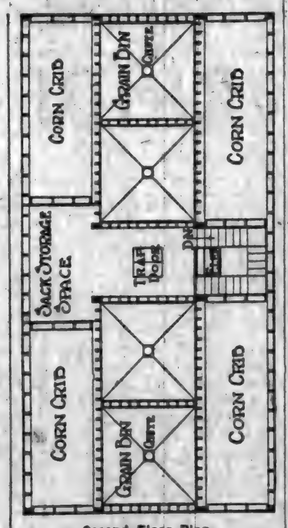
Grain Housed in Building That Cures Crops and Protects Them



First Floor Plan.



Second Floor Plan.

By W. A. RADFORD

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give ADVICE FREE OF COST on all problems pertaining to the subject of building work on the farm, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as editor, author and manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on the subject. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 1827 Prairie avenue, Chicago, Ill., and only inclose two-cent stamp for reply.

"When the crib is full everybody on the farm eats," is a saying that was popular with our grandfathers. And so it is, for corn and small grain will go far toward feeding every member of the farm family and the live stock as well.

When grain prices were low and the cost of producing crops was even lower, little care and practically no expense was incurred in caring for the grain after harvest. High cost of production and high grain prices make it economical to provide proper housing for the grains after harvest. This is especially true of corn, for weather and the rodents that feed on it can quickly eat up the farm profits unless the grain is stored where it is safe from these two enemies.

The modern corn crib and granary, a good design for which is shown in the illustration, provides a safe house for the crops. The concrete floor, which also acts as a foundation for the building, keeps out the rats and other animals. The crib siding, spaced so as to admit fresh air for drying and curing the grain, also keeps out the weather—rain, snow and sleet, which decrease the value of the corn for either a cash crop or for feeding.

The building is 26 feet wide and 50 feet long. Through the center is a 10-foot driveway to facilitate loading and unloading the corn. Eight-foot cribs running up to the roof are on either side of the driveway, while overhead is space for bins to store the small grain.

The cupola on the ridge permits the use of a power elevator to carry the corn to the two cribs. The ear corn is emptied into a dump in the floor where buckets on an endless belt pick it up and carry it to the spout, which is swiveled so that it may be turned to any part of either crib.

Cribs must be of substantial construction to withstand the bursting pressure exercised on the walls by the stored corn. However, the farm building architects have worked out plans that give the owner a substantial, tight building at a price that is saved during the life of the building.

Roof Must Stand Heavy Strain, Paint Protects

How often have you heard one man remark to another, "Come on out, our roof don't leak"?

This casual expression hits the nail, so to speak, on the head. The roof doesn't leak. Did you ever stop to think that the part of the house that stands the most strain is the roof? Upon it falls the fiercest onslaught of rain, and the heaviest falls of snow rest on it. Unless the roof is adequately constructed and protected it becomes an easy prey to decay if it is made of wooden shingles, or to rust if constructed of tin.

Paint is the best armor any roof can have, whether it be of wood or tin. But even the best paint will not last forever, and should be renewed as often as it wears off. For, when decay and rust are permitted to work their havoc upon a roof, it becomes a sieve, letting in the elements to injure the interior of the house as well.

In addition to its protective qualities, paint is a beautifier; providing, of course, that a color is chosen which harmonizes with and "sets off" the rest of the house exterior. In fact, the roof lends itself to some delightful color schemes. Its conspicuousness makes decoration and protection equally essential.

Shingle Thatch Roofs Are Usually Effective

To those who desire an unusual roof treatment the shingle thatch offers many attractions. It has become very popular for use on country houses, clubhouses, mountain camps, etc., as well as city residences. It produces a remarkably effective reproduction of the old-fashioned straw thatch and is often stained the color of weathered straw.

Concrete Blocks Are Fireproof and Cheap

Concrete block and tile are fire resistant and economically laid and make buildings that will need no repairing.

These building units are suitable for all types of city and rural structures. Houses, garages, barns, poultry-houses and icehouses are but a few of these structures in which they are laid successfully. Well-equipped plants for making these units are in most up-to-date communities. As the equipment to make these blocks usually is more expensive than the average citizen can afford, it is better to buy the units already constructed.

Concrete block are made in a number of sizes, the 8 by 8 by 16 inch and the 8 by 8 by 24 inch sizes being used most extensively. Smaller units called building tile are usually made in two sizes, 5 by 8 by 12 inches and 8 by 12 by 12 inches. Concrete brick are the same sizes as clay brick.

Concrete building units should be moistened before laying by sprinkling with a hose. This wetting is necessary to prevent the dry brick from absorbing the water from the fresh mortar and thereby interfering with the chemical process involved in the hardening of the mortar.

Stucco Is Most Commonly Used With Hollow Tile

While stucco is the more common treatment for the exterior of hollow tile walls, brick may be used as a veneer at a saving in the expense of construction over solid brick. The wall which results is as durable in every way. The air spaces in the hollow tile are an effective insulation against dampness and rapid changes in temperature—a distinct advantage over ordinary brick construction.

THE OLD QUILT

The old quilt had been up in the attic for a long, long time.

Moths had come and had had banquets right on the quilt. That was really a disgrace for the quilt to suffer.

Oh, there had been the time when the quilt never had to put up with anything like that.

There had been the time when during the summer, the quilt had been put away, and when moth balls and newspapers had been used to keep the quilt safe from moths and their banquets.

There had been the time when the quilt had been taken out as winter had approached, and had been greeted so affectionately.

Speeches like this the quilt had heard:

"Oh, the quilt will feel pretty good tonight."

"Oh, the quilt will be needed tonight."

"What a lovely warm thing the quilt is."

"How warm and yet how light it is!"

"We needed the quilt last night. Well, we will have it tonight."

Such had been some of the speeches the quilt had heard. And then the quilt had been tucked up under the chins of children.

The quilt was very old, oh, very, very old. But many a happy time, oh, many and many a happy time the quilt had had.

When the quilt was new it had been used to cover up two children who slept in a trundle bed. In the daytime the trundle bed had been put under the big bed in the mother's and father's bedroom.

Of course the children were out of the bed then!

The quilt had felt so proud and happy covering the children each night.

The quilt had loved being tucked under their chins. The quilt had felt their affection.

Then the children had grown up and the quilt had been used for a big, tall bed.

And then once more the quilt had been used for children—the children of those who had grown up.

And then the quilt had been used again for grownups.

Oh, the quilt had had a long, long life. You will hardly wonder that the quilt had had a proud and happy time for many, many years, when you hear that the quilt was now over a hundred years old.

But for the past ten years or so the quilt had been in the attic. The trundle bed was deserted. The children of the second group of children now slept in other beds.

The trundle bed was used sometimes on rainy days when the children played house in the attic.

But the poor old quilt with its moth-eaten holes, its dark blue covering faded and dusty and musty now, thought of the long life it had had and how now it was permitted to be used by moths for a moth banquet.

Nothing is a greater disgrace for a proud old quilt than to be used as the table for a moth banquet.

But all of a sudden the quilt knew a great change. The quilt was brought down from the attic and dusted and swept and made all nice and clean.

"It has a few moth holes in it," they said, "but it will do."

Once more the quilt received fine speeches and kind words. Once more they said how warm it was and how light in weight it was.

But what do you suppose the quilt was used for now? For covering the laps of members of the family when they went for rides in the automobile. Even an old quilt had to change and become modern and go dashing through the country. It was a change for the old quilt, but the old quilt really liked it and did not feel so old-fashioned as you might think.

Would Jimmie Fit?

EMBARRASSING

Willis—How do you like the combination furniture they have in some of these New York flats?

Gillis—Not at all. I went to bed in a piece of that kind of junk the other night at a friend's house and when I woke up, two women were serving breakfast on the footboard, a fellow was signing checks on the headboard and another fellow was underneath the bed making coffee.—Kansas City Times.

In Readiness for Ddy of Pleasure

The feeling between most European countries at present seems to be a good deal like that of a certain Tipperary Irishman.

It was the day of the county fair, and in the morning this distinguished Tipperary arrayed himself in much finery, including a coat with swallow tails that reached quite to the ground.

When he was all decked out in this spectacular scenery his good wife exhibited much concern.

"And why," she inquired anxiously, "are ye after wearin' a coat the likes of that in the daytime?"

"I'm wearin' that coat," he replied, "with the hope an' expectation that somebody'll thread on me tails, an' then I can have a fight."—Thrift Magazine.

A big tiger, being shipped to Singapore on its way to the New York zoo, escaped from its cage on a freight train in the Federated Malay states and trotted into a hotel near the station. Old Folks Need a Mild Laxative –Not a "Physic"

Most men and women past fifty must give to the bowels some occasional help else they suffer from constipation. One might as well refuse to aid weak eyes with glasses as to neglect a gentle aid to weak bowels.

Is your present laxative, in whatever form, promoting natural bowel "regularity"—or must you purge and "physic" every day or two to avoid sick headache, dizziness, biliousness, colds, or sour, gassy stomach?

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin helps to establish natural, regular bowel movement even for those chronically constipated. It never gripes, sickens or upsets the system. Besides, it is absolutely harmless and pleasant to take.

MOON DOES NOT CAUSE WET OR DRY WEATHER

One of the commonest and likewise one of the most unreasonable weather superstitions, is the belief that if the horns of the new crescent moon tip downward, it is a wet moon, portending rain.

The position of the lunar crescent depends upon the angle that the moon's path makes with the horizon, and on any given date it is always the same in places having the same altitude. If this weather sign were trustworthy the same kind of weather, either dry or rainy, would prevail on any given date throughout a belt of latitude extending entirely around the globe. Of course there is no such uniformity of weather in relation to latitude. In the temperate zones, where the weather travels from west to east, the greatest contrasts of wet and dry weather conditions are likely to be found along parallels of latitude rather than meridians of longitude.

Near the Equator the position of the young moon never makes an angle of more than 30 degrees with the horizon, and it is generally in an even more nearly horizontal position, so that in a part of the heavy rainfall, the moon is, according to the proverb, always a "dry" one. The final absurdity is the case of the crescent moon as seen from the north and south poles, where it is always what the proverb describes as "wet," for at those places the line joining the tips of the crescent always makes an angle of less than 25 degrees to the verticle; yet the polar regions are characterized by so little precipitation in the form of rain and snow that they rank among the arid regions of the globe.

SHERM DERTHICK OF NEWVILLE IS UNDER ARREST

Chief of Police Charles Davis of Auburn and Sheriff W. G. Morr figured in an automobile accident Friday night between 11 and 12 o'clock while on their way to the home of Sherman Derthick, residing two miles north of Newville, to arrest Derthick in connection with an alleged moonshine law in fraction.

The sheriff's car was not available so Chief of Police Davis and his car were called into service.

The police chief and the sheriff were driving on the Mullett highway, four miles east of Auburn, in the city police department roadster, going toward Newville. From the east, a Ford coupe driven by Anthony DeParis with Ray Francis of Garrett as the other occupant, was coming without the lights being dimmed. The two machines came together, damaging both of them, but none of the occupants were injured.

The officers proceeded to Derthick's home and searched the place, discovering a gallon jug and a five gallon keg which are said to have contained liquor. Derthick was placed under arrest and the liquor was confiscated to be held as evidence.

Derthick has been more or less in the public eye for a number of years on account of alledged law infractions. The officers have received reports that Derthick has been selling liquor in Auburn.

Late Saturday Derthick had not been arraigned in court and was still in jail.—Saturday Evening Star.

The Water Bearer

THE PICNIC

SYNOPSIS—Idly fishing Hermanos creek, in California, Caleb Warner, civil engineer and a New Englander, is witness of the end of a coyotte pulled down by two wolfhounds, urged on by a girl rider. Admiring the hounds, he introduces himself, and learns her name is Clinton. With western hospitality she invites him to the ranch to meet her father. At the Clinton home Warner learns his new friend's name is Betty. He is welcomed by her father, Southern Civil war veteran and owner of Hermanos valley. He tells them something of his ambitions and his feeling that he is destined to be a "Water-Bearer." In the town of Golden Warner shares an apartment with his old Columbia college chum, Ted Baxter, carefree and somewhat dissipated youth, only child of his widowed mother, who controls the family fortune. At a club luncheon Baxter introduces Caleb to Wilbur Cox, leading business man and president of the water company which supplies the needs of Golden. He gives Cox an inkling of his ambitions, and Cox, impressed, invites him to dinner that night. During dinner Cox asks Caleb to call at his office next day. He does so and Cox arranges a meeting between Caleb and Hinckley, the water company's chief engineer. Baxter tells Caleb he is in difficulties with a girl, Mary Morgan, Cox's stenographer, who insists he must marry her. With Hinckley, Caleb looks over the water company's source of supply, the Crystal springs, in Hermanos valley. Prospecting in Hermanos valley, Caleb meets a man, Evans, who boasts of his ability, through "divining rods," to locate water without boring.

CHAPTER VI—Continued

"But it ain't no good," he said, suddenly disconsolate. "'Cause why? What's the good of water 'less you can use it? The stle here ain't thick enough to put dirt in yore fingernails. It wouldn't grow a radish. An' the wells wouldn't be artesian. They'd have to have windmills to work 'em. And, as I said, they ain't no stle. Seems like a plumb bit of foolishness to put water where it ain't no manner o' use, don't it?"

"Have another cigar," said Caleb. "Where do you suppose all the water comes from?"

The Welshman looked at him pityingly.

"You fish that stream an' you'll see. This is Caliente sink. The stream runs into it like dishwater goes down the drain. Wish you luck, mister. An' thanks for the smokes. Some day, if you come this way, an' I'm feelin' better, I'll give you a demonstration. I'll be glad to see you any time. Kinder lonesome here in this oven, but it's baking me back to health."

Caleb went on upstream in a maze. It seemed, though his Yankee mind affected to scoff at the suggestion while it considered it, as if he had come into close touch with mystery. He fingered the emblem on his seal and smiled. Had the sign of the zodiac, Aquarius, really charged him with destiny, leading him along the trail to be the Water-Bearer to the frontier city of the sands?

Half a mile up the canyon from where the gravel road branched off, an arroyo entered from the east through a bench that was thick-furred with underbrush of desert species. Only a trickle of water was in the almost dry watercourse, barely lasting to mingle with Hermanos creek.

The place was wild enough, and silent. A grass-grown road chose either bank at random, fording the creek at frequent intervals. He found stones to keep his feet dry as he crossed.

Up the road he began to come across evidences of an abandoned rancheria. There was little left but the roots and a scattering of tentative tendrils, scantily leaved. He passed a corral, no longer tenable, a lean-to shed without a roof, a leaking flume, a tumbledown wall of stone, and then he became aware that he was walking through what had been once a garden, a stately garden, still with a certain dignity.

The garden had attracted him unconsciously and he had left the half-obliterated road. He did not go back to it but wandered on to the house that rose above the cypress guard. Caleb's footsteps rang hollowly as he passed over the flags and glanced in through where a door had failed as warder. He was beginning to people the place with such ghosts as he imagined should represent the former occupants when he heard the high, clear sound of laughter at the very instant that his nostrils conveyed to his nerves of smell, thence to palate and to stomach—so that his mouth watered and his appetite proclaimed itself with no uncertainty—the smell of broiling meat.

His hope of something from a ranch larder, a glass of milk, a piece of cake or pie, if nothing more substantial, had died with sight of the deserted house. The tracks he had been trailing must lead too far for him to follow uncertainly. And now he had blundered on to a picnic—a California picnic—which means a barbecue.

Caleb's stomach yearned, rose in revolt against his manners and so far won that he ventured to the outer door of the arch and peered through.

The laughter had ended but he could hear the chatter of young voices, men and women, hidden somewhere down by the stream that had wheeled to flow in front of the old house and marked through the interstices of a tall, thick mantle of wild-grape, flung over the arms of the trees.

In front, between house and stream, there was a smoking pit straddled by an iron grid on which two swarthy men were turning joints of meat from which came the smell that had loosened all the spigots of Caleb's gastric economy. One of them looked up. Caleb had no time to disappear. No wish, once the mutual recognition had been made. The cook, el cocinero, was Luis Padilla.

The swinging screen of grapevine parted and two people came through, Betty Clinton in her riding togs and an upstanding young man in riding breeches, puttees and a shirt of silken tan, with a tan-colored stock about his neck. A tall, good-looking chap with a clipped yellow mustache and brown eyes, good teeth displayed in a hearty laugh, generally genial and eminently well pleased with things in general.

The girl was laughing, too, laughing so heartily in silvery carillons that she stopped from sheer lack of breath and then, regaining somewhat of gravity and lung power, called to Luis:

"What is it, Luis?"

"Senorita, eet eez el Senor Warner."

"Discovered, upstage, center, peering through the postern," said Caleb as he came out in response to the girl's instant and cordial greeting.

"You are just in time. Did you come on foot? How did you know we were here? Mr. Warner, Mr. Thurston."

The two shook hands while Warner explained the accidental happening of his arrival. Betty Clinton was giving some directions to Padilla and his assistant.

"Come on," she said, "and meet the rest. Dad's here. This is my annual picnic and barbecue. Birthday festivity, you know."

She Took Possession of Him.

She took possession of him. The man named Thurston lagged behind as they broke through the pines and looked down upon a level bank of turf, fringed with ferns, just above the level of the creek. Two girls and an older woman were aiding and directing the laying of a table by two men. Clinton himself sat apart, back to the bole of a tree, smoking. He rose as Caleb came into view and the rest looked up.

"I'll make the introduction general," said Betty Clinton. "You can all make it personal later. This is Mr. Caleb Warner. I think I've mentioned him to all of you. And these are—Carmen Wilson"—she indicated a girl with black eyes, in a white dress, wearing a scarlet beret so vivid that its outline was fuzzy with radiance; "Mrs. Henry Vedder, Henry Vedder and George Brompton. The meat is barbecued. The enchiladas are at the height of their excellence. Be seated. Dad, you at the other end. Mr. Warner, next to me, at my right. All right, Padilla, bring on the carne. I hope you brought an appetite with you, Mr. Warner. Carmen, pass the enchiladas. Frijoles, if you like them better. They are our substitute for Boston beans, you know. And the salsa, Mr. Brompton."

The meal was all animation. Good viands, good nature and a general bubbling over of high spirits.

Bits of the talk, allusions, chaffing remarks, together with little summaries supplied him by Betty Clinton, soon put Caleb in possession of surface information concerning the members of the party.

Thurston had been a bank clerk, losing his position in the merger of banking interests. But he had possessed sound commercial faculties and, backed to some extent by his uncle, he had started raisin growing in the Fresno valley. Now he owned hundreds of acres and was rated almost a millionaire, soon to pass that mark.

Henry Vedder was editor of the Pioneer, a weekly published in Golden, of recognized literary merit. His wife had a leaning toward modern esthetics, extending to her gown and her mode of hairdressing. She apparently saw nothing except through the medium of her husband and she hung on his every word in the attitude of one who eagerly waits the opportunity to encore the performance of a favorite dramatist.

George Brompton was an artist who specialized in mural work. He was the most diffident of all the company, with an especial shyness toward Carmen Wilson, which that vivacious personage did not appear to regard as the kind of tribute to her charms that she preferred.

Thurston and Betty Clinton had ridden down Hermanos canyon to the picnic on horseback. The rest had come in a buckboard, by the longer road, a wagon preceding with the materials for the barbecue. Luis Padilla had come mounted. The vehicles and the horses were stowed in the old barns. The whole party was returning to El Nido in the early evening, where Maria was now preparing a fitting dinner for the fiesta of her young senorita's birthday.

"You are to come, too," she insisted to Caleb. "And stay over tomorrow. I am not to be denied anything today and I make that an order. You need not feel that you are crowding or were not included in the original invitation. There is lots of room.

"You have made it an order," said Caleb. "That settles it."

Here again was a different side to the girl, he thought, as he listened to her lighthearted talk, admiring her quick wit. He caught himself watching her closely whenever she laughed. The inside of her mouth was as pink as a kitten's and she laughed without reserve, so that one caught a gleam of even rows of teeth that needed no dentist, backed by the rosy glow of health.

Caleb enjoyed himself thoroughly, the food, the company, the talk and the shady spot beside the stream.

After the meal, Betty Clinton proposed an excursion. Vedder claimed to have had an inspiration for a poem and said that he was going to try to put it on paper in the old garden. His wife was no more to be detached from him than a limpet from a rock. Clinton himself made the excuse that he was not feeling especially energetic.

"Then Mr. Brompton must stay to keep you company," announced Carmen. "You and Mr. Clinton can discuss that pioneer panel. Mr. Brompton," she went on to Caleb, while Brompton smilingly acquiesced in the arrangement, though the smile was as wan and lacking in warmth as a winter sun, "is working on a set of panels for Judge Hemingway's new house. They are to represent California, past, present and future. And Mr. Clinton is brim full of pioneer lore, aren't you, Mr. Clinton?"

It was obvious that Carmen Wilson intended to make the trip to the lookout a foursome. Clinton smothered a smile. Brompton seemed to be used to this sort of thing and the four started.

They were less than half way when Betty Clinton suddenly missed her camera.

"I have been intending to take a photograph of that view for two years," she exclaimed. "The light is wonderful. Wendell, you'll get it for me, won't you? We'll wait here. It's in the buckboard under the seat."

Thurston went swinging off on his errand and the three sat down to be comfortable until his return. The change of scene seemed to have put Betty Clinton in more serious mood.

"Have you found your opening yet?" she asked Caleb.

It looks as if Carmen Wilson intends to capture Caleb. Does Betty care?

Decries All Fear of Athletic Heart

College students need no longer fear that four years of hard football or track work will leave them with a shaky "athletic heart" in middle age. Experiments by Dr. Burgess Gordon of the Boston Peter Bent Brigham hospital on men and animals revealed that the heart, instead of enlarging after strenuous exercise, actually shrinks. Furthermore, no enlargement of the heart resulted after prolonged athletic training.

Doctor Gordon made his observations on Boston marathon runners, and rabbits with normal and abnormal hearts. The rabbits were exercised to exhaustion, and X-ray pictures taken immediately afterward revealed a shrinkage which took time to disappear. The strained hearts of marathon runners also got smaller, Doctor Gordon said, and did not return to normal for several hours.

Athletes were studied to note any permanent enlargement of the heart which could be blamed on the exercise, but it was found that the most prolonged vigorous efforts did not produce the much dreaded hypertrophy of the heart.

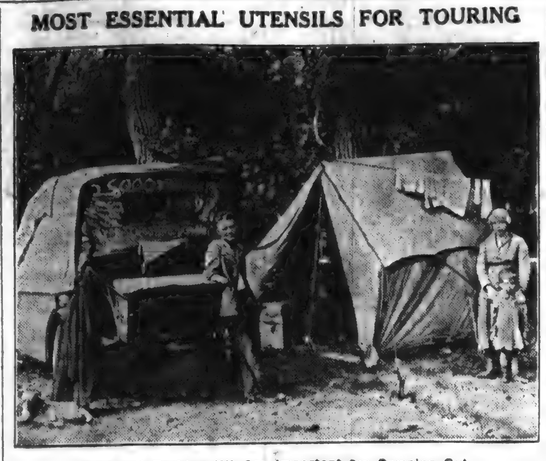
MOST ESSENTIAL UTENSILS FOR TOURING



Tent and Cooking Kit Are Important for Camping Out.

Camping out is one of the great privileges available to all who motor and at this season thousands of motor car owners are planning their expedition afield.

For those who expect to enjoy camp life for the first time, the Touring Bureau of the National Automobile club, California, issued a few suggestions. Here they are:

Travel light, is the first rule of camping equipment. Don't attempt to carry all the household furniture along if you really want to enjoy your outing.

The essentials include a good tent or a comfortable bed arrangement within the car; a good stove, beds and bedding, a compact kit of kitchen utensils and a few tools.

Good Tent Essential.

The choice of a tent is important. The tent should be light, compact and easily erected. A canvas floor is well worth while and tent pegs should be of metal. Cots, folding into small form, are better than heavier springs.

Folding mattresses add to the comfort of the night's rest. Blankets are easily carried and pack well. Take plenty of bedding, as nights in the mountains even in midsummer are usually cool.

The real woodsman would probably scorn an up-to-date stove of the gasoline type such as is now turned out by the camp goods factories, but wood is scarce in many of our forest reserves, and the path of easiest resistance is to provide yourself with a dependable stove with folding oven attached. The gasoline stove is ideal, particularly for short trips, and the camp fire doesn't have to be disturbed for meals.

Cooking Kit.

A complete cooking kit of aluminum utensils nesting into the largest pan makes for camp efficiency and occupies the least room. Food should be carried in tin cans and a vacuum bottle comes in handy for a hot lunch along the way between camp grounds or out on a hike.

Don't carry with you articles of value. It's far cheaper to invest in a complete camp cooking outfit and use it only for camping expeditions than to leave some of the family silver out in some remote part.

A water bag should be a part of the camp equipment, and extra gasoline and oil carried on the running board is a safeguard against trouble and delay.

The lighter you travel, provided you have the essentials along, the easier it will be on car and passengers and the more enjoyment you will get from your expedition.

Parents Also Urged to Caution Children Against Begging for Rides.

With the summer outing season in full swing, pedestrians on the highways are urged to follow the rule of walking on the left side, in a Minnesota highway bulletin.

"Walking on the left side of the road has been advocated for some time by police and highway officials who have made a study of automobile accidents, yet a large number of people continue to use the right side of the road when walking," says the bulletin. This makes it impossible for them to see vehicles approaching on their side of the road. The motorist may see the pedestrians, but he can never be sure which way they are going to turn. If he meets another vehicle just as he is about to pass a hiker, it may be impossible for him to turn out without striking one of them.

Begging for Rides.

"The habit of asking for rides should also be discouraged. Police in a number of cities have often issued warnings against the practice. Most motorists would be glad to give pedestrians an occasional lift, but the habit of asking for rides has been so much abused that many drivers as a matter of self-protection refuse all requests to give strangers a ride. Parents should be urged to caution their children against asking for rides. The practice is exceedingly dangerous when youngsters stand in the traveled portion of the street or highway and signal for a ride."

Pedestrians Involved.

An analysis of the motor vehicle accidents made for the recent Hoover safety conference showed that pedestrians were involved in 29,962 out of 47,128 accidents reported in the state of New York in 1926, and that of 1,891 persons killed, 1,155 were pedestrians. The report further shows that 50 per cent of the motor vehicle accidents and 65 per cent of the fatalities occurred on straight, level roads.

Adjusting Motometer Is Rather Difficult Task

It is a common opinion that the proper way to collect the fluid in the indicating tube of the motometer, if it becomes separated, is to stick the stem of the instrument in boiling water. This is an erroneous opinion, as it will never gather the fluid. The fluid is separated due to the fact that the instrument was left lying on its side and air bubbles formed. It remains separated until it is restored to perfect working order, even though the instrument is put in an upright position.

This is correctly accomplished by holding the motometer in an upright position and quickly tapping the bottom of the instrument on the spare tire of the car until the liquid is gathered.

Schoolboys Make Novel Safety Street Device

To insure motorists observing the sign, "School Street" "Slow Down," in front of their schoolhouse, boys of a carpentering class of San Diego (Calif.) school have built this unique dummy and firmly implanted it in the middle of the street. At first glance it appears to be a policeman holding aloft the warning sign.

Cost of Running a Car Not Fixed by Cylinders

Engineers have debated the relative cost of operation of an eight-cylinder motor as against the six. Here is the comment of one expert: "The expense of running a motor doesn't depend so much on the number of cylinders as it does on the number of cubic inches of piston displacement.

"Take a given piston displacement and divide it up any way you want to, into two cylinders, four cylinders, six or eight cylinders and you will use just about the same amount of gas.

"Of course, the greater the number of cylinders, the more overlapping of power impulses occurs and the smoother the operation of the motor. But don't make the mistake of thinking that additional cylinders mean additional expense, unless the piston displacement is increased."

AUTOMOBILE HINTS

The mythical "man in the street" is no myth to the driver who is trying to keep his record clean.

At night a parked car should have its lights turned on to show a white light ahead and a red one behind.

Seventy-six per cent of all motor cars sold in the United States are bought on the deferred-payment plan.

Thirty-six world records are said to have been broken during a nonstop run by an automobile over the Monza track in Italy. The car covered 14,916 kilometers (9,269.85 miles) in 144 hours.

WOMAN CONQUERS FEARS

Husband Delighted and Home Happier

St. Paul, Minn.—"Here is a little advice I would like to have you put in the papers," Mrs. Jack Lorberter of 704 Dellwood Place wrote to the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Company. "If young women want to keep their health and strength for the next thirty years of their lives, it is best to start in right now and take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I have tried the Compound myself and received fine results from its use." In describing her condition before taking the Compound, she writes, "I was afraid in my own house in broad daylight, I used to lock the doors and pull down the shades so that nobody could see me." One day a booklet advertising the Vegetable Compound was left on her porch and she read it through. In so doing, she found a letter from a woman whose condition was similar to her own. "I bought Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound," Mrs. Lorberter continued, "and have had fine results. My condition made me a burden to my husband. Now I ask him, "How is housekeeping?" and he says, "It is just like being in Heaven!" Are you on the Sunlit Road to Better Health?

Perfumes to Cost More

Grasse, France, the perfume center of Europe, with 29 distilleries, will run short of 600,000 pounds of petals this year as a result of the late frosts and inclement weather which destroyed a fifth of the Riviera flower crop. Manufacturers say this shortage will cause at least a 25 per cent increase in the cost of French perfumes.

Frozen Eggs From China

A. J. Morris, vice president of the American Merchant lines, in charge of traffic at New York, reports a new unloading record established when 32,000 cases of frozen eggs from China were removed from the liner American Farmer in 20 hours. The eggs, which were in tins, were brought over in refrigeration. The American Farmer arrived at New York port June 22.

ROAD BUILDING

HARD-SURFACED ROADS SAVE CASH

Motorists of the United States save more than $1,600,000,000 annually in motor vehicle operating costs as a result of the construction, since 1904, of 133,000 miles of hard-surfaced roads and 153,000 miles of gravel roads, said W. H. Connell, president of the American Road Building association.

This statement featured the address Connell made before the organization's convention when it met recently at Raleigh, N. C.

Such a saving in motor vehicle costs for the United States exceeds the annual cost of the improved highways," Connell declared. "In Pennsylvania alone an analysis of operating costs of motor vehicles proved conclusively that the construction of the hard-surfaced roads has saved more than $32,000,000 annually.

"The annual cost for each mile of hard-surfaced roads constructed in the United States under the federal-aid system is approximately $3,850, or about $446,000,000 for the 133,196 miles. For the gravel roads it is about $2,000 per mile, or $305,000,000 for the 153,000 miles, making a total of $751,000,000 annual charge for hard-surface and gravel roads.

The construction of these roads saved the maintenance cost for the 286,000 miles which have been replaced totaling $143,000,000. Therefore, the additional annual charge due to construction is only $608,000,000. Deducting this from the saving in operating costs of $1,630,000,000 leaves a net annual saving of $1,022,000,000."

Thickness of Brick for Use in Building Roads

In an effort to determine the proper thickness of brick for use in road building the United States bureau of public roads has just worn out a specially constructed test roadway at the experimental station at Arlington, Va. A truck carrying a load of 7½ tons was driven constantly over the circular road and the time required to break down each brick was noted.

Motor Operation Costs Determined by Roads

Research work conducted by the Pennsylvania highway commission, the findings of which have been reported to the good roads board of the American Automobile association, brings out in a striking fashion the difference in motor vehicle operating costs over improved and unimproved roads.

It is shown that the cost of operation for all types of motor vehicles over hard-surfaced roads is 25 per cent less than the cost of operation over dirt roads, while the operating cost on gravel roads is 10 per cent less than on dirt roads. These are average economics and apply to tires and other equipment. The result of this study and other similar investigations are now being effectively used by the bureau of public roads and the various highway departments to determine on a scientific traffic basis which roads should have precedence in improvement.

Good Roads Hints

There are 7,850 motor bus routes in the United States, operated by 5,000 motor bus companies.

During the three years of 1923, 1924 and 1925, Pennsylvania built 8,470 miles of roadway.

The prompt use of the drag as soon as the rain is over means better roads for weeks to come, and it doesn't take much time to drag a mile.

* * *

Numerous tests throughout the country have shown that paved highways really cost less than unpaved roads.

It has generally been conceded that it costs from two to four cents per mile less to drive over hard-surfaced than unpaved roads.

* * *

There are no grades on the entire transcontinental Lincoln highway which the average car cannot climb. Compression should not be used on long down grades.

WHAT WE KNOW ABOUT CANCER

WHAT do we actually know about cancer today? We know that it does not grow on perfectly healthy tissue; that before real cancer appears there is a period which is called "precancerous" and that this condition is probably due to some irritation over a long period of time. A man who has cancer of the tongue, for instance, before he develops a cancer will have, for months or even years, a sore spot or an irritated place on his tongue, caused by rough, sharp or unclean teeth. A woman who develops cancer of the breast will have, for years before the cancer appears, a lump or an irritated or tender spot on her breast. A person who develops cancer of the stomach will have, for years before the cancer begins, a chronic dyspepsia or an irritated condition of the stomach. Cancer of the stomach frequently develops on the edges of an ulcer of the stomach, which originally was not cancerous.

So the time to cure cancer is before the cancer begins.

Any lump, sore, mole or irritated spot may be the starting point for cancer. Anything which causes constant and long continued irritation of any part of the body may be the beginning of one of these terrible growths.

In the beginning they can be cured or removed with little inconvenience. It is only later that they become dangerous.

There is no medical treatment for cancer. There is no drug that will cure or in any way benefit this disease. Anyone buying any medicine under such a hope is simply throwing away his money and losing precious time.

The only treatment up to recent years was surgery—the removal by the knife of the growth. In some cases, life was prolonged and made more comfortable.

The use of X-ray and radium in the treatment of cancer has given better results than surgery, especially in cases where the growth was located on the skin or near the surface. Even these methods, however, have only slightly improved the chances of recovery.

What do we know about cancer? No one today knows the cause of this disease.

Actual cancer is probably preceded by a precancerous condition, which is not cancer and which can be cured by proper treatment.

Any sore, lump, mole or irritated spot may become the location of cancer. Any unnatural discharge may be an early symptom of cancer.

Do not neglect this warning. Have any unnatural discharge or irritation investigated by a physician at once.

CARE OF THE TEETH

THE teeth are among the most important organs in the human body. They are not the lifeless things many people seem to think. On the contrary, they are just as living and indispensable as the truly "vital" organs, the heart, the lungs and the brain. While injury of them is not as immediately destructive of life, they have just as important a function to perform in the maintenance of health and the duration of life.

The teeth must grind, mix and prepare the food before it goes into the stomach. Unless this is properly and thoroughly done, the stomach cannot digest its food properly, and the body cannot be properly nourished. So every part and organ of the body suffers and each part is hampered in doing its own work.

Probably at no time in his history has man suffered so much from decay of the teeth as at present. The oldest remains of man, while they show some cases of tooth decay, in the main prove that primitive man had unusually sound teeth. Ruffer, who made a careful study of many thousand Egyptian mummies, found that the early Egyptian had excellent teeth and that decayed teeth were rare. He also found that the Copts, who lived near them in the valley of the Nile, had poor teeth and that most of the Coptic mummies had many decayed teeth. He accounts for this by the fact that the Egyptians ate hard food like corn, wheat and other grains and so had to work their teeth hard and constantly, while the Copts, their next-door neighbors, ate soft foods, which required little chewing and so gave the teeth little hard work.

This rule, which was discovered hundreds of years before the pyramids were built, is just as true today as it was then. Any part of the body which has to work hard is healthy and vigorous. Any organ which loafs on the job degenerates. So primitive man, living on fruits, nuts, grains and other hard foods which require much chewing, have splendid teeth, while those who live on soft foods are much more apt to have trouble with their teeth.

Nature provides teeth that with ordinary care will last as long as the rest of the body. Ill use or neglect cause the teeth to decay, become loose and fall out, so that in many cases by middle life, when the teeth should be at their best, they are worn out or gone, and some artificial substitute must be devised to take their place.

His Choice

"Poets prate of the sweetness of the songs of the nightingale and the skylark," remarked Uncle Fogy, "and occasionally of the chiming of the wedding bells, the notes of the throstle stealing through the darkness across the lake, and all such. But to me the most delightful music in the world is the deep, resonant 'Choog! Pfoog! Ker-ploog!' of the circus rumble wagons pompousing through the gray of the morning on their way to the show grounds."—Kansas City Times.

Character and Brain Told in Handwriting

"It is necessary to distinguish between a pretty writing and a legible one," declares Doctor Logre, a well-known Paris psychiatrist, in giving his verdict on whether a really intelligent person can have a good handwriting, "as the two qualities are not always found together. Study of manuscript suggests approximate laws, some of which are: 1, illiterate people usually have a legible, but inelegant writing (too regular, too correct); 2, fancy writing is very often a symptom of mental debility (adorned, scrolled, vain writing); 3, intellectuals who write much and rapidly, such as doctors, lawyers and writers, have a writing which is usually hard to read (easy, but indistinct, the pen chasing the alert thought, without regard to form); 4, intellectuals who are artists usually have a pretty writing (writing with a distinct personality, expressive); 5, intellectuality is not the sole cause of illegible writing (careless, slackness and lack of discipline are also to blame)."—Chicago News.

Furs From Alaska

Furs shipped from Alaska to the United States since its purchase in 1867 have been appraised at $98,800,000. The value of last year's output was $3,000,000. Ninety per cent of the world's fur seals are in a herd owned by the United States government in the Pribilof islands, off the coast of Alaska. The herd numbers approximately 700,000.

Men, Too, Seek Beauty

Dr. D. Don Hindman Cleared of Charges of Default in Accounts

Testimony in the guardianship of Samuel Hindman of Jackson township was heard in the DeKalb circuit court last Wednesday. Mr. Hindman filed objections to the final report of his son, Don P. Hindman, who acted as his guardian for several years.

When Samuel Hindman testified recently he declared that when Don became his guardian he owned four teams of horses, three cows, hogs and chickens and 20 head of sheep, with hay in the mow and corn in the shed. He said he paid Don $150 for the expenses of each of two trips to Texas to sell his land there and that he gave Don the money to pay taxes. He also stated that Don received $1,500 from a public sale of the live stock, $1,100 for rent of the farm and $265 from the sale of four cows and he said Don never accounted for any of this money. He indicated that Don was about $5,000 short in his guardianship account.

When Don took the stand Wednesday afternoon he said that when he became guardian $125 in cash belonging to his father came into his possession and that his father owned no other personal property, a public sale having been held previously. He said he collected $600 rent, $1,266 from the sale of the Texas land and $175 from the sale of hay. He declared he paid the taxes, personal expenses for his parents and the upkeep of the farm, thus consuming the entire amount of the receipts.

L. B. Meek of St. Joe, testified that Don paid him for merchandise bought by Samuel Hindman. The latter had said he did not know Mr. Meek and never owed him.

Clyde G. Rectenwall, a Spencerville banker, testified that Don got $200 at the bank to pay expense of one of his Texas trips.

Mrs. Samuel Hindman testified that so far as she knew the guardianship reports filed by her son were correct. She said her husband sold the farm crops and received the money for them and that he also received $500 in rentals. She said she knew her husband did not have the money to pay the expenses of Don's trips to Texas and that she heard Don say he borrowed this money. She also knew of Don paying for $500 worth of tiling for the farm and that he paid the taxes.

Jack Sechler was tenant on the Hindman farm durng Don's guardianship. Don told the court that he paid from his own pocket for live stock and farm inplements used by Sechler and that the crops to be divided on a 50-50 basis between Sechler and Samuel Hindman. Don was to be repaid by receiving half of Sechler's share of the crops.

Sechler also testified to this deal. When Sechler left he bought a team from Don and the latter was to be paid for from Sechler's share of the crops. However, Don and his mother testified that Samuel Hindman sold all the crops and took the money.

At this time the case was dismissed until Friday afternoon when it soon came to a decision.

The elder Hindman claimed that his son failed to account to him for a large sum of money that he said the son collected while acting as his guardian. The son declared he not only rendered a complete accounting, but that he had advanced for his father's use.

It was agreed that the exceptions to the son's final report as guardian should be dismissed, that the report should be approved and that the son would dismiss his claim.

INDIANA WHEAT CROP IN SOUTH ENCOURAGING

With the cutting of wheat in Indiana and harvesting proceeding as rapidly as weather conditions will permit in the southern and central parts of the state, numerous reports are being received of heavy yields and of high quality of the product. Particularly from the southern part of the state are reports of high yields of extra quality wheat numerous, per acre production of forty bushels being common. Exceeding even this high mark comes one report from Posey county of a yield of an average of 61½ bushels an acre from a yield of thirteen acres, another yield of 42 bushels an acre for a field of thirty acres and another thirty-acre field with an average of 46 bushels to the acre. Some of this wheat weighed as much as 65 pounds to the bushel, an extraordinary record for Indiana.

With approximately a population of 25,000, 180 diamonds were listed in DeKalb county this year for taxation. Records of F. M. An appeal to the public for aid in the apprehension of thieves who have been stealing red lanterns from the various construction jobs of the State Highway Commission was made by officials of the commission. Money payments to members of congress for making prohibition speeches was defended in a statement today by the Methodist board of temperance, prohibition and public morals, as being no worse than acceptance by them of fees for legal services rendered while congress is in session. The statement said many congressmen, Senator Reed, Democrat, Missouri, included, practice for larger fees than the Anti-Saloon league ever had paid and that many members of congress receive pay for chautauqua lectures.

Unless The Bank Is More Than a Mere Commercial Machine

UNLESS it is more than simply an institution for paying dividends to stockholders; unless it is imbued with a real spirit of public service and a desire to be a constructive and upbuilding force in the community—then it is falling far short of what a bank should be.

While this bank, like all banks, must be operated for profit, it does not for a moment lose sight of its higher duties to its customers and to the public.

It was reported that when the assessors completed their work in May since that time thirty-five have called and settled with Mr. Shook.

BETTER BE CAREFUL WITH YOUR EATING

This month and next are the most dangerous in the entire year for those who cram their stomachs to capacity with the many tempting things now easily obtainable for the dinner table. Ask any doctor around about it and he will tell you that July and August are the two months when thousands of people dig their graves with a knife and fork. He will give you the same advice we are giving you—only he may charge you for it—and that is to eat lightly, stay out of the sun and don't keep your stomach chilled with ice water. This advice is hard to take, we'll admit, when we are right in the season of the best "eats" to be had during the entire year. But the man who heeds it now and for the next few weeks will live to eat another day. So be among the wise ones and watch your knife and fork closely as long as the dangerous days are here.

VOL. XL ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, AUGUST 12, 1926 NUMBER 32

RENDERING TALLOW EXPLODES, HEAVY LOSS

Fire destroyed the slaughter house used by Harman & Hellinger on the old Frank Herrick farm north-west of town, Friday afternoon, the large bank barn, owned by Orange and Chas. Herrick, machinery owned by Orange Herrick and Lloyd Douglas and eight acres of wheat in the bundle, owned by Wm. Miller, causing a loss of several thousand dollars to all those interested.

The building used as a slaughter house was about ten feet west of the hugh bank barn, and had a metal roof. Wm. Harman was busy rendering tallow and he reports as the storm was approaching the tallow became frothy and he does not know whether it exploded or whether lightning struck but all at once he room was on fire inside.

He carried water and tried to put out the blaze. Help was summonsed from passers-by and they called the St. Joe Fire Department, but every effort was futile. Within a few minutes the entire barn was in flames and only a few pieces of machinery were removed.

The barn was insured, but not enough to cover much of the loss. The wheat of Mr. Miller's was a total loss, representing at least $350, and the machinery represents perhaps a greater amount. The contents of the slaughter house will run $100.

In the effort to extinguish the blaze Mr. Harman burned his right arm considerable.

ANOTHER ST. JOE CITIZEN DIES

Another one of our elderly citizens has been called to the great beyond, in the pasing of Benjamin Franklin Terman, on Thursday of last week at the age of 76 years, 5 months and 27 days.

His health had been considerably impaired for the past two years and his last illness was of about ten days duration.

Mr. Terman was the son of John Terman and wife, being born February 8, 1850 near Mansfield, O. He was married to Mary Jane Crawford at Plymouth, Ohio, November 9,1871. Shortly after their marriage they moved to Defiance county, where they resided for thirty years. Later they moved to Orangeville on the farm now known as the Rupp farm, and Mr. Terman was engaged as miller for a number of years.

After retiring from the mill and farm he moved to St. Joe, where he lived at the time of his death.

He was affiliated with the K. of P. lodge. Besides his wife, he leaves two brothers and three sisters.

The funeral was held from the home Suhday afternoon. Rev. Otis Jones, M. P. pastor, officiating. Burial in Riverside cemetery.

ANOTHER WORD FROM DR. H. R. MINNICK

A line from Dr. Minnick of Matthews, Ind., calls our attention to the News not being delivered regular. We are glad for this being called to our attention. In his letter he states:—

"We have had a very hot time the last month, had a good rain a week ago, and a very heavy rain yesterday has cooled the air considerable. Crops in general are pretty good, considering the hot weather. Wheat crop is good and of good quality, oats look chaffy but most of it in shock yet.

My outlook here looks good has gone very well for the time I have been here. If you ever come near here call and see me. Hope the people of St. Joe are mostly well. Dr. Vanderberg of Albany, (the place I left, was buried yesterday leaving a good opening for somebody."

AMERICAN GIRL WINS ENGLISH CHANNEL HONORS

Gertrude Ederle has conquered the English channel.

The first woman ever to complete the swim of the turbulent stretch of water, seperating England from France, she swam Friday from Cape Gris-Nes to Kingstown in fourteen and one-half hours.

The young American girl not only accomplished a feat which swimmers of her sex had always attempted in vain, but she broke, by nearly two hours, the best previous record, made three years ago by Sebastian Tiraboschi, an Italo-Argentine.

She went into the water off Gris-Nez at 7:09 A. M. and waded out at Kingstown at 9:39 P. M. last Friday.

84 YEARS AND STILL ACTIVE, CUTS WHEAT

Florance Buchanan, age 84 years is perhaps the most active man in DeKalb county, when you consider age and physical infirmities. As he goes about he uses a crutch and cane, his sight and hearing are both impaired and he is bent by the weight of years and hard work. He has been a physical giant, but within the past two years, and still his ambition to work asserts itself in a remarkable way.

Last fall he had a patch of wheat sown on the rear of his lot, measuring 75x125. The crop is harvested and the yield is 6 and one-half bushels. The manner in which this crop was harvested is the important thing, showing the determined will of this aged citizen to be doing something, rather than being idle.

The wheat stood thick and grew to the average height for the year, and the owner was proud of his prospects of a crop. When the grain was ripened he used a grass knife, the gathering, tying and shocking were done by hand. When about half done with the cutting, Harlow Ulm came to his rescue.

When the crop was in shape for threshing, Mr. Buchanan carried the sheaves into the barn and with a stick proceeded to flale the wheat out. The next process was to wind the chaff. This being the ouly job of threshing he expected to do, he just took his time.

In conversation with Mr. Buchanan, he stated that he desired to have his boy friend miller, George Wilson of Edgerton, Ohio, to mill this wheat for their own use.

SUNDAY SCHOOL WORKERS PLAN TRAINING INSTITUTE

Plans for a training institute were made Wednesday night at the home of Miss Sadie Coy of Auburn by the Young Peoples' Department of the DeKalb County Council of Religious Education. It was decided to include teachers and adult leaders of the different townships which have organized Sunday Schools on the program.

The institute will be held in Auburn the last Saturday in September. Talks will be given by the Geneva students. Geneva students are those who went from DeKalb county to Geneva, Wis., Monday to attend training school. Myrtle Hamman of Waterloo, Annis Harding of Corunna and Florence Beams of Spencerville, will attend the conference for girls. Two weeks later Mark Cripe and Sidney Smith of Corunna, will leave for Lake Geneva to attend the boys' conference.

The Young People's conference wil be held at Waterloo at the United Brethren church Oct. 30 and 31, it was decided at the meeting. Roy Burkhart of Daytin, O., will be the speaker. The young people's banquet will be held Saturday evening, October 10th.

SAMUEL HINDMAN WANTS TO MANAGE OWN AFFAIRS

Samuel Hindman of Jackson township, has filed a petition in the DeKalb circuit court for the discharge of his guardian and asking that he be adjudged competent to manage his own affairs. Mr. Hindman's son, Don P. Hindman, served as his guardian for several years, but the father charged his son with failing to account for all the moneys that came into his posession and he resigned. After a hearing in court, the son's final report as guardian was recently approved by agreement of the parties. J. R. Culbertson is now serving as guardian.

Sports Togs for Summer Outings

Interesting Outfits to Be Worn on Back-to-Nature Vacation Jaunts.

The same sort of durable costume which in other seasons has sufficed the girl who fishes and hunts, camps and canoes, may be depended upon to make its reappearance this year, no matter what the decrees of Dame Fashion in urban places. Here and there, observes a fashion writer in the New York Herald-Tribune, there are some incidental changes—sometimes there is such a temporary aberration as the knicker vogue—but in essence the modern costumes for field and stream are not greatly different from those that have gone before.

However, the obliteration of smartness as a consideration in the open spaces should not blunt your sensibilities to the necessity for chic. Indeed, it seems a paradox that the eclipse of fashion should emphasize all the more strongly the need for daintiness.

In that connection the bifurcated costume plays a larger role than usual on today's page. The riding, hunting and hiking habits have an accompanying coat which reaches to within six inches of the knees, and if rotund mesdames must wear the knickered costume these long coats will go a long way toward preserving the never-to-be-sacrificed chic. Even when worn with this screening wrap, though, the pantalette suit may include a wrap-around skirt; it will frequently be found a welcome alternative.

The best fabrics for fishing and hunting costumes are cotton covert, corduroy, tan linen, khaki and gabardine. Of these cotton covert cloth is in the ascendancy at the moment. It is lighter than khaki and a lot more pliable, but greater than either of these, it is washable. The color need not necessarily be tan—beige, rust and hunter's green are quite as durable and far more attractive. A more elaborate fabric note is sounded by Paris in the form of English woolens for the rough outdoor costume, but these are hardly as practical as the less expensive materials.

Jacket, Skirt, Knickers.

Jacket, skirt and knickers are the typical uniform for the jaunt back to nature, and if you simply cannot resist the call of the mode, you may wear a cape. In fact, your wrap-around skirt should be a potential cape; it should be of the type that can be readily converted into that protecting garment in case of rain.

Tradition demands more colorful raiment for the canoeist. Just how many romances have had their inception in a quiet paddle on some woodland lake will never be known, but the environment requires more than the utilitarian costume suited to other phases of summer outdoor life. Our suggestion is a jumper costume with a skirt plaited sufficiently to permit that step from the wharf to the canoe. And just to demonstrate your urban possibilities, have the jumper bloused. Make the most of your single opportunity to be smart.

Be extremely careful in the selection of your shoes. Treking along mountain passes that are uneven and damp emphasizes the two paramount needs in this type of footwear. The shoes must be large enough and the leather ought to be waterproof. Add two sizes onto your normal measurement when you purchase hiking shoes. This will allow for the heavy woolen hosiery which must be worn, and it will also allow for a possible enlarging of the feet after heavy walking.

Oil-tanned leathers will be found excellent in barring out dampness, and chrome-tanned leathers are even more satisfactory, as these, in addition to being absolutely waterproof, never crack or become brittle after the wet leather dries.

Heels, of course, must be low—almost to the vanishing point. Of course, there is a definite sacrifice of chic in this arrangement, but it is obvious that even the trimmest ankle cannot march far in a high-heeled slipper. Another necessary detail is the high shoe—avoid low slippers if you are going to negotiate any rough places.

Your hat, which should be of some soft felt, may be large, not in deference to the broad-brimmed millinery that Paris is now sponsoring, but because sweeping brims are a greater protection against the rays of the midday sun, particularly after a dip in the lake.

Sports Clothes Popular.

The Parisienne has completely changed her character since the war. In days gone by she left the more strenuous forms of amusement to her English and American sisters, confining herself to the art of looking charming, which she still pursues just as diligently. Now, however, in addition to appearing chic and being always delightfully dressed, she indulges in every sport and game that the most athletic Anglo-Saxon enjoys and does them remarkably well, as opponents of the unquenchable Suzanne will testify. Very likely it is due to the fact that the Parisienne has taken up sport so wholeheartedly that sports clothes have become more alluring during past seasons and have filled such an important part in the world of dress generally.

An Interesting Jumper Frock Worn by Dorothy Sebastain, "Movie" Playbr.

Undoubtedly it is to the riding habit that we owe the smart and conventional tailormades one sees all smart women wearing for city mornings. All Paris rides in the Bois de Boulogne during the season and for this finest of all sports the Parisienne has copied her English sisters, often going over the channel to order her habit to insure its perfectly correct fit and cut.

For town riding navy blue is one of the smartest colors for the side saddle habit—the really chic Parisienne only rides astride when she is practicing polo shots. Beige covert coatings are sometimes chosen for the summer, but they are more suitable for the country. If a lighter color is chosen it is best to have gray whipcord. It may not be startlingly original, but it always looks well and is correct for most occasions.

For riding astride beige or gray whipcord breeches and a slightly darker coat are correct, with brown or black boots, according to the color of the breeches.

Golf and Tennis Suits.

Golf and tennis, of course, have more devotees than riding. For tennis the one-piece frock is the most, indeed, the only really practical sports costume in Paris. Its full plaits insure the greatest possible freedom of movement, its sleeveless armholes give scope for stretching to reach every ball, however high, and the belt is loose enough to allow the waist to be absolutely supple.

This being now almost a classical costume for tennis, one must consider how to bring the always essential changes by means of accessories. An excellent example of this differentiating accessory is found in the knitted jersey coats of different colors in light angora wool that are worn by Mlle. Lenglen to match the swathed georgette bands with which she keeps her hair in place. Her garters are of the same color, but worn above the knee.

An overcoat to slip on after the game is essential both for golf and tennis. There was once a tradition that for tennis it must be of white blanket cloth or some similar fabric. Now the mode is more elastic and anything sensible and plain such as ordinary beige tweed lined or trimmed with fur is considered quite as suitable for tennis as for golf.

The sweater and skirt have become as classical for golf as the Lenglen frock for tennis. The only possible variation is the new suede leather blouse-coat with a stockinette belt that was invented in England.

Handkerchiefs draped round the neck are still very fashionable on the golf course. They are neatly worn and do not flutter in the wind. Folding a handkerchief in four lengthwise folds and pinning it in front where it crosses over is perhaps the neatest.

Evening Shoes Fanciful

Evening shoes are richer and more fanciful than ever and their wearers are just as fanciful if poorer after buying them. The latest models are elaborately embroidered with crystal and semi-precious stones and some real diamond bracelets are seen on the newer evening slippers.

The KITCHEN CABINET

(©, 1926, Western Newspaper Union.)

A meal should be regarded as an important end in itself. It should be taken at leisure, body and mind being given up to it, and to agreeable social intercourse.

"GO TOGETHER" FOODS

In the study of foods, if we plan the proper menus we will not feast one day and fast the next.

We should avoid serving of cream soup, fat meat, sweet potatoes, a vegetable with drawn butter sauce and a salad with a rich mayonnaise dressing—all dishes of high fuel value—in one meal.

Dishes hard to digest should be withheld entirely from children. The custom of feeding small children away from the family table is a good one, as then they need not see or want foods not good for them.

Concentrated foods should be served with things which will serve to dilute them, hence the custom of serving dry crackers with cheese or cheese combined with rice, macaroni, hominy or bread and milk in various dishes.

Butter, another concentrated food is used on bread and potatoes, making a balanced ration.

Small portions of foods well-masticated will be well-digested while overeating will cause trouble.

If the family has a light meal for one of the day it should be the cook's plan to make up the deficiency in the next meal.

Planning the meals a week or more ahead gives the housewife an opportunity to use wisely the foods at hand and thus avoid waste.

Condiments aid digestion, add flavor and enhance the pleasure of many foods; they should be served sparingly and never given to children.

The reason for serving apple sauce with pork is that the acid of the apple helps in the digestion of the pork and so it seems an agreeable combination.

It is a good plan for the housewife to keep a chart of foods that are good to serve together. Roast of beef, Yorkshire pudding, lamb with peas, steak with fried onions or mushrooms and such other vegetables as are appropriate.

Take occasional trips to some tearoom or hotel where food is served nicely, to learn new ways of serving food and new combinations and garnishes.

EVERYDAY GOOD THINGS

For a delicious breakfast bread you might try the following:

Sally Lunn.—Mix at night one cupful of milk, two eggs, two tablespoonfuls of butter, one teaspoonful of salt, one tablespoonful of sugar and four cupfuls of flour with one-half cupful of good yeast. Cover closely and put to rise, giving plenty of room for rising. In the morning beat well, turn into greased muffin pans and set to rise an hour, then bake in a moderate oven.

Tongue on Toast.—This is another good breakfast dish which uses the rough pieces of boiled tongue. Mince the tongue, adding a bit of onion juice, nutmeg, salt and pepper, a tablespoonful of chopped green pepper. Prepare a rich white sauce, using half milk and half broth with the tongue, adding two tablespoonfuls each of flour and butter cooked together. Sweet cream may be used instead of milk, omitting the milk and butter; add the tongue and pour over squares of buttered toast.

Gateau a la Africaine.—Beat three eggs, add three-fourths of a cupful of sugar and the same of flour. To the beaten yolks add the sugar, beat well, add the flour and beaten whites, stirring lightly, add flavoring, and bake in patty tins. When cool remove the centers, fill with whipped cream sweetened and flavored and put together in pairs. Cover with chocolate icing.

Welsh Rabbit.—Cut one-half pound of cheese into bits, put it into a saucepan, scald a pint of milk, add a beaten egg to which has been added two tablespoonfuls of flour and one-half teaspoonful of salt. Let this mixture cool, stirring until smooth, then pour the milk into the cheese and beat vigorously with an egg beater. Season to taste with cayenne pepper and serve on hot buttered toast or large crackers which have been browned and buttered lightly.

Cocoa Angel Food.—Take one-fourth of a cupful of cocoa, fill the cup with flour. Beat one cupful of egg whites until stiff, add one cupful of sugar and one-fourth teaspoonful of cream of tartar. Fold in the flour and cocoa and bake in a tube pan just as angel food. Serve with strawberries and ice cream.

Another nice dessert with ice cream is one made with a sponge cake recipe, baked in a sheet. Put a slice of brick ice cream on a square of cake, cover with another, cover with strawberries crushed and sweetened, with a spoonful of whiped cream for a garnish and serve.

Serving meals in courses helps the artistic effect of a meal and it is often easier than getting the meal all on the table at once; however, without a maid, this is not always convenient.

Thirty-nine freshmen have been awarded scholarships for next year at DePauw university as a result of making a total of more than forty points for the last two semesters. Six of the men received the Rector scholarships at the end of the first semester.

Twenty-two undergraduate and nine graduate students have been announced by Dean David A. Rothrock of the Indiana university college of arts and sciences as composing the honor list of "A" students at the school for the second semester of last year.

A gain of approximately five per cent in 18 different lines of business in the state during the last six months over the corresponding period for 1925, is shown by the current issue of the Indiana Business Review, published by the Fletcher American National bank of Indianapolis in co-operation with the Indiana university.

The contest is one of the enterprises directed by the young Friends in connection with the peace movement which is interesting the denomination.

A brief visit with her grown daughter, whom she has not seen since babyhood, is all Mrs. Louis Tonquet of Marion desires so that she may die in contentment. Confined to her home with an incurable disease, the woman has appealed to newspapers and the Associated Press to help her locate the daughter, Elsie Wright. Mrs. Tonquet said she does not know where the girl, now about twenty years old, is living.

Debora Henderson, age one hundred and six, believed to be the oldest woman in the state, died at the home of her granddaughter, Mrs. John Hess, eight miles east of Terre Haute. Although there are no birth records to verify Mrs. Henderson's age, her granddaughter and descendants say there is a record of the birth of a daughter 86 years ago, when Mrs. Henderson was fifty years old. Four generations of her descendants are living.

ROAD BUILDING

NAMES OF NOTED ROADS CHANGED

"There is no more reason for abolishing the names of our famous highways than there would be for abolishing the names of crack trains," says Charles M. Hayes, president of the Chicago Motor club. "It is right for the railroads to establish numbers for their trains, and these numbers are always used by railroad men; the old familiar names, however, are used by the traveling public. The Twentieth Century, the Overland Express, or the Seminole Limited, known only by numbers, would lose half their romance. The same is true of our highways.

"Calling state and federal highways by numbers is the efficient method, but in using numbers we should not abolish the historic names that have attached themselves to those highways. No routing agency would wish to go back to the old system of using names only; the combination of the official number and the unofficial name is ideal. Such names as the Lincoln, Grant, Dixie, Appalachian, Old Spanish trails, and the National Old trails have a tremendous historical and geographical significance. Traveling over these roads is more of an adventure than if these famous names were to be discarded for the highly efficient and highly impersonal numbering system.

"The recommendation of the joint board of the interstate highways at Washington to eliminate the names of highways has met with organized opposition all over the country. It is pointed out that at the beginning of the good roads movement, men have been moved to give their funds because of the inspiration of such names as Lincoln, Lee and Harding; it is also pointed out that the traveling public has become so familiar with these names that much confusion would result in eliminating them entirely. The Appian and Ostian ways, known as numbers 21 and 22, would never have gone down in history. Let us retain our numbers for efficiency, but let us retain our names for sentiment; in this manner the engineer and the layman will be satisfied."

Will Erect Memorial to "Father of Good Roads"

Joseph H. Weeks, "the real father of good roads in Pennsylvania," who established the first comprehensive system of highways and who was the first president of the Keystone Automobile club, is to be honored by the erection of a $35,000 memorial in Swarthmore.

Funds for the memorial are being raised through the efforts of the Keystone Automobile club and by popular subscription. The club has purchased a plot of ground triangular in shape at Baltimore avenue and Chester road, in the center of which it will erect a memorial monument, the center feature of which will be a bronze plaque containing a relief map of the state highway system established by the Sproul act of 1911, which act Mr. Weeks was instrumental in having written upon the statute books.

The memorial will be in the nature of a small park, in the center of which there is to be a sunken terrace circular in form and at the bottom of which the plaque will rest. It then can be viewed from every angle. Mr. Weeks died in 1919, and plans for the memorial have been considered ever since that time.

Built 5,900 Miles of New Roads During 1925

Motorists will have about 5,900 more miles of concrete road to travel over during 1926 than they had in 1925. Added to the 31,700 miles built in previous years, there are now approximately 37,600 miles of concrete on the highways in the United States outside limits of incorporated cities and villages.

The building of 5,900 miles of concrete highways in a single year establishes a new record and along with the improvement of many other miles of gravel and grading was no small job for the road builders. It involved the use of tremendous quantities of materials and the employment of a great army of workers.

A feature of the past year's highway construction activities was the efforts of the road builders to inconvenience the motorists as little as possible. In every way the policies of the state highway departments were to serve the highway user.

More attention was paid to detours around construction jobs. They were kept in good condition and were carefully marked so that the motorist could reach his destination with the least inconvenience.

Billions for Roads

Road-making plans for this year in America will call for the expenditure of nearly $1,250,000,000, which will exceed the amount thus spent in any previous year. It had been thought that fine progress had been made in the creation of great thoroughfares, but it seems that the soil has merely been scratched. As a result of the motor industry all the country is pledged to a program of road building that will ultimately link up virtually all the cities of the nation.

Cleveland, Ohio.—"I have really had all kinds of trouble. After having my first baby, I lost weight, no matter what I did. Then a doctor told me I would be better if I had another baby, which I did. But I got worse, was always sickly and went down to 98 pounds. My neighbor told me about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, as it helped her very much, so I tried it. After taking four bottles, I weigh 116 pounds. It has just done wonders for me and I can do my housework now without one bit of trouble." —Mrs. M. Riessinger, 10004 Nelson Ave., Cleveland, Ohio.

If some good fairy should appear and offer to grant your heart's desire, what would you choose?

Wealth? It's a transient thing that brings it's own cares.

Happiness? It's an elusive thing which we keep by giving away.

Health? That's the best gift. Health is riches that gold cannot buy and surely health is cause enough for happiness.

Mosquitoes mar marksmanship in Porto Rico, where the sniper is being sniped. A target practice report reaching the War department from the Sixty-fifth infantry at San Juan, P. R., states: "Aside from the heat experienced during the month, the mosquitoes have been so thick as to seriously interfere with the efficiency of the work."

Details are omitted and War department officials are wondering whether clouds of mosquitoes obscured the targets or whether marksmanship was afflicted with disaster from the mosquito either on the front sight or on the rifleman's nose.

HOT-PACK CANNING FOR STRING BEANS

Hot-Pack Method and the Pressure Canner Should Be Used for String Beans.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

There's no more delicious vegetable than tender, fresh, string beans, and if properly canned, the straight-from-the-garden flavor may be retained for winter days. Most people plant string beans at intervals of two or three weeks during the season, so there will be a constant supply. Of these, the youngest and most tender should be canned whenever they are ready. As there will be more from time to time, this plan makes the work of canning easier, for one may do a canner full at a time, instead of having to handle the whole crop at once. Beans that have become a little large may be used directly on the table, and if they are cooked as soon as possible after being gathered they will have a fine flavor.

The pressure canner is recommended for canning string beans, says the United States Department of Agriculture. Pick the string beans over carefully, wash them thoroughly, string them, and cut into pieces of the size you wish when they are served. A quick way to do this is to hold a bundle of beans in the left hand and slice them across diagonally with scissors or a sharp knife. By this method of diagonal slicing, the tiny beans in the pods are cut in two and more flavor is developed in the canned product. Also when they are served, they take up the seasonings better.

Add enough boiling water to cover the beans and boil them for five minutes in an uncovered vessel. Pack them boiling hot into your containers, cover with the water in which they were boiled, and add one teaspoonful of salt to each quart. This short precooking wilts and shrinks the beans so that they pack to better advantage. It drives out the air in the tissues and thus makes exhausting unnecessary. Also when the hot-packed containers are put at once into the hot canner the beans, even those in the center of the jar or can, reach the temperature required for processing sooner than if they had been packed cold. Process at 10 pounds pressure or 240 degrees Fahrenheit. Quart glass jars are processed for 40 minutes, pint jars for 35 minutes, and No. 2 and No. 3 cans for 30 minutes.

If you expect to do much canning this year, send to the United States Department of Agriculture for Farmers' Bulletin 1471, "Canning Fruits and Vegetables at Home." It is free while the supply lasts.

ICE CREAM WITH CHOCOLATE SAUCE

Homemade Dish Is Nourishing and Easily Made.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Treat the family—to homemade ice cream occasionally. It is nourishing and good and does not take very long to make, the United States Department of Agriculture says. A good ice cream may be made at home by allowing two tablespoonfuls of sugar and half a teaspoonful of vanilla to each cup of cream used. A small amount of salt—about one-fourth of a teaspoonful in a quart of ice cream, should be added. To make hot chocolate sauce put two ounces or squares of unsweetened chocolate in a double boiler, melt, cover with half a cup of hot water and add 1 tablespoonful of butter and 1½ cupfuls of sugar. Stir until smooth and cook to a rich sirup. This will take about 15 minutes. It should be served at once, if possible. If the housekeeper is also cook, the sauce must be kept warm but not allowed to cook while the rest of the dinner is being eaten.

What Calories Are

We hear much about "counting the calories" in the foods we eat. It is sometimes assumed that calories are a measure of the nutritive value of a food. This is not correct. Calories are a measure of the fuel or energy value of a food. There are other points about the food value of any material just as or sometimes more important than the calories it contains. In judging the nutritive value of any food the amount and quality of the protein, the vitamins, the iron, calcium and other minerals, that it contains should be considered just as carefully as the calories.

Chocolate Turns White

If a cake of chocolate appears white on the outside this does not indicate any harmful change in the chocolate. It simply shows that the chocolate has been kept in an overwarm place. When pure chocolate is subjected to too high a temperature, even that above 80 degrees Fahrenheit, it melts and the fat rises to the surface. When the temperature is lowered again this fat hardens and looks white in contrast to the brown of the chocolate itself. This does not injure it in any way for use.

CANNED PLUMS ARE GOOD FOR CHANGE

Hot-Pack Way of Canning Most Satisfactory.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Breakfast fruit during the winter seems to be limited to a very few varieties unless you have some canned fruits to fall back on occasionally. Plums are one of the best fruits to use for this purpose. They are good either whole or as sauce, with the skins and pits removed. Plums put up in this way are also useful as a luncheon dessert with a few cookies or a piece of cake, and they make very good pie. Some of them can be recooked to make plum butter, when you are not as busy as you are during the fruit season.

Plums may be canned by either the cold-pack or the hot-pack method. The latter is more satisfactory. Gather the plums just as they are beginning to ripen. If you decide to can them whole, prick each plum after washing, to prevent the skin from bursting. Fill them into jars and cover with boiling sirup, made by boiling together one part of sugar and two parts of water or plum juice. Process quart and pint glass jars for 20 minutes in boiling water, and No. 2 and No. 3 tin cans for 15 minutes.

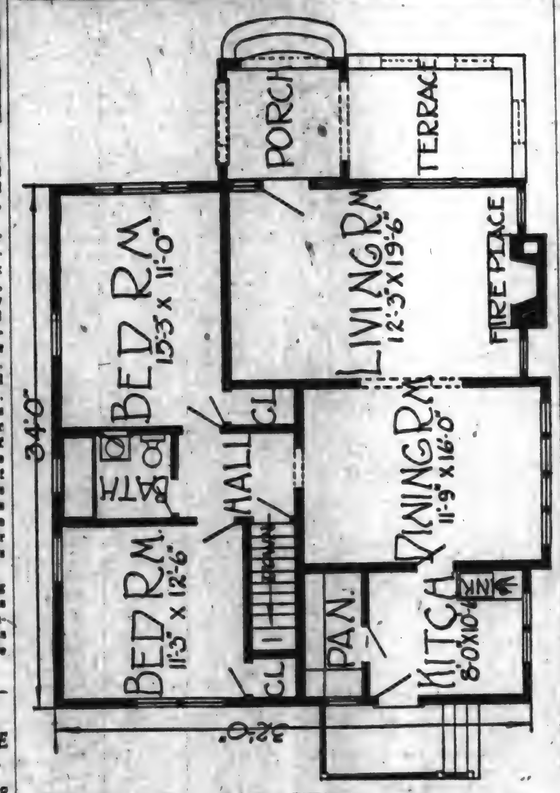
If you pack them hot, cook the plums with sugar to taste until the sugar has dissolved, fill the containers boiling hot, and process all sizes for five minutes in boiling water. Complete time tables and directions for doing all this season's canning will be found in Farmers' Bulletin 1471-F, which may be obtained free from the United States Department of Agriculture at Washington.

Almost Any Fruits May Be Made Into Fruit Cup

Almost any fruits you happen to have, or are able to get, may be made into a fruit cup, but practically always should have some orange or grapefruit, or both, says the United States Department of Agriculture. The mild acid of an orange brings out the flavors of other fruits. Orange, banana and apple, in equal proportions, is a combination available at any time, anywhere. Add to this, or substitute for part of it, a slice of pineapple, some leftover canned peaches or pears, cherries, apricots, a prune or two, dates, figs, with a few nut meats, perhaps—one or two or any of these will make your fruit cup good. Berries in season may also be used. The fruit should be cut in small attractive pieces, not larger than a raspberry, and they should not be stirred about even when you sweeten them, or they will look mushy and shapeless. Orange and grapefruit sections should be freed from white peel, pits and skin.

Do not sweeten if the fruit mixture is to be used for salad. Otherwise sprinkle lightly with sugar about an hour before dinner and set in the refrigerator to ripen and cool. Toss with a fork a little if it is necessary to mix the sugar in thoroughly.

Individuality in Home Building Is Obtained by Good Designing



Floor Plan.

By W. A. RADFORD

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give ADVICE FREE OF COST on all problems pertaining to the subject of building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as editor, author and manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on the subject. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 1827 Prairie avenue, Chicago, Ill., and only inclose two-cent stamp for reply.

As we pass along any street lined with homes we are often impressed with the fact that houses are very much like people. Some are large and others small, some plain and others bright and gay, some old and others new. Some have an individuality which is long remembered while others are almost immediately forgotten. This individuality among houses is just as marked as it is among people and, as with people, when a house stands out from its neighbors because of individuality which is pleasing, it is one with which we wish to have a continued association.

For this reason people everywhere are striving more and more to attain individuality in their homes and so to build them that they will express the personality of the owners. The inexperienced may attempt to do this by decorating the house with novelties and special features, but the result is never satisfactory and the skilled designer will accomplish the purpose in a more satisfactory manner by the use of good design.

Take, for example, the little home pictured here. There is nothing fancy or pretentious about it, but the observer is instantly impressed with its individuality and remembers it long after many of its more pretentious neighbors are forgotten. It is a simple frame cottage with walls of wide lap siding and a roof covered with composition shingles in blended colors. The terrace and porch are finished in stucco and the chimney is of a well-selected brick.

It is the skillful combining of these elements and the careful attention to proportions and the well treated roof lines that make this house successful in the attempt to express personality. The lattice effect in the opens of the terrace and at the windows and the long French windows themselves do much to overcome any tendency toward plainness without creating any of the effect described as "gingerbready."

With such well-handled exterior design we need not be surprised to find an interior which has been treated with equal skill. The plan provides for five rooms and bath. These are a living room, dining room, kitchen and two bedrooms. The living room, at the front, is entered directly from the porch and ranged back of it are the dining room and kitchen.

At the other side of the house are the two bedrooms both of a size to meet all practical needs and provide ample wall space for necessary furnishings. The bathroom is placed conveniently between them and a small hallway gives access to this portion of the house from the dining room. This hall also contains an entrance to the basement stairs.

The kitchen is of the small compact type with built-in equipment arranged to make the most complete use of every inch of space and reduce the labor of housework to a minimum. Connecting with it is a large pantry which will be appreciated as a storage place for household supplies, and as a place to install a refrigerator in such a way that it may be iced from the back porch.

Compactness is a conspicuous feature of the whole arrangement in accordance with modern ideas and requirements which demand a maximum of utility with a minimum of building expense and housework. It is the same demand which has created the modern kitchenette apartment, the demand growing out of the increased cost of real estate and building, the lack of servants and the new appreciation of the waste of too much time devoted to caring for little-used rooms.

United States Is Now Land of Home Owners

America is now becoming more and more a nation of homes of the people, by the people, for the people and is a democracy—a Lincolnlike democracy.

The slogan that men fought to save democracy sounds good, but back of all this high-sounding sentence were the words and worth of Lincoln's thought—the home.

No man will fight for a boarding house, but millions crossed "over there" to protect their homes "over here."

What this country wants is more home owners—people who can call a house a home.

Where is the man, the great man in this country, that will rise out of the mob of material getters—where is the man who will come forward and build homes for the provident and see that these homes can be paid for on the partial payment plan, without interest, without taxes, without hindrance of any kind if necessary?

The steady, straightforward, saving and serving class are usually home owners. Let us help those who want to own their homes to own them.

Some day to own a home will be the hallmark of reliability. It is the duty and should be the privilege of every patriotic citizen, banker and business man to encourage humans to own their own homes—to do more than to encourage—to help.

Not all individuals that are interested in industry own their own homes, but nearly all humans that own their own homes hold permanent positions. Their self-interest is on the job.

Constipation! How to Keep Bowels Regular

To Dr. W. B. Caldwell, of Monticello, Ill., a practicing physician for 47 years, it seemed cruel that so many constipated men, women, children, and particularly old folks, had to be kept constantly "stirred up" and half sick by taking cathartic pills, tablets, salts, calomel and nasty oils.

While he knew that constipation was the cause of nearly all headaches, biliousness, indigestion and stomach misery, he did not believe that a sickening "purge" or "physic" was necessary.

In Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin he discovered a laxative which helps to establish natural bowel "regularity" even for those chronically constipated. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin not only causes a gentle, easy bowel movement but, best of all, it never gripes, sickens, or upsets the system. Besides, it is absolutely harmless, and so pleasant that even a cross, feverish, bilious sick child gladly takes it.

City Water From Glacier

The city of Boulder, Colo., has taken steps to purchase from the United States government the land occupied by the Arapahoe glacier, distant about fifteen miles from the city, with the object of supplementing the city's water supply from the melting ice. According to the weather bureau of the United States Department of Agriculture, this is the first instance of a town or city in this country deriving a part of its water supply from a glacier.

Reckless Questioning

Attorney J. Lyman Gray was questioning Dr. E. A. Gates during a trial in Superior court relative to the time that he visited a patient, and the physician said he believed the date was December 25.

"Was it on Christmas day?" the attorney asked.

"It was December 25, as I recall it," the physician said.

"December 25 is usually Christmas, isn't it?" the lawyer asked.

"That is a reckless question, isn't it Mr. Gray?" Judge Christopher T. Callahan asked with a twinkling of the eye.—Springfield Union.

Charles L. Rickey, 25, living two miles north of Syracuse, lost his life last week in an effort to capture sheep killing dogs. He with three other men were chasing the dogs from the farm, Richey carrying a gun. As one of the dogs neared and pased him he struck the dog with the stock of the gun. The stock broke off and the gun was discharged. The gunshot entered Rickey's right side near the lower ribs, tearing a large hole, and penetrated his lungs. He was carried to his home and lived but a few hours.

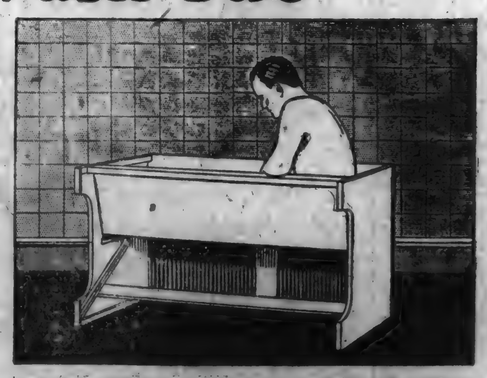
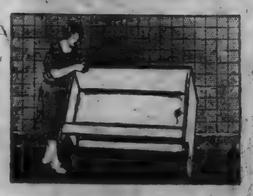
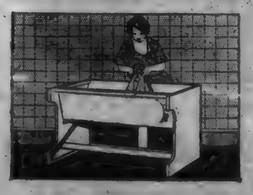
Good-Bye— Old Saturday Night Wash Tub

"Them days are gone forever"



For now you can have the SANI-TABL-TUB





No plumber to hire
No plumbing to buy—
A kitchen unit that is never idle.

YES, gone are the days when you need to take a bath standing in the old wash tub, which is almost like no bath at all.

Gone are the inconveniences of lugging in the tub, pouring—and spilling—out the water, mopping up the floor, and all that.

The Sani-Tabl-Tub is a new invention, a full size bath tub, good to look at, easy to get into, and comfortable when you are in it. You set it anywhere in the house—preferably in the kitchen where it is comfortable and where warm water is easily had at the stove.

Remember, this is a sturdy, full size, bath tub. A 250 pound man can get into it with safety, stretch out his legs full length, and enjoy the luxury of a real bath. Easily drained at bottom, no dipping out and spilling water.

Then, the morning after, turn it a quarter way over and you have a fine table with porcelain enameled top,—none better made,—too nice to cover with a table cloth when you eat breakfast off it. Thus it saves laundry work. All day long you have a table for work, study, a laundry tub or for any one of a dozen other uses.

The Sani-Tabl-Tub is strongly built of steel, yet is so light that it is easily turned over or moved about. Tub and sides are handsomely finished in DUCO-ENAMEL, hard, smooth and practically indestructible. Table is standard height, convenient to work at, with foot rest extending full length.

—and the cost—you'll be surprised. It is so low you can not afford to get along without it if you enjoy the cleanliness, comfort and convenience afforded by a modern full size bath tub. You couldn't install and equip a bath room for twenty times the price. It is so easy to own a Sani-Tabl-Tub that every day you get along without it causes you needless discomfort and unhappiness.

COURT ORDERS DERTHICK TO PAY $35 FEES

An order was entered in the DeKalb circuit court Monday requiring Sherman Derthick of Stafford township, to pay the $35 attorney's fee of his wife, Gladys Derthick, who is sueing him for a divorce.

The suit was filed while Derthick was in the county jail under arrest for possessing liquor. Mrs. Derthick and her two young daughters remained on the Warren Scoville farm where the family had been living and after Derthick secured his release from jail on bond last week he returned there. Mrs. Derthick asked for support money, but the petition was resisted by the defendant. It was shown that all of the members of the family are getting their support from the proceeds of the farm.

Derthick and his wife each want the other to move onto another farm owned by Scoville. Derthick objected to going there because he would be two miles from his crops. His wife also objected to going. The court told her that as long as she was living under the same roof with her husband he would not make an order for support.

The couple were married August 11, 1911, and they have two daughters, Phyllis, 14 and Leone, 12. Mrs. Derthick declares her husband beat her with his fists and weapons and he was at one time arrested for assault and battery upon her. She says he has an ungovernable thirst for liquor and is an habitual drunkard; that he accused her falsely of improper conduct with other men and that he threatened her life. The plaintiff adds that her health and spirit have been broken by a long course of debauchery and abuse on the part of her husband.

Frank Harrell, custodian of Lagro high school, while cleaning up the school building last week, found a snake two feet long with twenty small ones.

The will of the late Alpheus W. Madden of Auburn, former county auditor, was filed for probate in the DeKalb circuit court Saturday. It was executed January 12, 1922. After the payment of indebtedness, all the property is devised to the widow, Katie Madden, for the period of her natural life.

ASKING DEEDS TO BE SET ASIDE

A complaint to set aside a deed and contract has been filed in the DeKalb circuit court by Catherine Hart and her guardian, Dr. B. O. Shook, against Ida Benninghoff, Lulu V. Jones and Albert B. Hart of Ashland county, Ohio.

The plaintiffs say that on November 27, 1925, Catherine Hart and her husband, Aaron Hart, owned personal property amounting to $2,500 and also real estate in and near Spencerville of a like value. They lived on this real estate. Both of them, the complaint says, were suffering from the infirmities of age and were of unsound mind, incapable of transacting any business matters or having any comprehension of their business affairs.

Mr. Hart died in January. The complaint says that notwithstanding the fact that the defendants understood the mental condition of Mr. and Mrs. Hart, by undue influence they had them enter into a written agreement whereby they sold and conveyed to the defendants their real estate and personal property and in consideration therefor the defendants agreed to care for, support and provide the burial expenses for them.

Mrs. Hart was then eighty-seven years and her husband was in such condition that his death was expected daily. The complaint says that the defendants well knew that the agreement rendered no adequate consideration for the property and that they had no good faith intention of rendering any adequate consideration therefor.

The personal property consisted of $1,300 in money, a contract for the sale of a lot of the value of $800 and household goods worth $500. The complaint says Mrs. Hart owned this property before her marriage to Mr. Hart and that the defendants have converted it to their own use, depriving Mrs. Hart of her home against her wish and will and removing her to Ohio, placing her in the homes of strangers over her protest.

Dr. Shook was appointed guardian of Mrs. Hart in April, but he says he has been deprived of the possession and the rents from the real estate and of the personal property. He demands that the deed and contract be set aside and cancelled and judged null and void.

The WATER BEARER

THE RESCUE

SYNOPSIS.—Idly fishing Hermanos creek, in California, Caleb Warner, civil engineer and a New Englander, is witness of the end of a coyote pulled down by two wolfhounds, urged on by a girl rider. Admiring the hounds, he introduces himself, and learns her name is Clinton. With western hospitality she invites him to the ranch to meet her father. At the Clinton home Warner learns his new friend's name is Betty. He is welcomed by her father, Southern Civil war veteran and owner of Hermanos valley. He tells them something of his ambitions and his feeling that he is destined to be a "Water-Bearer." In the town of Golden Warner shares an apartment with his old Columbia college chum, Ted Baxter, carefree and somewhat dissipated youth, only child of his widowed mother, who controls the family fortune. At a club luncheon Baxter introduces Caleb to Wilbur Cox, leading business man and president of the water company which supplies the needs of Golden. He gives Cox an inkling of his ambitions, and Cox, impressed, invites him to dinner that night. During dinner Cox asks Caleb to call at his office next day. He does so and Cox arranges a meeting between Caleb and Hinckley, the water company's chief engineer. Baxter tells Caleb he is in difficulties with a girl, Mary Morgan, Cox's stenographer, who insists he must marry her. With Hinckley, Caleb looks over the water company's source of supply, the Crystal springs, in Hermanos valley. Prospecting in Hermanos valley, Caleb meets a man, Evans, who boasts of his ability, through "divining rods," to locate water without boring. Caleb comes upon a picnic party, the festivities being in honor of Betty Clinton's birthday, and is welcomed.

"I don't know," he answered. "I have been given a chance to go up to Beaver lake on a new project, but I do not have to accept just yet. Meantime I am looking around. I went over the Crystal Springs property yesterday."

"Did you?" broke in the other girl. "I've been there. Isn't it an ideal place for a picnic—or a honeymoon?"

Caleb laughed.

"I am afraid I was more practical in my imagination," he said. "I suppose, being from New England, I can't help that. I was chiefly interested in the water supply. But it was beautiful."

He gave them a little description of the trip and of how the dams had withstood the earthquake. And he added what Hinckley had told him of Crystal Springs valley before it had been turned into a great artificial lake.

"I can't help feeling sorry for the farms that had to be abandoned," said Betty Clinton. "It seems a shame when you think of the fertile fields being turned to silt, the schoolhouse and the little church that had stood so long being torn down."

"Think of what the reservoir meant to Golden! It made a city possible," returned Caleb. "There is sentiment on both sides of the matter. Where a dozen families were displaced the water gave opportunity to thousands. Public utility must be the first consideration."

"I suppose so. Just the same, if I had owned a farm there, I would not have sold."

"If the rest were willing they might have compelled you to."

"You mean by condemnation proceedings? Well, they'll never do anything like that to Hermanos valley, for we own the whole of it."

"Not even for the good of the many? If it was necessary?" asked Caleb. Carmen looked at him curiously, struck by a sudden change in his voice. He took things concerning his profession very seriously, did this young engineer, she decided.

Betty Clinton shook her head determinedly in answer to Caleb's query.

"Not while my father lives. Nor while I do. We might sell a part of the valley. We have talked of doing so. We do not use much of it. And the land has advanced in value. But nothing must touch El Nido. You did not see the little cemetery in the cedar grove. There are three generations of Clintons buried there. My mother's grave among them. They must never be disturbed."

Carmen saw the muscles bunch in Caleb's jaws and wondered. For a moment he was silent. For a part of his vision had seen Hermanos valley restored to a lake, dammed and holding storm waters. Betty Clinton sat quietly and Caleb gazed at nothing through half-closed eyes. Carmen regarded them with a pout.

"You're a cheerful couple for a birthday picnic," she observed. "As for Thurston, he must be making that camera, or gone to town for a film."

She got up and stretched lithely. Then she screamed suddenly and shrilly, turning to cling to Betty Clinton.

A big bull had come into his pasture, the upland plateau that he regarded as his own, a magnificent Hereford red of coat and white of face. He stood down-wind from the group and it was plain that he resented their presence. The great head was raised and lowered uncertainly, the wide curving horns tossed menacingly.

There was no shelter if the bull meant mischief. To run was to court disaster.

Carmen clung to her friend trembling, her eyes big with fear. Betty Clinton was pale but she faced the bull and not a muscle had quivered.

"I don't know just what we had better do," she said quietly to Caleb. "He's working himself up into a rage. If we could make Padilla hear and understand."

Caleb resented this a little. He did not realize that the girl was thinking of Padilla mounted, acting as vaquero. Perhaps the resentment quickened his wits to action. Carmen screamed again just as the bull lowered his head and charged straight for them.

Caleb snatched at Carmen's hair and grabbed the scarlet beret.

"It's your hat that bothers him," he cried. "I'll handle him. Run—both of you. I'll hold him. Run!"

He waved them off with a shout as the bull came on. He saw Carmen, her black hair streaming from his careless tug for the hat, snatch at Betty's hand and start to run swiftly toward the wall. He saw, for a split-second, Thurston's startled face appearing over the stones as he ascended, heard the girls cry out and Thurston shout. He faced the bull, the flaming beret in his hand, prepared to play toreador, unarmed.

The bull roared as his glaring eyes caught the flare of the scarlet taunt waved by the man. Blind to everything else, centered in the desire to glut his rage on the offending color, he raced over the turf, leaving a little cloud-trail of dust, shaking the ground with his weight as he pounded it with his hoofs.

Caleb waited, not quite as coolly as he had wished, warily judging distance. As the sharp horns swept up, scooping for the cloth he held out at arm's length, Caleb sprang to one side and ran forward as the baffled brute, snorting and maddened, plowed past him, front legs stiffened in the attempt to stop and wheel, the great head clumsily turned toward the red beret and Caleb, who halted twenty yards away and provokingly displayed the bait.

The girls had got safely beyond the wall. In a second or so they would be out of sight. He had now only himself to look out for. The bull turned and came racing back. Caleb knew that he could not dodge forever. He could distinguish Betty's clear, high voice calling for Padilla. The words were in Spanish. He recognised a few of them. "Toro! Riata! Cavalho!" Then the bull took up all his attention. It came on with incredible speed, the lumbering gait seemed freed by rage. As Caleb leaped aside the brute swerved so swiftly that a horn grazed Caleb's arm, ripping cloth.

This time he had to turn and run down hill, away from the trees. His foot caught in the hole of a ground squirrel and his ankle was wrenched as he stumbled and jerked it clear. It was not a bad sprain but it handicapped him and would not get better with exertion. The bull had halted more easily going up hill. It was chasing him before he had got well into his stride. He had to sprint to get the chance to dodge. And this time he ran for all he was worth. He had almost won the trees when the bull caught up the distance between them.

Caleb glanced over his shoulder. He could hear the snorts of the crazed brute. He saw the massive head shift sideways for the toss, saw the roll of the blood-rimmed eyes and he leaped sideways with the last of his energy, his lungs straining and his heart pounding. And, as he jumped, he made the sacrifice of the beret, dropping it fairly in the bull's course while he felt the sweep of air as the beast's head was flung up, backed by the force of mighty shoulders, one horn impaling the beret that clung there, driving the bull to frenzied fury while Caleb, panting, dodged among the aspens and saw Padilla, mounted, swinging his rope, top the rise and tear in at top speed, yelling as he came.

The bull got rid of the offending Tam-o'-Shanter. He ground it into the turf, stamping on it and bellowing. He tore it to rags and trampled them. And then he flung up his head to see what had become of Caleb. He heard the yell of Padilla, a vigorous "Yahoo!" that seemed to revive memories none too pleasant. He wheeled and surveyed the rider uneasily. To chase a two-legged creature was one thing, a man mounted, swinging a loop the sight of which also stirred his sluggish brain, was quite another.

Before the lariat was flung he turned and trotted off, disappearing at the far end of the plateau before Padilla reined up and offered to take Caleb back behind his saddle.

"I dos' theenk, senor, that he weel come back. He has been brand'—that toro—an' he remember. Eet is bueno that he does. Eef I rope an' tie heem, I mus' let heem go again. But eet weel be better, p'raps, eef you ride, senor. Me, I like eet better for myself."

He laughed and Caleb essayed to retrieve what was left of the beret. He gave it up as a hopeless job and mounted behind Padilla.

"Senor," said the Mexican, "you hav' save la senorita's life. She an' her padre weel thank you. I thank you too. Luis Padilla weel not forget."

CHAPTER VII

The Water Mine

They were all in the patio, talking in the dusk. The conversation had become general. Caleb was a listener. He had found, to his relief, that, after the earnestly expressed thanks of Clinton, of his daughter and of Carmen, he was not regarded in the light of a hero. It seemed to be generally granted that any of them would have done—or tried to do—exactly as he had done and he was grateful for the way they took it. Carmen managed to infuse something personal into her thanks, a warmth that hinted that the exploit had been all for her sake, with Betty a more or less incidental accessory.

Caleb was a listener from preference. He wanted to analyze, if he could, something of the stirrings of these Westerners.

The talk was mainly of Brompton's historic series of panels, the subject introduced by Betty Clinton, with the idea, Caleb thought, of covering him from Carmen's sallies. It was very plain that the artist was head over heels in love with the vivacious brunette, who kept him dangling. Caleb, smoking, pondered over Betty Clinton's attitude. Did she intend to marry Thurston? he wondered. The rancher was on eminently intimate terms with the family. She called him by his first name, Wendell.

He went early the next morning, returning to Golden. There he packed a grip with clothing and some of his instruments, and left a note for Baxter, saying that he would be away for several days. He took up his quarters at a country hotel near the station in Coyote canyon and hired a rig, determined to make a thorough investigation of Caliente plain.

With his pocket instruments he managed to get, unnoticed, tolerable surveys of elevations and distances. He had proven, to his own satisfaction, that the upper end of the plain was furnished with a basin of water at uniform level, a great supply, bottomed and sided with clay and capped with the same, through which capping the artesian water spouted wherever it was bored for. The Welsh Water-Finder did not have to be a great wizard to score hits in this region, he decided. But he had a further use in mind for the man.

Caleb is evidently up against a hard alternative—water or girl. Which way will he decide.

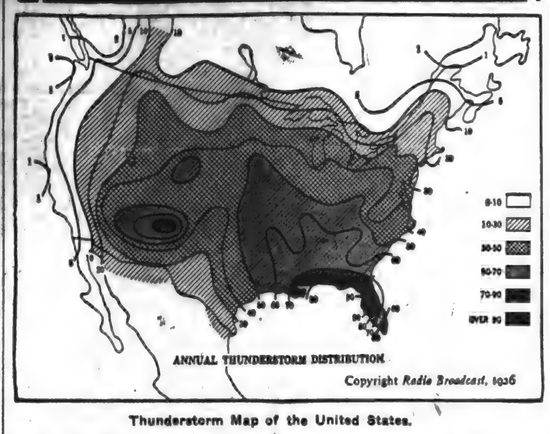
RADIO



Thunderstorm Map of the United States.

"It is not the sound of thunder that is heard in the radio set, but the actual wave that is propagated by the electric spark, or lighting flash," says B. Francis Dashiell, writing in the Radio Broadcast Magazine. "Thunder is merely the sound of the air as it rushes in to fill the space or vacuum made by the passing of the spark. Such a wave will be heard simultaneously with the visibility of the flash, but ahead of the sound of the thunder. Electromagnetic waves travel at the same speed as light waves, 299,725,000 meters, or 186,000 miles per second, while sound travels but approximately 1,000 feet per second. There are certain regions which produce more thunderstorms than others, and there are certain weather conditions, as shown by the daily weather map, favorable to the inception of thunderstorms. Purely local storms of a sporadic character may be caused by local regions of warm air within a high air pressure area and predominating clear sky. These give rise to local static only, last but a short time, and seldom cross over much territory.

Have Much Static.

"There are thunderstorms which occur chiefly in the regions of southerly winds, either to the southeast or northeast of a low air pressure area, probably caused by local topographical conditions and consequent upward deflection of the warm surface winds, all of which stimulate the formation of large cumulus clouds. These storms have considerable static associated with them, not entirely due to the storm itself, but also to the meteorological elements of the central low air pressure area to which they are attached. Some of these disturbances will be of the nature of a mere thundershower while others will be intense thunderstorms.

"Even after the passing of the storm, static will exist as long as the electric influence of the central 'low' is felt. The most severe of all thunderstorms occur south or southeast of a central low air pressure area along a line or front of a great mass of cooler and drier air which is slowly descending from the upper atmosphere and underrunning or lifting up the warmer and moister air ahead of it.

Lightning Affects Set.

"Much static predominates, not only from the central low area itself, but from the mechanical action of the vigorous air currents. Lightning associated with such storms is very severe and spreads out over a large area, affecting radio receivers over many miles, often over a whole state or more. Thunderstorms occur in nearly all parts of the world, but the number decreases rapidly as we pass from the equator toward the pole. In the tropics, there are many places that average a thunderstorm for nearly every day of the year, while in the Far North but one or two storms may occur in the course of several years. Fewer storms occur over the ocean than over land, and mountainous regions have far more than the level plains. In the United States, the largest number occur over the Gulf states. In New England there occur but approximately one-fourth of the thunderstorms experienced along the gulf, while at certain Pacific coast sections the proportion is very small as such storms are rare."

Attach Adapter for Low Waves on Super

There are many thousands of superheterodyne receivers in use, but practically all of them have been built for the reception of wave-lengths between 200 and 550 meters. Some of the large eastern stations are now transmitting regularly on the very low wave-lengths, and very often these stations can be picked up on the low waves when it is impossible to hear them on the regular wave-lengths.

The adapter shown is very simple and can be wound on the form of an old variocoupler, if you have one handy. A 3 by 3 bakelite or cardboard form can be used for the secondary winding and a 1 by 2¼ tube for the primary. Space-wind 12 turns of 24-gauge DCC wire for the primary and the same number of turns for the secondary.

A large number of "supers" have a center tapped loop and the secondary of the adapter is arranged so that you can connect the center loop post on the set to it while the leaders from the outside posts of the adapter go to the posts on the set that formerly connected to the outside leads on the loop. Where a two-lead loop is used, the center post is not used. The antenna and ground leads go to the two posts connected to the primary of the adapter.—Philadelphia Record.

Summer Is Best Time to Improve Radio Antenna

This is the best period of the year in which to make improvements in the antenna system—for the purpose of getting good results throughout the summer and bettering your usual records in the fall and winter when the signals from distant points are stronger.

Why not try shifting the direction of the aerial just to compare results? Sometimes this change makes quite a difference—and the comparison of results will be very interesting, states the service department of the Freed-Eisemann Radio corporation.

When you are overhauling your antenna system, be sure to clean off the insulator. This past winter, with its clouds of soft coal smoke, was a most severe one. The grime with which your insulators are fairly sure to be covered is a high-resistance conductor of electrical currents, consisting essentially of carbon. This means that some current at least is leaking across the insulators if they are dirty. If this is the case, and it probably is, your antenna system cannot approach its normal efficiency, because some of the energy which it absorbs is being carried away from it to the antenna support and so leaking into the ground instead of traveling down the lead-in wire to your set.

If you are using insulators of fiber with an unpolished surface, the soot and grime may have become so imbedded in the surface that it would be almost impossible to properly clean off. In this case you will avoid further loss of efficiency by replacing the present insulators with glass ones or with porcelain ones, which have a highly glazed surface. Insulators of this kind not only refuse to absorb dirt and moisture, but they are also much easier to clean. Soap and water with a stiff brush will do the trick.

If the antenna wire is badly corroded, it should be replaced.

Radio Invention Aids Deaf Children to Hear

Highly successful experiments have been made with a new apparatus for overcoming deafness, designed by a civil engineer of Hull, England, named Calvard, according to an official British dispatch from Rugby.

More than 80 per cent of the children in a Hull deaf and dumb institution have heard speech and music for the first time as the result of the invention, which has the appearance of a small wireless receiving set without aerial or ground connection, the dispatch said. The results are achieved by transmission of sound to the inner ear of deaf patients. It does not succeed with all sufferers, but with a large proportion

Ohms Add Up for Fixed Resistance in Series

When connected in series resistors always add up their respective values even if they are different. When connected in parallel the total resistance of the group is equal to the reciprocal of the sum of the reciprocals of the individual resistors. If they are all of equal value the group resistance is equal to that value divided by the number in the group.

Thus three resistances of 100,000 250,000 and 50,000 ohms, connected in series, have the effect of a single 400,000-ohm one; in parallel they are equivalent to 29,411 and a fraction ohms. Three 100,000-ohm resistances in parallel equal 33,333 1-3 ohms.

Sheridan Supreme as Prophet of Weather

The hope to be an accurate weather prophet is one which springs eternal in the human breast. Many people who have won fame in various walks of life aspired to add to their other accomplishments that of forecasting the weather. Richard Brinsley Sheridan was no exception. Sheridan's fame as a dramatist is secure by virtue of "The Rivals" and "The School for Scandal," but not content with that Sheridan must be famed as the prophet who made the nearest best prophecy of meteorological conditions for a period of a whole year. Being a poet, Sheridan had the advantage of the scientific predictors. Proxy science may be unable to tell what the weather will be for a longer future time than twenty-four hours, but poetic fancy knows no bounds and may take its unrestricted flight a good twelve months ahead. Although Sheridan was predicting British weather, his forecast suits the Middle West and we may rely upon it in making our plans for the year. Sheridan says:

January—Snowy.
February—Flowy.
March—Blowy.
April—Showery.
May—Flowery.
June—Bowery.
July—Moppy.
August—Croppy.
September—Poppy.
October—Breezy.
November—Wheezy.
December—Freezy.—Kansas City Star.

JETHRO'S WISE COUNSEL

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 18:1-27.
GOLDEN TEXT—To every man his work.
PRIMARY TOPIC—Jethro Helps Moses.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Jethro Gives Moses Good Advice.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Being Helpers.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Organizing for Service.

I. Jethro's Visit to Moses (vv. 1-6).

1. The occasion (v. 1).

Upon the receipt of the news of the marvelous deliverance of the Israelites from the Egyptians, Jethro went out to meet Moses.

2. The object (vv. 2-4).

It was to bring to Moses his wife and children. When God called him to Egypt to deliver His people Moses did not deem it wise to take his wife and children, therefore left them with his father-in-law.

3. The place (vv. 5, 6).

At Mount Sinai where the Israelites were encamped.

II. Moses' Reception of Jethro (vv. 7-12).

1. He bowed to him and kissed him (v. 7).

Moses not only honored him as his father-in-law, but as a priest of Midian. Jethro, though outside of the covenant people, evidently retained proofs of the true God as Melchisedec before him did.

2. Moses rehearsed to him the wonders which God had wrought through him (v. 8).

It is through the testimony of those who have experienced the wonders of God's grace that men come to know the true God.

3. Jethro's response (vv. 9-12).

(1) He rejoiced for all the goodness which the Lord had done to Israel, whom He had delivered out of the hand of the Egyptians (v. 9).

(2) He blessed the Lord (v. 10). He not only praised the Lord for His deliverance of his son-in-law from the Egyptians, but for the deliverance of the people of Israel from their bondage.

(3) He confessed the supremacy of the Lord (v. 11). He said, "Now I know that the Lord is greater than all gods."

(4) He offered sacrifices to God (v. 12). We are unable to determine the degree of intelligence of this worship, but he evidently out of a sincere heart made this offering.

III. The Occasion (vv. 13-18).

1. After Jethro came to Moses he observed how completely Moses' time was taken in judging Israel. When he saw the greatness of the task, he inquired as to why he was doing the work all alone. Moses explained to him that his task was not merely a matter of judging, but of teaching the statutes and laws of God to the people. Jethro recognized Moses' motive, but insisted that his method was not a good one, as it would result in wasting his strength.

2. Jethro's plan (vv. 19-23).

(1) Moses was to be unto the people Godward—to bring their causes unto God and teach them the ordinances and laws, to show them the way wherein they must walk and the work they must do (vv. 19, 20).

(2) Suitable men should be provided as rulers over thousands, hundreds, fifties and tens (v. 21). All great matters should be disposed of by Moses, and all subsidiary matters should be adjusted by these judges.

(3) Qualifications of these subordinate judges (v. 26).

(a) They were to be "able men," that is, men of strength. They must be men of such intellectual power as to enable them to understand the problems presented, and of such will power as to execute the judgments rendered.

(b) "Such as fear God." This is the basis of true strength.

(c) "Men of truth." This means men who are able to discern truth, men who love truth, men who tell the truth.

(d) "Hating covetousness." These men must be haters of unjust gain. The man who is to be a ruler of the people must be free from the suspicion of following his profession because of personal gain.

IV. Moses Accedes to Jethro's Counsel (vv. 24-27).

This common-sense advice made a response in Moses' heart. He recognized that God was speaking through Jethro. According to Deut. 1:9-18 the people selected the judges and Moses appointed them. When this work had been done according to Jethro's advice, he took his departure, going into his own land.

Lesson From the Son of God

The highest service may be prepared for and done in the humblest surroundings. In silence, in waiting, obscure, unnoticed. In years of uneventful, unrecorded duties, the Son of God grew and waxed strong.

Cure for Indolence

The only cure for indolence is work; the only cure for selfishness is sacrifice; the only cure for unbelief is to shake off the ague of doubt by doing Christ's bidding.

POINTS ON KEEPING WELL

DR. FREDERICK R. GREEN
Editor of "HEALTH"

SINUS INFECTION

A COMMON source of infection is the nose and the cavities opening into it. The main openings in the nose are for breathing, but opening off the nose are little cavities in the bones of the skull. The object of all of these is not known. Some of them may have to do with the voice and its resonance, very much like the sounding board in a violin has to do with its tone production. But whatever the object of these cavities may be, they may and often do become infected, with the result that pus develops and lodges in them.

On each side of the nose just above the upper jaw are two quite large cavities called the maxillary sinuses. These sinuses open into the middle part of the nose. If pus develops in this cavity, it has no way of getting out. A patient with an infected maxillary sinus is apt to have fever, headache, pain in the upper teeth, a constant yellowish discharge from the nose and a feeling of fullness or stuffiness in the head.

Other cavities connected with the nose and which may become infected are the frontal sinuses, located in the bones of the forehead just above the eyes, the sphenoidal and ethmoidal sinuses, located deep in the base of the skull.

X-ray photographs will show the presence of pus in these sinuses.

There is only one thing to do, when any infection is present in the teeth, the tonsils or the nose, and that is to open up the cavities and drain out the pus. This can be done in the case of the tonsils by removing them; in the teeth by pulling or draining the infected teeth; in the nasal cavities by opening up these sinuses, washing them out and removing the infection. If the infection which is causing the trouble is in the appendix, the removing of the appendix and draining of the abscess will relieve the symptoms of poisoning. If the gall bladder is infected the surgeon will advise that it be either removed or drained.

While all cases of rheumatism, inflammation of the joints, Bright's disease and ulcer of the stomach are not caused by these focal infections, many of them are and it is for this reason that the physician today carefully examines these apparently remote parts of the body in trying to cure conditions which apparently have no connection with them.

Infection of any kind in any part of the body is a danger to life and health and should be removed or controlled as soon as possible. When once infection of any sort is admitted into the body it is impossible to say what part of the body it may attack or what damage it may cause.

HEADACHE

NO ONE enjoys pain. Most of us think of pain as an evil. Yet did you ever stop to think that pain is really the salvation of all life, of the human race itself?

Pain is unpleasant. Unnecessary and useless pain is an evil. But pain is something more. It is nature's danger signal.

You wouldn't want to ride on a railroad on which all the signal lamps had been removed or on a ship if all the lighthouses had been put out. Yet you would be in exactly the same position if you had a body which could feel no pain.

It is through pain that we learn how to avoid dangers. A baby holds its hand out to the fire. As soon as its fingers get near enough to the flame to be in danger, pain is felt and the hand is snatched away. If there were no such thing as pain, we would not know when or how to avoid dangers.

One of the most common, almost universal pains in the body is headache. Practically every one sometime in life has had a headache. Naturally, pain in the head is more common than in any other part of the body. The brain is the center of the nervous system. To it, from all over the body, come the nerves from every organ and structure. If anything is wrong anywhere in the body, it is apt to be felt in the head.

Nor is headache purely physical. It is mental as well. Intense grief, strong passion or bitter anger may produce it.

It is an early symptom in many diseases.

So the first thing to understand about headache is that it is not a disease but a symptom and a symptom of many different diseases and conditions and that it is, in many cases, a warning of some coming disease, an indication of something wrong in the body, a sign of some bad habit of eating, living or working that should be corrected.

The second fact to realize about headache is that because many causes produce headache, the cause in any particular instance may be and often is located far away from the place where the pain is felt. This is because the human body is not made up of separate independent parts, but is an intricate machine in which each part is not only dependent on and necessary for other parts but each part is closely connected with every other part by many nerve fibers which carry sensations from one part to another.

Pencil Had Traveled Far From Its Owner

Like the law, coincidence is reputed to have a long arm, remarks "Peter Simple" in the London Post. A story sent to me by a correspondent on the anniversary of a strange happening is a case in point.

"I was in Clifton, Bristol," she writes, "and having occasion to use a pencil, asked a little girl who had one in her hand to lend it to me. The pencil proved to be one which had been in my possession 27 or 28 years before—quite an ordinary pencil, except that it had my name—a very unusual one—on it.

"The child had no idea that it ever had been my name, as I had changed it many years before she was born. I asked her where she had found the pencil, and she told me that her brother had picked it up a few days before on Clifton downs.

"I had had it, and must have lost it in Ireland."

Acres of Wild Geese

The slight protection the laws have given migratory wild geese are not without result. Recently Capper's Weekly told how thousands of these birds on their northward flight had stopped in Oregon's fields of new wheat to browse on them. John Hirus, driving a bus to a town in Manitoba, was forced to stop his car for several minutes a recent morning by a dense flock of wild geese. Several birds struck the windshield. Fifty acres of wheat stubble that he passed was a moving mass of geese which made no effort to get out of the way as people passed among them. As geese are the original honkers, perhaps they should be entitled to the right of way.

'Way Back

ALFALFA POINTERS WORTH MENTIONING

More and more we see the need of some alfalfa on every farm. Clover, for many people, in spite of good cultural methods tends to be more or less an uncertain crop. A small patch of alfalfa will insure leguminous feed every year and in addition is a valuable soil builder.

There should be no question as to the probability of securing a stand of alfalfa. Farmers in Indiana have been growing the crop for twenty-five years. Although there have been many failures, there are many successful stands and most of the failures can be traced to some cause that should have been eliminated. The cumulative xperience of these many tests teach us several pertinent facts.

1. Alfalfa can be grown on any type of soil that is sweet and well drained.

2. Successful stands are secured by both spring and fall seedings. The preparation of the seed bed is a more important factor than the time of seeding.

3. Inoculation of the seed at time of sowing is necessary and pays greatly for the time and labor expended unless the ground has been inoculated previously in some other way.

4. Success is more certain on a fertile soil than on a poor one. Stable manure plowed under or the application of commercial fertilizer previous to seeding or the plowing under of a green manure crop, are good means of insurance against failure.

5. Northern grown seed withstand the killing better than common.

If you are considering attempting a seeding of alfalfa yet this summer or next spring, test the ground for lime requirements. If you expect to sow yet this summer do so as soon as the ground can be prepared. Seedings after the fifteenth of August are uncertain for the plants do not get sufficient start to withstand winter killing.

If any one desires their soil tested or have any further questions, call the writer, he will be glad to assist you in every way possible.

Unless The Bank Is More Than a Mere Commercial Machine

UNLESS it is more than simply an institution for paying dividends to stockholders; unless it is imbued with a real spirit of public service and a desire to be a constructive and upbuilding force in the community—then it is falling far short of what a bank should be.

While this bank, like all banks, must be operated for profit, it does not for a moment lose sight of its higher duties to its customers and to the public.

HORSE SENSE

If you work for a man, in heaven's name work for him. If he pays wages that supply you your bread and butter, work for him, stand by him, and stand by the institution he represents. I think if I worked for a man, I would work for him. I would not work for him a part of his time, but all of his time. I would give an undivided service or none. If put to a pinch, an ounce of loyalty is worth a pound of cleverness. If you must vilify, condemn and eternally disparage, why—resign your position, and when you are outside, damn to your heart's content. But, I pray you, so long as you are a part of an institution, do not condemn it. Not that you will injure the institution—not that—but when you disparage the concern of which you are a part, you disparage yourself."

—Elbert Hubbard.

"PET AND DIE YOUNG"

If you don't want to live long, indulge in petting parties, is the advice handed out to adolescents by Ross Clarke, physical director of the Y. M. C. A. at Youngstown, Ohio.

Modern petting and necking, Clarke says, produces a physiological condition resulting in ill health, nervous ailments and premature old age.

Paris Ready for Autumn Openings

Offerings Tried During Summer Promise to Prevail This Fall.

To the learned gentry of the mode, Longchamps in summer presents a dual scene. First, observes a Paris fashion correspondent in the New York Herald-Tribune, they may witness the crystallization of spring and summer styles, the final verdict of the haute monde on the offerings of the equally haute couture. More significant than this, however, they may view the first furtive styles of autumn, sent forth six months in advance to gauge the temper of the mesdames of fashion.

For your Paris couturier must cross his bridges long before he reaches them. He, and the not infrequent she, are compelled by the exigencies of their art to prepare for autumn long before summer has officially begun, and at the moment when the mid-season styles are apparently in fullest bloom, beneath the surface a new mode is in the making. At such resorts as Longchamps, Biarritz and Auteuil, the French designers send forth mannequins of all degrees, who wear what are termed advance summer styles, which are in reality the trial fashions of fall. In all the modal year there is no more fascinating moment than this period of preparation and anticipation.

Fashion at the Crossroads.

Of course, in order to know what the Paris couture is trying out, it is necessary to understand the various trends of the mode. If your ear has been very close to the ground these recent weeks, you have heard murmurings of longer skirts, greater details, larger chapeaux and a renaissance of elegance. You know that there are reports concerning a changing waistline, that the flare is said to have had its brief moment, and that even coats will soon follow the straight path. Now and then a brash propagandist will declaim the end of the bob, and, of course, you have heard of Booth Tarkington's vision of the trousered demoiselle of 1976. The intriguing part of each of these predictions is that no sooner do you voice it than you hear a hundred contradictions.

The situation is not dismaying. It is not unusual. It fact, it is merely an annual repetition of the perennial preseason confusion. If the cross currents have you a little befuddled, journey with us to Longchamps, where fashion is receiving its first really authentic touches and where you will get an accurate perspective, not only of what is to be worn next season but of the smartest themes for the present time as well.

It is tea time at the Longchamps Polo club—the particular moment when smart styles are most certain to pass in review. A trig miss is wearing a tailleur by Marthe Regnier. It is of chestnut-colored cheviot and the short coat is set off by a collar of deep-brown velvet. Underneath the jacket is a white silk blouse with prelix pintucks, and the accompanying skirt, short but not too short, has side plaits, but barely a suggestion of the flare. Here obviously is a preseason view of the tailored suit in a definitely elaborate and feminine version. Conceding that the hemline flare has joined the innumerable caravan, this designer still has faith in what Lelong once called the kinetic silhouette.

Patou Dips Into the Future.

The eminent sponsor of the coat worn by another lady is none other than Jean Patou, who is something of a clairvoyant when it comes to anticipating the uncertain vagaries of the mode. There is an absence of the flare which had clung to its vogue longest in coats. There is a designated waistline, directly underneath which appears the finest sort of plaits. Patou still holds to the fur collar, which has become a fetish in fashion, and presents it rather luxuriously here in golden beaver. Taking this model as an earnest of what is to come, the coat, too, may be numbered among those which are going to add feminine details next season.

These same tendencies are more sharply exploited by a mannequin who is wearing a coat of water-green broadcloth with a clever design arrived at by means of fine tucks. A gray fox collar with cuffs of the same pelt and an uncompromisingly straight silhouette emphasizes substantially the same points as the Patou coat.

Still another advance envoy of Jean Patou exploits his preliminary frock conception. Perhaps it would be stretching a point to call this frock grandiose or elegant, but delve into your memory one and two years back and you will grant that it merits those descriptions at least by comparison. Made of black honeycomb, it expresses the straight but liberal designated waistline. An atmosphere of detail and intricacy is created here, and there is no suggestion of boyishness or mannishness.

Another lady is dressed in a Molyneux creation, a cape coat which is cut along unusually complex lines for such a garment. Clearly Molyneux feels that the cape theme has another season of smartness before it, but our own impression is different. Whenever a style attains so enormous a vogue as this cape idea has enjoyed since the spring openings, it is indelibly trademarked as the fashion of one particular season, and is almost invariably discarded by the haute monde after a brief ascendency. The flare is a case in point, and it is our opinion that the cape will undergo the same sort of sudden eclipse.

In another figure Captain Molyneux gives Longchamps a chance to express its opinion as to the merits of the ingenious, complex ensemble. From shoulder to hemline this costume bespeaks detail and elaboration. Here there is no hint of either smart simplicity or hoydenishness. The coat is made of beige crepella, the dress of beige crepe de chine and the design or matching motifs is made of self material—crepella on the coat, crepe de chine on the frock—cleverly sewed to resemble pipings.

To an interesting model, Jean Patou, its author, has added a courtly Elizabethan touch, in the form of cream lace ornamentation—a frock whose every fold expresses the revolt from smart simplicity. A large hat is a fitting climax to the dress.

The Haute Couture Presents.

Remember, that while this array of costumes represents the epilogue of summer, it is only the prelude to fall. The denouement is not yet, and it is still too early to correctly measure the reactions of the mesdames of fashion. This much, though, is certain. So far as the haute couture is concerned, they are overwhelmingly in favor of at least comparative elegance, and the addition of feminizing details which have been deliberately avoided in recent seasons. And it is the opinion of this reviewer that the haute mondes will shortly accept this tentative offering of the Paris designers, and that, thus encouraged, these artists will bravely proceed to even further emphasize the revolt from simplicity at the autumn openings.

Pink and the pinky shades of beige have been the predominating colors and are seen in kasha and crepe de chine, in taffetas and cloth, in frisca and the new openwork serge that was specially woven for Molyneux and is particularly successful when used in the coat dress that has been worn by almost every smart woman in Paris this season, in georgette and reppe and the various more delicate materials that are chosen for summer frocks.

LAMB AND MUTTON

Mutton is so well liked in England and used so freely that it seems strange that we in America cannot serve it oftener and more freely.

When mutton is properly killed and cared for there is no objectionable wooly flavor. The meat should never be touched with the hands after handling the wool, as the wool grows on the skin and the oil from it flavors the meat. Remove the skin carefully before cooking.

Roast Leg of Lamb.—Rub salt, pepper and onion with any sweet fat all over the meat. Place in a roasting pan and sear it well in a hot oven. Now add one-half cupful each of water and sliced onion, one cupful of sliced tomatoes, eight peeled potatoes around the leg of lamb. Roast in a hot oven and serve very hot with a gravy made from the liquor in the the pan. Mint sauce may be served with the lamb. To prepare it, mince a half cupful of mint and pour over it a tablespoonful of boiling water, cover and let stand, adding a tablespoonful of vinegar and a little sugar to serve.

Mutton Stew.—Put a neck piece of mutton on to stew in boiling water with a small onion. Simmer until tender, then add a can of peas, thicken the gravy and serve with the peas poured around the meat. Add seasonings of salt and pepper after the meat is partly cooked.

Mutton en Casserole.—Brown a pound or less of mutton cut from the shoulder and in serving-sized pieces. When well-browned season well and dredge with flour. Add one cupful or more of carrots, a cupful of peas, one onion to the meat, cover and bake in a casserole for two to three hours. Serve from the casserole.

Barbecued Lamb.—Cut cold roast lamb into slices and reheat them in the following sauce: Two tablespoonfuls of butter, one-half tablespoonful of vinegar, one-third cupful of currant jelly and one-fourth teaspoonful of mustard. Cook until the lamb is well-heated and flavored.

DESSERT FOR EVERY DAY

On the busiest day when time is very precious, you might make

Fifteen - Minute Pudding.—Take one teaspoonful of baking powder, a pinch of salt, and enough good milk or fresh buttermilk to make a drop batter. Butter custard cups, drop a tablespoonful of batter then a tablespoonful of canned cherries and another spoonful of batter, and put to cook in a pan of boiling water well covered for 15 minutes. Serve with sugar and cream.

Edinburgh Pudding.—Take one-half pound of oatmeal, one cupful of thick custard flavored with vanilla, one and one-half pints of water, one-fourth of a cupful of milk, one-half teaspoonful of salt, and two ounces of coconut. Cook the oatmeal in the water with the salt and milk, cool and turn into the custard, pour into molds and serve, when molded, with coconut, sugar and cream.

Lemon Meringue.—Take one pint of milk, three ounces of sugar, one cupful of fine bread crumbs, two eggs, the juice and rind of a lemon. Mix all ingredients and cook slowly until well set, baking in a deep pie plate. Set away to cool, cover with a meringue and brown. Serve cold.

Snow Jelly.—Prepare any desired flavor of gelatin, and when it is thickening whip it until foamy. Chill and pile on top of any molded gelatin of other flavor, using pineapple for one and raspberry for the other. Serve with whipped cream.

Spiced Tea Cakes.—Mix and sift one and one-half cupfuls of flour with two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one-eighth teaspoonful of nutmeg and one-fourth teaspoonful of mace. Cream one-fourth of a cupful of shortening, add one cupful of sugar, two well-beaten eggs, one-half cupful of milk added alternately with the flour. Add a few raisins and bake in greased muffin tins. Cover with maple frosting and sprinkle with chopped filberts.

Egg Rolls.—Scald and cool one-fourth of a cupful of milk, add one yeast cake, mix well and add one cupful of scalded milk, cooled. Stir in two cupfuls of flour, beat well and set away in a warm place until light. Add the yolks of two eggs, half a teaspoonful of salt, half a teaspoonful of sugar, one-fourth of a cupful of butter and flour enough to knead. Knead until smooth. Shape into small balls; when it has become light press a cavity with the thumb and set into this half a teaspoonful of jelly, work the dough over the opening, keeping the jelly near the top crust. Let rise to double the bulk and bake twenty minutes in a hot oven.

Problem-wearied city officials will seek relief from their trials and tribulations in Terre Haute next month by telling each other of their grief. The occasion will be the annual meeting of the Municipal League of Indiana, to be held September 28, 29 and 30. All affairs pertaining to city government, as regards utilities, paving, sewerage, traffic and other matters, will be thoroughly discussed.

A surplus of teachers exists in Indiana at the present time, according to R. E. Blackwell, deputy state superintendent of public instruction. There are approximately 1,000 applications for openings in the elementary and high school departments of schools located in various parts of the state, Mr. Blackwell said. Of the teachers who have not been placed for the next school year, about 300 are men.

The cost of education in Indianapolis for each school pupil in the school year of 1925-26 was $120.86, it has been calculated by F. L. Reissner, secretary of the board of school commissioners, from figures contained in the annual financial report of the school city for the year, which ended June 30. Last year the cost per pupil was $120.82. The net cost for education of each elementary school pupil was $87.36 and for each high school pupil $158.37.

A toll of three dead, one seriously injured and heavy damage to property and crops was left in the path of a severe storm which swept Indiana. Lightning caused the death of two men and a third was electrocuted during the storm. A farm boy was knocked unconscious when a bolt struck a mule on which he was riding. Crops were blown down and farm buildings unroofed in some sections by the wind. The storm caused complete disruption of interurban service on some of the lines radiating out of Indianapolis, and telephone service was seriously crippled.

Martha Ruth Wirt was divorced in Valparaiso from William E. Wirt, superintendent of the Gary schools and nationally known educator. Thirty years difference in ages, she said, was one cause of their incompatibility.

ROAD BUILDING

CITIES BUILDING GOOD PAVEMENTS

A census of city paving, begun January 1, and just completed by the American City Magazine, shows a total of 839,000,000 square yards of paved street in the 1,000 leading cities of the United States.

This yardage is equivalent to 84,000 miles of roadway 18 feet wide—enough to span the country from coast to coast 28 times and accommodate two continuous lines of motor traffic moving in opposite directions and each containing 44,520,000 vehicles.

The mileage of the paved streets, as shown by the census, is equal to one-third the total steam and electric railroad mileage of the country and 57 per cent of the total mileage in the federal-aid highway system.

It is 27,000 miles more than the mileage of the latter system thus far improved with federal-aid funds and is equal to one thirty-fifth of the total road mileage of the United States.

Results of the census, therefore, indicate that street paving in the cities is more than keeping pace with the improvement of the rural highways, a fact not generally appreciated.

New York city, from 1920 to 1926, added 6,706,000 yards of pavement to her streets, thereby raising the total from 41,375,000 square yards in 1920 to 48,082,000 square yards in 1926.

Chicago, from 1920 to 1926, showed a gain in paved streets of only 689,670 square yards, but in the same period that city raised the standard of paving much higher. Chicago's total paved streets in 1920 were 38,430,330 square yards in area while in 1926 the total was 39,120,000 square yards.

Philadelphia had a conspicuous gain of 2,932,000 square yards in the 1920 to 1926 period. Philadelphia's total paved streets in 1920 were 22,609,962 square yards in area, while in 1926 the total was 25,541,663 square yards.

Calcium Chloride, Oil and Tar Protect Roads

With the heavy traffic season here, the Minnesota highway department has been treating the more heavily traveled trunk highways with calcium chloride, oil or tar. The main purpose of this treatment is to save the road surface and save maintenance expense. Incidentally the treatment lays the dust, and by many motorists this feature is appreciated more than the benefit to the road surface.

A total of over 400 miles will be treated with calcium chloride and about 150 miles with oil or tar. The cost of calcium chloride treatment is about $350 per mile, and oil or tar $1,200 per mile, but the latter is considered more lasting and capable of carrying heavier traffic. The calcium chloride is not a binder, like oil or tar, but it draws moisture from the atmosphere, and this protects the road surface and prevents dust.

On account of the cost, it will be impossible to apply the surface binders to more than about one-twelfth of the total trunk highway mileage, and the treatment must be confined to the sections of unpaved road where traffic is so heavy as to make maintenance of a smooth surface practically impossible without a binder. The treatment is not permanent, but must be repeated at least once a year.

At the time of the last traffic census, Minnesota had approximately 3,800 miles of unpaved trunk highway, upon which the daily average was more than 500 vehicles and several stretches of gravel road which carried more than 2,000 vehicles per day.

Great Personages of the Bible

By REV. LEONARD A. BARRETT

Zacharias, Mary and Simeon

ZACHARIAS was the father of John the Baptist. He lived in the days of Herod the Great. He had married a daughter of Aaron, whose name was Elisabeth. Zacharias was a priest. He was righteous and generous and was greatly loved by all the people of his community. The most wonderful gift which could come into a home of the ancient days was a child and heir. It was the height of every woman's ambition to bear a child. A childless wife was frowned upon. She ofttimes found herself ostracised from the social life of her environment. The wife of Zacharias had borne no children. All hopes of an heir were almost abandoned. Zacharias was officiating as priest in the temple of God when he had a vision. There stood before him, near the altar upon which he was burning incense, an angel which announced to him that his wife was to bear him a son and heir. Zacharias was so overjoyed that he could hardly speak. When he was able to speak he doubted if it could really come to pass. As a punishment for his doubt he was stricken dumb until the prophecy had been fulfilled. In due time the promised child was born. Upon the eighth day, when the parents brought the child into the temple to be circumcised, the people expressed the wish that his name be Zacharias after the name of his father. Elisabeth, the child's mother, sternly objected and called his name John, who later became John the Baptist. Zacharias, not being able to speak, asked for a parchment, upon which he also wrote the name John. As soon as he did this the tongue of Zacharias was loosed and his soul burst forth into a glorious song of praise. His song is known as the Benedictus. It has been set to music and is frequently sung in many churches. It is remarkable that the last word uttered by Zacharias before his affliction was one of doubt; the first word after his restoration of speech was one of praise.

The conversation of Mary and Elisabeth regarding the coming of their children is one of the most sacred and beautiful in Biblical biography. It was in the home of Elisabeth in the secluded hilly country of Juden, that the hearts of Elisabeth and Mary were filled with the joy of expectant motherhood. Mary was to become the mother of Jesus and Elisabeth the mother of John the Baptist. Both women gave expression to their joy in song. The song of Mary has gone down in history as the Magnificat. It begins with these wonderful lines: "My soul doth magnify the Lord, and my spirit hath rejoiced in God my Savior. For He hath regarded the low estate of His handmaiden, for behold, from henceforth all generations shall call me blessed." It is another one of the most sacred and beautiful songs in the literature of church music.

The third song of the group is that of Simeon. He had longed for the greater part of his lifetime to see the birth of the promised Messiah. It was revealed to him "That he should not see death before he had seen the Lord's Christ." Simeon was present in the temple when Mary and Joseph brought the infant Jesus, "To do for Him after the custom of the law." Simeon took the baby in his arms and his soul burst forth into the song known as the Nunc Dimittis. The words of the song are beautiful and ring with the triumphal note of joy and victory.

"Lord, now lettest Thou Thy servant depart in peace, according to Thy word; for mine eyes have seen the salvation, which Thou hast prepared before the face of all people, a light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of Thy people Israel."

Ants Used in Surgery

Adam and Eve learned the rudiments of the art of sewing from watching birds building their nests, in the opinion of Sir John Bland Sutton, British surgeon and scientist, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. According to Sir John, surgeons have been searching for many years for an ideal substance for stitching material to close wounds. Birds, plants, insects and other animals have been studied in the search for new ideas. In India, Brazil and Asia Minor ants have been used since remote antiquity to close wounds, he adds. The edges of the wound are brought together and the ant, held by forceps applied. The ant opens its mandibles and grasps the edges, holding them tightly, and the body is then clipped off, leaving the mandibles in place.

"Raisins" and "Currants"

The name "raisin" is primarily a French word meaning "grape." It is given to the dried fruits of certain varieties of the grapevine (genus Vitis). The name "currants" originally (and still is) applied to the dried seedless fruit of a variety of the grapevine. The most obvious distinction is one of size, so-called raisins usually being large and currants small. Both really are kinds of raisins, the latter being grouped as ordinary or large raisins, sultana seedless raisins and currants. The last were so called because originally brought from Corinth. The name also is applied to a well-known garden fruit produced by plants of an entirely different genus.

COMMUNITY PICNICS CAFETERIA STYLE

Community Picnic, Cafeteria Style

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The time-honored community picnics that featured cakes, pies and other rich foods and left children and grown-ups alike with indigestion the next day, have been abandoned in many parts of the country in favor of the picnic with a balanced menu. Such a picnic tastes better, is easier to prepare, and leaves everybody happy. It requires some planning ahead, however. Instead of suggesting that each homemaker bring what she happens to think of to the community picnic, a menu is decided on by a committee, and then each woman is asked to prepare some one or two dishes. Then when all the parts of the meal are assembled it is well proportioned and carries with it a real lesson in meal planning.

The cafeteria style of service is another up-to-date feature in community picnics. The illustration, which was taken by the United States Department of Agriculture, shows the women of Summit community, Benton county, Oregon, putting this idea into practice. The menu includes everything that goes to make a well-balanced meal indoors or outdoors and yet the foods were in such simple form that nobody had been overtaxed. There are several kinds of fruits and vegetables, two meat dishes, bread and butter, milk for the children, and a fruit drink for everybody. Everybody had some choice, and yet was fairly certain to get enough of the right kinds of foods.

Hot dishes are not so easy to manage at picnics as other foods, but with careful planning some kinds can generally be brought in good condition if the distance is not too great. Here are some that might be brought: casserole meats; stews; creamed chicken, chipped beef, eggs, or fish; meat loaf; scalloped potatoes, or other vegetables. A fire can almost always be managed for heating up soup which has been made beforehand or for cooking bacon, frankfurters, or steak.

Almost any kind of a fruit, vegetable, or meat salad can be served at a picnic. It is oftentimes better to bring the different foods in separate containers and mix them with the dressing just before the salad is to be served. To go with such a salad bread and butter is better than elaborate sandwiches. Many different kinds of bread can be used for variety, however: Rolls or biscuit made with white or graham flour; date, nut, or raisin bread, rye bread, Boston brown bread, and so on.

For beverage, lemonade, orange and other ades in season, grapefruit juice, hot or iced tea or coffee for the adults, and milk or milk shakes for the children.

For dessert ice cream or sherbet brought in freezers is generally most popular with everybody. A combination of cut-up fresh fruits, however, is also delicious. For instance, sliced fresh or canned pineapple, strawberries, or raspberries and sliced orange is a combination that grows better in flavor if it stands for a few hours. Cookies, cup cakes, or loaf or layer cakes in just enough quantity to go with the ice cream or fruit gives a finishing touch.

POINTS ON USING PRESSURE CANNER

Certain Things Ought to Have Good Attention.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Perhaps you are canning with a steam pressure canner for the first time this year. There are certain points about operating it which ought to be given attention, says the United States Department of Agriculture in Farmers' Bulletin 1471-F, "Canning Fruits and Vegetables at Home."

When your jars or tin cans are ready, pour boiling water into the canner until the level is just below the rack that holds the jars. Be sure that there is enough to prevent boiling dry during processing.

When the canner has been filled, adjust the cover and fasten securely. In case the cover is fastened by several clamps fasten moderately tight those opposite each other, one pair at a time; then go back over the whole set and tighten each pair.

See that no steam escapes anywhere except at the pet cock.

Allow the pet cock to remain open until steam escapes from it in a steady stream for at least three minutes, indicating that no air remains inside.

Then close the pet cock so that only a trace of steam can escape. Some persons prefer to close the cock entirely, particularly with small canners in which a great loss of steam is to be avoided because of the danger of boiling dry.

Allow the pressure to rise until the gauge registers the pressure that indicates the desired temperature.

Count time from the moment the desired temperature and pressure are reached.

Maintain a uniform pressure during the processing period by regulating carefully the source of heat. Fluctuations in pressure, as from 10 pounds to 15 pounds and down again, are to be avoided in any case, and when canning in glass may result in loss of liquid. A sudden drop in pressure through cooling or release of steam may also cause this. It is especially important to avoid having the pressure go so high that the safety valve releases the steam suddenly, nor should the steam be allowed to escape suddenly by opening the pet cock.

At the end of the processing period remove the canner from the fire and proceed according to the following directions adapted to jars or cans:

When canning in glass jars, allow the canner to cool until the steam gauge registers zero before opening the pet cock, and even then open cautiously. This is to prevent too sudden a drop in pressure, which would cause the liquid to blow out of the jars, even though already sealed. Invert the jars, allow them to cool as quickly as possible to room temperature, and do not stack them while they are still hot.

When canning in tin, open the pet cock wide at once and allow the steam to escape rapidly. Remove the cans from the canner and plunge them into cold running water if possible, or if this is not available change the water as soon as becomes warm. The more rapidly the cans are cooled the less danger there is of overcooking the product. Watch carefully for air bubbles that indicate imperfect sealing. Leakers should be opened, the contents heated and repacked in other cans, and processed again as at first.

To Clean Gas Burners

To clean clogged burners on a gas stove, take the burners out of their sockets and brush off all loose dirt. Then place them in a large kettle or pan that will not be injured by washing soda. Boil them for about half an hour in a mixture of one-half pound of washing soda added to each gallon of water. Rinse and brush the burners, wipe them with paper or cotton waste, fit them into the stove, and dry them thoroughly by lighting the gas.

Temperature for Milk

Milk should be kept at or below 50 degrees Fahrenheit. If held at temperatures above 50 degrees Fahrenheit, the growth of spoilage organisms soon produces changes which render it unfit to be used as food, especially in the case of children.

Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

BABY LIONS

"Oh, we're such playful little things, we're like kittens I do believe," said one of the lion cubs.

"What put that idea into your little lion head?" asked Mother Lioness.

"Some people passing by said so," answered the little lion cub.

"Well," said Mother Lioness, "you do play like kittens and you are gentle and friendly and tame, now, but the day will come—"

"What day will come, Mother Lioness?" asked the little lion cubs.

"The day will come," said Mother Lioness."

"What day will come?" the little lion cubs asked again.

Once more Mother Lioness repeated:

"The day will come."

Again she stopped and looked far away, over the heads of the people.

"Mother Lioness," said one of the little cubs, "you are dreaming."

"Tell us of what you are dreaming."

Mother Lioness seemed to look at the little cub, who had spoken, as if he had awakened her out of a sound sleep.

Certainly she had been dreaming—day dreaming at any rate.

"My dear little cub," she said, "I was thinking that the day would come when you and your little brother and your little sister would hunt through the great forests and roam the great forests, and live in the great forests.

"Then I began to think of those forests, those great, dark, wonderfully wild forests.

"And then I suddenly remembered that you wouldn't hunt through the forests because you belonged to the zoo.

"You're gentle now—you're not four months old yet.

"Cubs are quite harmless when they are so young—quite, quite harmless.

"Yes, they are quite harmless and playful and friendly.

"But even though the day will not come when you'll go hunting through the forests, still the day will come when you will grow into wild lions.

"You won't be baby cubs any more.

"No, you will roar and show your teeth and your eyes will flash with anger even if you can't go a-hunting or a-roaming.

"For even if you're zoo cubs you are your mother's own little lions and you'll become great, fierce lions some day.

"Oh yes, you will, my darlings, my gentle playful little cub darlings.

"You'll be wilder when you're older.

"Mother Lion is thankful to think of that. Some mothers may hope their children will not be so wild when they grow up.

"They may hope they will be quiet and gentle and sweet and all such things.

"But Mother Lion doesn't hope that.

"Oh no, she hopes her children will be wild, good and wild, good and wild.

"So feel playful now if you will.

"Feel gentle now if you will. It will not worry your Mother Lion.

"For she knows how you will turn out.

"Oh, dear, I only wish you were going to know the forests I have known.

"I only wish you could have had the beautiful times in those forests I have had.

"I only wish you could just see them—then you would know why Mother Lion looks over the heads of the people and her eyes seem to be so far, far away.

"Maybe you will understand somewhat anyway—because you are my own little cubs."

Charged Candy to Himself

Three-year-old Bobby had formed the habit of calling daily at the corner grocery and returning with candy which was charged to his parents.

His parents remonstrated, but the reproof was directly followed by a repetition of the act. This time Bobby forestalled the lecture which he could see by his mother's face was coming. "Now, you needn't say a word; I charged it to myself."

Tides Affect Volcanoes

An interesting solution of the mystery of volcanic eruptions has just been offered by William Bowie of the United States coast and geodetic survey. He advances the theory, says Popular Science Monthly, that volcanic outbursts may be due directly to the pressure of the tides, which twist and wring the earth. The tides, he adds, may also have an influence in building mountains.

The state penal farm must be a terrible place. Last week when Frank Miller of near Garrett was arrested for driving an automobile while intoxicated, and brought before the court he pleaded for mercy and asked that he be sent to the penitentiary at Michigan City because he didn't want to go back to the state farm. He was informed that he could not be given a term in the penitentiary under the affidavit filed but he warned him that if he were brought to court again he would have to go there. Good-Bye— Old Saturday Night Wash Tub

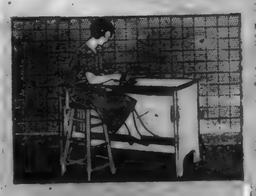
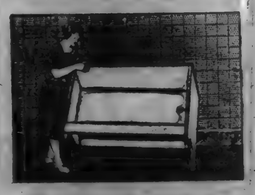
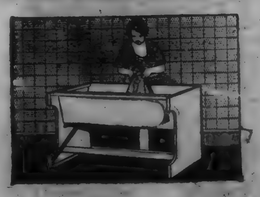
For now you can have the SANI-TABL-TUB







No plumber to hire
No plumbing to buy—
A kitchen unit that is never idle.

YES, gone are the days when you need to take a bath standing in the old wash tub, which is almost like no bath at all.

Gone are the inconveniences of lugging in the tub, pouring—and spilling—out the water, mopping up the floor, and all that.

The Sani-Tabl-Tub is a new invention, a full size bath tub, good to look at, easy to get into, and comfortable when you are in it. You set it anywhere in the house—preferably in the kitchen where it is comfortable and where warm water is easily had at the stove.

Remember, this is a sturdy, full size, bath tub. A 250 pound man can get into it with safety, stretch out his legs full length, and enjoy the luxury of a real bath. Easily drained at bottom, no dipping out and spilling water.

Then, the morning after, turn it a quarter way over and you have a fine table with porcelain enameled top,—none better made,—too nice to cover with a table cloth when you eat breakfast off it. Thus it saves laundry work. All day long you have a table for work, study, a laundry tub or for any one of a dozen other uses.

The Sani-Tabl-Tub is strongly built of steel, yet is so light that it is easily turned over or moved about. Tub and sides are handsomely finished in DUCO-ENAMEL, hard, smooth and practically indestructible. Table is standard height, convenient to work at, with foot rest extending full length.

—and the cost—you'll be surprised. It is so low you can not afford to get along without it if you enjoy the cleanliness, comfort and convenience afforded by a modern full size bath tub. You couldn't install and equip a bath room for twenty times the price. It is so easy to own a Sani-Tabl-Tub that every day you get along without it causes you needless discomfort and unhappiness.

We have a Special Introductory Offer for every reader of this paper that means money in your pocket and comfort in your home.

LARGER DAIRY HERDS PROVE MOST PROFITABLE

A ten or twelve cow herd to take the place of the six-cow herd so common on farms in the Mississippi Valley is advocated by men of experience. Farmers having half a dozen cows do not always consider them an important part of their farm scheme, while a dozen cows make dairying a business. Practically the same equipment is needed to care for a twelve-cow herd as for the one of small number, and that the income is relatively greater.

An important factor in the economy of larger dairy herds on farms where cream is sold and skim milk kept for feeding to calves, pigs and chickens, lies in the marketing of a higher quality of cream. This is especially true in summer when warm weather makes it difficult to keep small quantities of cream cold and sweet. The longer cream is kept on the farm, the more time it has to spoil. Greater production makes it possible to ship cream more frequently and lessens the chances of it being sour.

An average good herd of six cows producing 1,200 pounds of 36 percent cream during the warm months of August and September will average 10 pounds of such cream a day. To fill a five-gallon can, which holds about 40 pounds of cream, would require a six-cow herd about four days. A twelve-cow herd of the same productive ability would fill the same can in two days. Since the cost of shipping a five-gallon can of cream is practically the same as for shipping the same can partially filled, a saving is made in shipping full cans. The premium paid for sweet cream in addition to the top price paid for good sour cream is usually three cents a pound for butterfat. A five-gallon can of sweet cream receiving such a premium would bring the farmer 42 cents more than the good sour cream. In the course of a year this extra income on each can would amount to many additional dollars of income.

THE POWER

SYNOPSIS.—Idly fishing Hermanos creek, in California, Caleb Warner, civil engineer and a New Englander, is witness of the end of a coyote pulled down by two wolfhounds, urged on by a girl rider. Admiring the hounds, he introduces himself, and learns her name is Clinton. With western hospitality she invites him to the ranch to meet her father. At the Clinton home Warner learns his new friend's name is Betty. He is welcomed by her father, Southern Civil war veteran and owner of Hermanos valley. He tells them something of his ambitions and his feeling that he is destined to be a "Water-Bearer." In the town of Golden Warner shares an apartment with his old Columbia college chum, Ted Baxter, carefree and somewhat dissipated youth, only child of his widowed mother, who controls the family fortune. At a club luncheon Baxter introduces Caleb to Wilbur Cox, leading business man and president of the water company which supplies the needs of Golden. He gives Cox an inkling of his ambitions, and Cox, impressed, invites him to dinner that night. During dinner Cox asks Caleb to call at his office next day. He does so and Cox arranges a meeting between Caleb and Hinckley, the water company's chief engineer. Baxter tells Caleb he is in difficulties with a girl, Mary Morgan, Cox's stenographer, who insists he must marry her. With Hinckley, Caleb looks over the water company's source of supply, the Crystal springs, in Hermanos valley. Prospecting in Hermanos valley, Caleb meets a man, Evans, who boasts of his ability, through "divining rods," to locate water without boring. Caleb comes upon a picnic party, the festivities being in honor of Betty Clinton's birthday, and is welcomed. Betty tells him Hermanos valley, containing the burial places of three generations of Clintons, is sacred for all time. Caleb, with Carmen Wilson and Betty, are threatened by a bull. Warner bravely protects the girls, and is himself rescued by Padilla, Clinton's man.

He believed that the lower end of the plain, the portion that the diviner termed the Sink, was composed of gravel, retained in clay but without the clay capping. In it was held the sunken waters of the five creeks, the same water that furnished the wells of the territory north of the creek. And this water should hold the same level, if his theory was correct. It should lie some forty feet below the surface in normal times—less during the storm-water season. It would be absolutely pure—filtered through the gravel. If this was true—and he believed it was—he had found a water mine, a mine with an inexhaustible, ever renewed commodity, that was as commercial as any mineral that, conveyed to Golden, meant the assured progress of that city.

He knew that the city of Berlin, at enormous expense, had manufactured beds of gravel for the filtering of its civic supply, but here at hand he had the filter built by nature, a cistern waiting to be tapped. And this had laid unsuspected under the very noses of Cox and his engineers, and the water experts of Oakville.

He had to proceed cautiously. It was imperative to cloak his intentions and his methods. If he made the discovery, it was his, to engineer and to sell. He could not bore in the Sink to prove out his hope that clay bottomed all the gravel and held the water. He meant to use the diviner for that, keeping him in ignorance of what the experiments might mean.

He stocked himself with cigars, and after supper crossed the bridge and walked along the creek and up the road to the pit. There was a wisp of smoke coming from the rusty pipe and a light burning back of the solitary window.

A smell of crude cookery, blent of cheap coffee and half-cured bacon, tinctured with the acrid odor of beans burned in a pot, came out through the door, which opened part way to Caleb's knock, disclosing the lean figure of the Welshman silhouetted against lamplight.

"Who's there?" asked Evans.

"The fisherman. Don't you remember? You told me about your divining the other day."

The Welshman opened the door wider and peered curiously at Caleb in the broader ray of light. Then he stepped outside.

"Kind of stuffy inside the shack," he said. "A great night. Look at them stars. Ah!"

He took the cigar Caleb proffered and puffed it to a glow, exhaling the smoke with a gratified sigh.

"I brought a few along," said Caleb, "thinking you might like them. I've got plenty."

The other held out his hand for the brown rolls eagerly.

"That's kind of ye. If you don't mind, I'll put 'em in the shack. No pockets handy that won't mush 'em."

He disappeared in the shack and came out again bearing a bundle.

"I'd like to even up with you on them," he said. "How about an exhibishun? The power's in me."

The suggestion had come as Caleb would have wished it, spontaneously, from the man himself.

"That will be bully," he answered simply. "I should like very much to see you in action."

The Welshman led the way to the top of the gravel.

"Choose your place," he said. "I've a notion there's water most anywhere here. The rod'll prove it. Pick one of the rods," he went on, with the air of a conjurer asking for the choice of "any card in the deck." "They're hazel," he said. "Some say hazel's a magic wood, but the magic ain't in the rod, it's in me. Willer'll do, or peach, but I like hazel. Now, where d'ye say?"

Caleb chose a spot clear of sagebrush. It was almost a circle and he stood on the edge of it, a strange tingling in his veins. The spare figure of the Welshman, looking up to the stars, the rod that Caleb had chosen in his hands, breast high, a fork to each hand, the fingers uppermost; took on something of the dignity of a Druid priest about to perform a mystic rite.

"Can you see plain?" he asked in a whisper. "I'm going to walk to'ard ye. Watch the stem of the rod."

He lowered it to the full length of his arms, stalking slowly, the twig horizontal, right-angled, midway of his thighs. His eyes glittered, upturned to the sky. Suddenly he stopped and Caleb held his breath, gazing intently at the rod.

It seemed to twitch—surely. It vibrated—up and down. Caleb, watching closely, half fearing he might uncover a trick yet wishing to do so if trickery was forward, could detect no flexing of the bony wrists. The fingers were rigid. So tightly did Evans grip the forks that his knuckles showed like ivory knobs against the darker skin.

Then he gave a sigh and the end of the rod tipped violently downwards. Caleb caught the distinct creak of bending, twisting wood in the silence that followed the sigh. The dowser stood braced, rigid, while the twig, its end a frantic pointer, seemed as suddenly imbued with life as Moses' rod. Motion ceased as he stood within ten feet of Caleb, so close that the latter plainly saw the pulses beating violently in Evans' wrists, the veins prominent as cords. And the stem of the rod pointed steadily downward at an angle of more than 45 degrees from the horizontally held forks.

"Dig there, bore there—forty feet," murmured the dowser, speaking like a medium in trance, "and you'll find water."

He relaxed and the rod fell to the ground. He stooped and picked it up. He rubbed his eyes as one awakening from a spell.

"Them's all fresh rods in the bundle," he said. "I cut 'em the day before yesterday. Look where she forks. We'll try her ag'en. The power's strong. Then you can tackle it."

"Me?" Caleb's surprise was unforced.

"Aye, you might have the power. You're sympathetic, ennyway. Let's walk out a bit farther. Away from the crick. It don't make no difference where. There's a water table under us. This end of the valley ain't so much a sink as a cistern."

Caleb's heart pounded at this confirmation of his belief. He was in a curious state of excitation. But he said nothing. They tried again a quarter of a mile away. The same phenomenon occurred with so much greater emphasis that the forks crossed each other. No juggling with hands apart could have managed this.

"Try it," said Evans, wiping sweat from his forehead. "Twice is enough for me. That last was a twister. Did ye say you had another cigar with ye? I left all mine in the shack. Now then—choose yore twig. We know there's water here. If you've got the power it'll show. Don't be in a hurry. Don't think of nothin'. Make yore mind a blank. Hold it level—fingers up—so!"

He arranged Caleb's hands to his liking with his own bony, clammy fingers and stepped back. Caleb stood alone, fixing his eyes on the glow of the dowser's cigar in a species of hypnosis, waiting, trying to eliminate all thought.

In this he succeeded. Motionless, he waited, gazing at the spark of fire and the dark pillar of the Welshman's body. The spark seemed to grow larger—larger—and then he felt, simultaneously—a distinct tremor run up his forearms, a sinking sensation in the pit of his stomach, a quiver of diaphragmatic ganglia.

The rod twitched. He gripped the forks hard—harder. They began to vibrate. The tremor increased in his wrists. The forks strangely seemed to be a part of him, sensitive, alive. Then there seemed to be a tug at the end of the stem, like the swift strike of a fish at the lure. And the straight stem bent as he might have bent his finger, in a pointer, straight to water.

He had no doubt of it now. The thing had happened to himself. It was marvelous as it was mysterious, this sense of power. And he thrilled to it. It was an indorsement of his title as Water-Bearer, surely an augury of success. It filled him, not with pride, but with reverence for his gift.

"Glory be!" cried the dowser. "You've got it, pardner. You've got the power. By gosh, you'll be takin' my job from me," he added with a short laugh that ended in a cough.

"I'll see that you are no loser by it," said Caleb, smiling back. And he meant the promise. For now he was certain of the fulfillment of his idea, much as yet remained to be proven and accomplished. The hunch was born, for he had in his hand the key that would unlock for him the secret of the Sink. With the power—was it his birthright, a gift from Aquarius, glittering on the hilly horizon?—he could, working at night, cover the whole area of the lower valley and exploit, without boring, the extent of the water table. Under the gravel lay, he was convinced—none the less by the occult manner of its determination—water for the thousands who would make Golden mighty among cities—water for incoming families, for factories, for fields and gardens, for civic use! A mammoth cistern ready to be tapped.

Before he left him, to walk back to the hotel, exultant, Caleb got some worth-while information from Evans. He had the name of the man who owned most—if not all—of the Sink.

The land was valueless for farming. It could be acquired cheaply. That was an important factor. Even at the low price, the big acreage would mean an amount far beyond Caleb's compass. That end of it, with the other big expenses, he must leave to Cox for financing. But the secret was his.

He found a small parcel awaiting him at the hotel that had come by the evening mail. On it was the return address of Golden's best jeweler. He opened it and took from a bed of cotton wool a jade pendant. On it was engraved in intaglio the zodiac sign of Pisces. Two fishes joined by a ribbon. He had ordered it on his return from El Nido after the picnic. He intended it as a belated birthday gift to Betty Clinton.

Well, Caleb has found his water all right. Now what will he do with it?

Experienced Men Rely on First Impressions

The banker learns soon that your face usually tells more than is told by your lips or your written statement, and this is something that you may very well remember. Your first impression, if it is one of suspicion, is usually correct. I doubt if any experienced teller will ever cash a check for a stranger, no matter how well introduced, if this first glance at the man telegraphs to his brain "Look out! Be careful!" If he does, he usually regrets it.

I believe that when two persons meet for the first time eye telegraphs to eye. For one instant, and perhaps for one instant only, eye tells eye the truth, the hidden truth, and the absolute truth; then the lying begins, if any. This is, I believe, an animal instinct purely, but always dependable. —Ellis Parker Butler, in Hearst's International-Cosmopolitan.

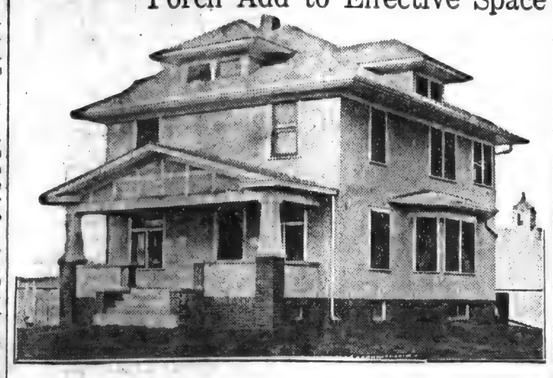
Extra Lavatories and Sleeping Porch Add to Effective Space



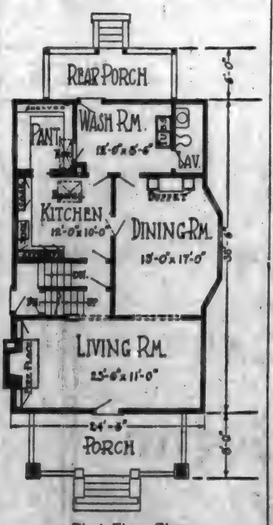
By W. A. RADFORD

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give ADVICE FREE OF COST on all problems pertaining to the subject of building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as editor, author and manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on the subject. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 1827 Prairie avenue, Chicago, Ill., and only inclose two-cent stamp for reply.

In spite of the modern tendency to build smaller houses with fewer rooms, there are yet many people who desire a more roomy house and many others whose requirements are not met by the so-called small house of the present-day type. For such families it may be difficult to find plans which will meet the requirements and at the same time offer the convenience and improvements which are part of every well-planned house today.

It may therefore be appreciated if an occasional home of large proportions is offered as a suggestion for the prospective home builder and the house which is illustrated here is of this type. In addition to six rooms of the usual sort it offers a first-floor washroom, a large pantry, extra lavatories and a large sleeping porch which gives it the same effectiveness as an even larger dwelling.

The exterior is simple but attractive. It is finished in stucco, above the brick foundation. Either lap siding or shingle could be used equally well in place of the stucco, if desired, or masonry construction would be entirely appropriate. The design follows the accepted lines for what is sometimes called the square type of house, though the plan, while rectangular, is really considerably deeper than it is wide.



First Floor Plan.

There is a broad porch clear across the front of the house with a central entrance into the living room. This room also extends across the entire front. It is a large room, 23½ feet by 11 feet wide, with a big fireplace and built-in bookcases at one end. From it doorways open into a stair hall and the dining room. The latter is also a large room with a big bay at the side. It connects directly with the kitchen and with the washroom at the rear.

The kitchen is placed directly back of the stair hall and it, too, has a door into the washroom. Off of it there is a large pantry with a place for the refrigerator and many built-in shelves to care for the supplies. The washroom is equipped with built-in tubs and off of it there is a convenient lavatory. The rear entrance admits one to this room.

Above the stairs there are two bedrooms at the front, over the big living room, and a third bedroom back of one of these. The two adjacent bedrooms are provided with unusually large closets while the closet in the other bedroom is somewhat smaller. Just back of the stairs is the bathroom and adjoining it an extra lavatory which will be a great convenience to a family of the size which would occupy such a house.

At the extreme rear of the second floor is the sleeping porch. Like the living room on the first floor, this porch extends across the entire width of the house and is almost the same size. It is almost completely enclosed with windows on three sides and could easily be partitioned off to form two separate sleeping apartments. In this way it will add greatly to the sleeping accommodations and the extra lavatory will provide the necessary extra conveniences.

With such a house some storage space is almost a necessity for there are sure to be many things which must be put away during a large portion of the time. This also is provided, for there is an attic above which is reached from the stair hall and thus complete provision is made for all needs of a large family.

Open Stairs and Air Shafts Cause Blazes

An examination of the fire records of New York and elsewhere reveals the fact that open stairs and shafts—easily remedied conditions—are responsible for practically all serious blazes that destroy life and property.

Flue-like openings of this kind include elevator and dumbwaiter shafts, stairways and other perpendicular passages from one floor to another, all of which are tried and true friends of the fire demon.

Most blazes start in basements or cellars, and as their natural tendency is to sweep upward they seek and follow the nearest pathway available. This is usually some near-by elevator well or stairway, and all too often such fires flare up through a structure so rapidly that there is little or no time for its occupants to escape with their lives.

Even when the flames do not speed upward at once, smoke will do so and then mushroom into upper stories. In dwellings and hotels, sleeping tenants have been asphyxiated before they have had a chance even to leave their rooms.

Shade Carrier

Shade carrier is a device upon which the shade roller is movable to any position desired up and down the window. Its advantages lie in proper ventilation, light, shade and privacy.

Low Ceilings Can Be Made to Seem Higher

In a good many of the small houses the bedrooms have rather low ceilings. The ceiling would appear higher if painted in blue or green; or if the ceiling be too high it can be painted in yellow, or even light red or brown. A fairly cozy atmosphere can be produced, should the ceiling be too high, by trimming the walls up to about two or three feet of the ceiling, and by painting this space either with the same brightness of color as the ceiling, or with a color intermediate between that of the walls and ceiling.

Purchase Best Locks for Doors and Windows

Good hardware on the front door always pays best. Locks are intricate mechanisms and should be the best obtainable. It is not necessary that they be of the highly ornate type, but, whatever type they are, they should be the product of a manufacturer known to build first-class and trouble-proof equipment.

Get Contractor's Advice

Very important in this day, when we are learning to make our homes more beautiful, we are beginning to realise that the floor may be in complete harmony, both as to design and color, with the rugs, draperies and furnishings of any room, whether it be the kitchen or the living room.

QUEEN VICTORIA LYDIA E. PINKHAM

Two Famous Women Born the Same Year

In the year 1819, two babies were born whose lives were destined to have a far reaching influence. One was born in a stern castle of Old England, the other in a humble farmhouse in New England.

Queen Victoria through her wisdom and kindliness during a long and prosperous reign has become enthroned in the hearts of the British people. Lydia E. Pinkham through the merit of her Vegetable Compound has made her name a household word in many American homes.

One of the many women who praise Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is Mrs. Adolph Bratke of 4316 South 13th St., South Omaha, Nebr., who was in a rundown condition for four years before she tried the Compound. "I began to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound," she writes, "and I have felt my health steadily improving." Mrs. Bratke continued to take the Compound for a year and a half and at the end of that time she found herself in excellent health. "I am feeling fine now and do all my work myself," she wrote in her most recent letter. "I am the mother of six and manage an eight-room house without anybody to help."

Dog Fond of Coffee

McPherson county, Kansas, has the reputation of leading that state in its coffee consumption, due mainly to the fact that it is largely peopled by the descendants of Swedish pioneers. Now, Otis Greenlaw of Canton owns a dog that is strictly a McPherson county product. While no assertion is made that it is of Swedish extraction, it is a coffee drinker and three times a day has its coffee with its meals.

Avoid Injecting Serum Into Hams

Veterinarians Urged to Be Careful in Immunizing Against Cholera.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Veterinarians and others are cautioned by the United States Department of Agriculture against injecting serum and virus into the hams when immunizing hogs against cholera.

Frequently infectious material is carried into the ham by a contaminated hypodermic needle and damage results through the formation of abscesses at the point of the injection. When such unsound hams are discovered at the packing house they are condemned as unfit for food, but in some instances the abscesses are so deep-seated in the meat that they cannot be detected at the time the hams are trimmed and inspected preparatory to curing. Instances have been reported where the presence of such abscesses was not revealed until after the ham had reached the consumer.

Heavy Loss to Packers.

In July, 1923, the Department of Agriculture called to the attention of those who administer the anti-hog-cholera treatment the heavy losses to packers through this sort of damage. A case was cited where abscesses were found in 40 out of 110 hams as the result of ham injections of serum. There has been a marked improvement since 1923, but recent reports indicate that some operators continue the old damaging practice.

More Suitable Places.

Immunization can be accomplished just as effectually when the serum is injected into the axillary space under the shoulder (corresponding to the armpit in man), where no damage will result should an abscess form. The same applies when the virus is injected under the skin at any place where the conditions are favorable for absorption. Losses can be avoided if hog raisers will refuse to allow either serum or virus to be injected into the hams when their hogs are being immunized against cholera.

Practical Swine Houses Described in Bulletin

Proper housing is an important factor in the successful raising of hogs. Too often this is neglected, when little expense and effort would be required to provide good, serviceable, well-ventilated houses which give ample protection from cold and admit much needed sunshine.

The same kind of housing for hogs [redacted] made of the average hog house, he says, is that it is poorly lighted and ventilated, if in fact any provision at all has been made for ventilation.

The bulletin contains illustrations and floor plans showing how proper ventilation and lighting is secured in the different styles of houses. A copy of the publication may be secured as long as the supply lasts by writing to the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington.

Pails With Small Tops Preferred for Milking

The ordinary milk pail is usually about ten inches high, much wider at the top than at the bottom and holds from twelve to sixteen quarts. An exceptionally well arranged vessel for catching all the foreign matter that may fall from the cow's udder, flanks or belly. Intelligent farmers and dairymen are abandoning these old time pails for the more sanitary small top pails. Pails with small openings in the top reduce the bacterial content approximately 50 per cent. Such pails are not expensive and will last as long as the old style. All milk vessels should be of good material, well tinned and have all the crevices well filled with solder. It is quite difficult or almost impossible to thoroughly clean and sterilize a milk vessel that has deep crevices along the seams.

[redacted] Department of Agriculture in a new department Bulletin No. 1393-D, "The Granary Weevil."

The granary weevil is sometimes confused with the rice weevil, a much more destructive pest, but unlike the latter in that it possesses only rudimentary wings. It is thought to have originated either in Asia or the Mediterranean region. This pest does not appear to thrive in tropical and semi-tropical climates. Because of its habit of breeding in grains of all kinds, it has been carried by commerce to all parts of the civilized world.

The weevil apparently is not well equipped to meet present-day methods of handling and protecting grain, with the result that, in the United States at least, it is seemingly becoming of less importance as a pest in grain and certain grain products.

Detailed information relative to the granary weevil, its economic history, origin and distribution, life history and habits, nature of injury, and control measures, along with other data is given in the bulletin. A copy of the publication may be obtained free, as long as the supply lasts, by writing to the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

Infertile Egg Is Best for the Summer Trade

Summer heat has the same effect on fertile eggs as the setting hen or incubator. The germ, in hot weather, will quickly develop a blood ring which spoils the egg for food and market purposes.

"Fresh eggs for table use should be infertile," says Allen G. Oliver, poultry extension specialist at State college, Raleigh, N. C. "Those who keep poultry should either sell, kill or confine the male birds as soon as the hatching season is over. Those males which are good enough for breeding purposes should not run with the hens all the year round. By this method the males will produce stronger germed eggs that in turn will produce stronger chicks."

Mr. Oliver states that if the hen is properly fed, if the nests are clean, the eggs gathered twice daily, stored in a cool, dry place and delivered to the consumer in prime condition, the consumer will be willing to pay the highest market price. But if the rooster is allowed to run with the flock after hatching season, if the hens are not properly and regularly fed, if the nests are dirty and crowded and the eggs are gathered every few days and stored in a warm place before delivery some days later, the consumer wants a gas mask when the food comes to him at the table.

Best Weight of Hogs to Hog-Off the Corn Crop

Hogs of any weight may be used in hogging off corn, but best results are secured with the hogs weighing from 70 to 125 pounds. With good mature corn, a daily gain of from 1¼ to 1½ pounds can be expected. With an average crop, we figure that an acre of corn will supply sufficient feed for about five pigs of the above weights for a 60-day period, providing that good pasture is available while on corn. Hogs should have access to a pasture which is rich in protein and minerals.

Penn's "Walking Purchase"

In 1682 William Penn purchased of the Delaware Indians a tract of land in the present counties of Bucks and Northampton, Pennsylvania, bounded on the east by the Delaware river and in the interior to a point as far as a man could walk in three days. Penn and the Indians started out to walk, beginning at the mouth of Neshaming creek. At the end of a day and half Penn concluded that he had enough territory and a deed was given him for the land at this point, which was 10 miles from the start. In 1737 the distance was increased to 70 miles.

Riches in Black Hills

The Black hills constitute one of the richest gold-mining districts in the United States and have yielded over $100,000,000. Silver, copper, tin and iron ores also occur within their limits, besides coal, salt, petroleum, mica, gypsum and building stone. About one-third of the area is covered with dense, dark forests of pine, whence the name, while deciduous trees are abundant. The climate is salubrious, the soil fertile and the hills are well adapted to grazing purposes.

Canny Titus Tite Took No Chances

Darius L. Chauncey, the millionaire broker, said at a Boston brokers' banquet:

"And then there's the mean speculator, the speculator who wants to make a million or two without taking any risks. I told one of these speculators a story the other day.

"It was a story about Titus Tite, the village usurer. Titus was watching a patent medicine man conduct a sale of patent medicine. The sale had no success, no success at all, and the medicine man at last, in a spirit of bitter irony, put up at auction a bright new silver dollar.

"But the villagers were suspicious, though it was clear that the dollar was a good one. Titus Tite, however, went so far as to bid a dime for it.

"'The coin's yours, Mr. Rockefeller,' said the medicine man. 'There are no further bids. Pass up your dime.' And from his automobile he held out his hand with the dollar in it.

"But Titus whined up at him:

"'Ah, take me dime out of the dollar, and gimme 90 cents change.'"

A terrible mistake is made in fostering a propaganda among men that they don't need homes.

Most excuses are lies wrapped in tissue paper.

Postage Stamps Give Lessons in History

"Everybody who posts or receives a communication through the United States mail receives noiens volens, a transitory lesson in the history of the nation," says Harry S. New, postmaster general, in an article in School Life, a publication of the Interior department.

"In general the designs upon the regular issues have included the representation of the head of one of the Presidents, but in the past 50 years the custom has grown of commemorating important historical events by special issues," states the postmaster general. "The novel appearance of the new stamps immediately arrests the attention of the user, and inquiry into its meaning naturally follows. The result is a valuable lesson in history which few escape, even those of limited education.

"Thirteen special series of adhesive stamps have been employed to impress historical occasions upon the popular mind."

Wets want prohibition repealed because so many people become violaters because of it. If they expressed it honestly they would say, "We refuse to obey the law and we want it repealed so we can do as we please without becoming law violators." In other words, we are outlaws and yet want to dictate what the laws of the land shall be. If they would show that they were really loyal citizens by obeying the law faithfully and then make the claim that they were being unjustly deprived of their liberties. They would be entitled to consideration. But so long as they are in rebellion against the law, there is no other way but to put down the rebellion. Nothing but jail or the noose for outlaws. To council with them as to the welfare of the public is folly. Loyal citizens who are obedient to the laws are the people who should say what the law should be.—Butler Record.

TAX SUPPORTED BANDS NOW LEGAL IN INDIANA

Taxation in support of municipal bands and orchestras is now legal in twenty-six out of the forty-eight states in the union. Indiana is among the states that have passed this sort of legislation.

Movements for similar legislation are now under way in Arizona, Florida, Idaho, Kentucky and New Mexico. Iowa was the first state to pass legislation providing for the support of municipal bands.

The law in Iowa, as in a majority of the other states which have a band tax law, provides that cities may levy a tax for the purpose of establishing and maintaining municipal bands, or for paying some existing band to furnish concerts. This tax can be levied only after it has been authorized by vote of the citizens, and the question is submitted for vote upon petition of a certain percent of the qualified voters of the city or town. Provision is made for repeal of the tax in similar fashion.

The most common alternative to the band tax law is a provision whereby a municipality may appropriate funds for bands or band concerts without any special tax for that purpose. This is the method used in Indiana, whereby any municipality may appropriate through its common council any sum not to exceed $1,200 per year to be used in providing public concerts. In a few isolated cases, cities in states which have no band tax laws have nevertheless appropriated funds for the purpose of providing free concerts for their citizens. The theory which permits action of this kind is that such appraprations are legitimate since there is no law against them.

"The important virtue of a band tax law is that it distributes the expense evenly and impartially—everyone enjoys the music and everyone pays his share." "The large number of contributors makes the cost of each one exceedingly small. In Long Beach, Cal., for instance, they have band concerts every day but Monday, except for a two weeks vacation in the spring, ad it costs the citizens, even with the unusually large number of performances, only about eighty-five cents per year. In Clarinda, Iowa, the cost is about thirty-five cents per capita, which expenditure pays for about fifty public concerts presented throughout the year."

ST. JOE NEWS.

VOL. XL — ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, AUGUST 26, 1926 — NUMBER 34

The SPIRIT of Home-Coming

Elgin Curie, Special Feature
—Editor of Home Coming Dept.

St. Joe and the community of which, it is a part, will observe their third annual "Home Coming Day," the first Saturday in September.

Two years ogo, an organization was effected to celebrate and observe such a day and with complete cooperation of the entire town and surrounding community, the two former "Home Coming Days," were successful from any point of view.

The plans and arrangements for the reception and entertainment of visitors are more elaborate and will, perhaps, be so comprised as to give satisfaction to each one in attendance.

A strenuous effort is being made to notify all former residents, the children of present residents and all friends of the town and community.

From the standpoint of comparison with other places and towns, the community of St. Joe is old, since it represents in part, four generations. And since this is true, there should be numbers of people living near and far, who will welcome an opportunity to visit this town and community, their friends and relatives on this day.

It has been customary in past years to hold family reunions, the object of which, was to reunite the various individuals and relatives of a family and so a "Home Coming Day," for an entire community can constitute a reunion, which will bring together the friends and relatives who have been separated and settled in other parts of the country.

"Home Coming" has an emphatic significance in this country, the United States of America, which does not obtain in any other country of the world. It is due to the fact, that the country is young and the people are unsettled.

The pioneer spirit of our forefathers remain in the life blood and ambitions of our people and they, even yet, emigrate from place to place, although, keeping in memory, their birthplace, the scenes of their childhood and experiences of adult years.

The life stream of this country has flowed westward, always, toward the setting of the sun and likewise, the general trend of humanity in Europe has been westward for centuries. Although, families in Europe are settled, that is, they do not emigrate from place to place within the country, they live in the same house, generation after generation.

America is a great country, marvelous in conception and developement, powerful, rich and industrious. But its future and present security are not obtained in these facts. The mark of a nation, the security of its future, is found in its homes and the family group. A good family in a good home, is the highest development of humanity and a nation.

And so, surely, the word Home must mean something to everybody.

"Home Coming Day" has a happy sequence of words and the sound of the phrase is joyous. The happiness and joy of "Coming Home," has, of course, been experienced by all human beings. Perhaps most people are glad to come home after an absence of a few hours or days, others a few months and some very few after a lapse of years. It does not matter which group we belong, since each of us is glad some time to come home.

The various factors that form the destiny of a nation, that shape the lives of individuals and the course of communties, are derived from a fundamental source, the Spirit. And it follows, logically, that when the Spirit is good, the things emanating therefrom are good.

The Spirit of "Home Coming Day," indeed! To this Spirit, all these things as tribute; the song of birds and the perfume of the flowers, and the soft deep colorings of the sunset, where the sky and clouds and evening mist meet in a glowing picture such as the hand of no human artist can portray.

CHARGED OF STEALING VALUABLE PAPERS

On complaint of Charles D. Henderson of Spencer township, DeKalb county, Frank Gerls of south-west of Kendallville, was arraigned in mayor's court at Kendallville Saturday on a charge of robbery. On account of the absence of witnesses, the hearing was postponed until Wednesday.

Gerls bought some personal property sold by Mr. Henderson at a public sale nearly two years ago. In payment he executed notes and a chattel mortgage. Mr. Henderson went to see Gerls last month regarding payment. In the course of their conversation it is said Gerls seized the mortgage and a note that were in Mr. Henderson's pocket. Mr. Hendrson regained possession of the papers, however.

Then Gerls threw Mr. Henderson to the ground and took the papers by force, Mr. Henderson alleges. In the scuffle Mr. Henderson's thumb was twisted and broken.

Mr. Henderson filed a suit in replevin in the Noble circuit court at Albion to get possession of the property involved. A hearing on the case has not yet beenheld. Mr. Henderson signed an affidavit charging Gerls with robbery and it was filed in the Kendallville mayor's court by the prosecuting attorney of Noble county.

Advise Shippers to Candle Market Eggs

Especially Urgent During Spring and Summer.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Candle all eggs before shipment, and especially during the warm spring and summer months when spoilage is most likely to occur," is the advice given to egg shippers by the bureau of chemistry, United States Department of Agriculture, which is charged with the enforcement of the federal food and drugs act. "The loss resulting from spoilage of eggs shipped to distant markets may be greatly reduced by this precaution," say the officials. Candling as near as possible to the source of production will not only save transportation charges but will prevent waste of a valuable food product."

Federal inspectors have been instructed to be on the watch for interstate shipments of adulterated eggs. Under the food and drugs act eggs which have yolks stuck to the shell, moldy eggs, black spots, mixed rots, addled eggs, and any other eggs that are filthy, decomposed or putrid are adulterated. When such shipments are found they may be seized and the individuals responsible for shipment prosecuted under the law.

Many eggs that are suitable for immediate consumption will not stand shipment to distant markets. By candling, these eggs may be taken out and sold for local consumption, leaving only those that have a good chance to reach the market in edible condition.

A bulletin on candling eggs tells just how to distinguish between a good egg and one that is likely to spoil in transit. Write to the Bureau of Chemistry, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., for a copy.

Wide Variations in the Cost of Producing Pork

Wide variations in the cost of producing pork are shown in a survey made by the Department of Agriculture of farms in Henry county, Iowa, and Warren county, Illinois, said to be typical of corn-hog farms throughout the corn belt.

The gross cost of producing 100 pounds of marketable pork on 44 farms in one year ranged from $3.07 to $13.55, with an average of $5.49. Production costs on 39 farms in another year ranged from $4.98 to $10.02, with an average of $6.32. The figures are for the years 1921 and 1922 and are presented merely as showing the variation in costs.

The variation, the department says, indicates the influences of care and management in the hog lot. The farms were within a short distance of each other; it was possible to follow very similar methods within the region, and yet some farms shipped hogs to market costing more than twice what they cost other farms.

Detailed results of the survey have been published in Department Bulletin No. 1331, "Cost of Producing Hogs in Iowa and Illinois," copies of which may be had free, as long as the supply lasts, upon request to the Department of Agriculture, Washington.

Steady Increase in Pure Breds

"Better Sires-Better Stock" Campaign Shows Increase in Members.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

One hundred and fifty new members a month is the average number of live-stock owners joining the "Better Sires-Better Stock" campaign fostered by the bureau of animal industry, United States Department of Agriculture. The members have adopted the use of pure-bred sires for all kinds of live stock on their farms, including poultry. This increase in membership is believed to be a good index of progress in live stock improvement in this country.

During the three months, January 1 to March 31, as shown by the report just issued by the bureau of animal industry, 450 live-stock owners signed enrollment blanks, thus affiliating themselves with the better-live-stock movement and bringing the total number of persons so enrolled to 16,560. Persons participating in this work receive from the department educational literature on animal breeding and feeding and also a lithographed sign, "Pure-Bred Sires Exclusively Used on This Farm." Many other agencies, also, are at work striving toward the same goal, but in most cases their influence is not so easy to measure.

Leading Counties.

In the report just issued a list of 48 counties shows that each of these areas has more than 100 persons who are using pure-bred sires exclusively for the improvement of their herds and flocks. In each of the three leading counties the number of persons active in this work exceeds 500. The relative standing of these counties follows:

County and County Agent	Pure-Bred Sire Users
Pulaski, Va.—E. C. Grigsby..	593
New Haven, Conn.—Raymond K. Clapp	559
Union, Ky.—R. O. Wilson.....	550

Special activity in live-stock improvement during January, February and March of this year centered in New Haven county, Connecticut, though participants were listed from 13 counties in 8 states.

Development of Movement.

The development of the better-sires movement during the last six years has been marked by a steady increase in the number of participants, by excellent support from the agricultural and city press, and by direct efforts of live-stock organizations and extension workers. County agricultural agents, representing the various states and the United States Department of Agriculture, have conducted most of the work in their respective counties. The Department of Agriculture keeps records of progress and furnishes suitable educational literature and information.

A recent development in the department's service is that of lending country newspapers electrotype cuts and furnishing illustrations and text matter for special editions devoted to live-stock improvement.

Plan for Success With Caponizing Operation

To be successful with capons and caponizing, it is absolutely necessary to keep the chicks free from vermin. Chicks infested by mites will not withstand the shock of the operation, while a vigorous chick will scarcely notice it.

While caponizing may be done successfully almost any time of the year, May and June are the better months for it. These, with proper care, should make eight or ten-pound capons by the holiday season. The later ones must be kept over till the latter part of the winter or early spring.

The correct weights for caponizing depend upon the breed—the Mediterraneans at about one pound, the American breeds at from one and three-quarter to two pounds, the Asiatics and English from two and a half to three pounds.

The chicks must be kept without feed or water for 24 or 30 hours before the operation. This makes the operation more successful and is better for the birds.

FARM NOTES

No farmer is genius enough to grow quality production on scrub land.

* * *

Sweet clover is one of the best pastures and is a great crop for improving the soil.

* * *

Pushing a soft team of horses to their limit is not the best way to get the most work out of them.

* * *

A clean-up day is often advisable on many farms. It gives an opportunity to put things away and makes the farm more attractive.

Even the baby chicks have self-feeders now. And they are practical, too, for farmers say that both bran and mash can be fed in this manner. Thus labor is saved and strong quick-growing chicks are produced.

"Get the gopher," is the slogan this spring. These farm pests are having a more difficult time than they did a few years ago when their chief danger was from the little rifles shot by farm youngsters. Now the farmer himself is "taking a shot" at killing the gophers.

HUSBAND DID THE WASHING

His Wife Confined to Her Bed by Ill Health

Because of his wife's frequent ill health, Mr. J. F. Gage was obliged to do the washing and cooking for the family.

One day when Mrs. Gage was confined to her bed, he brought her the newspaper to read. Among the advertisements she noticed a letter from another sick woman telling of the help she had received from Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"I'll try it," she decided.

Her husband brought home a bottle and only a few days after she had begun to take it she felt well enough to be up around the house. Gradually her general health improved until she is now able to do her own work.

In a letter which Mrs. Gage recently wrote, she said, "I have taken twelve bottles and feel like a new woman." She has told many women about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and one of her friends is now taking it. Her address is Mrs. J. F. Gage, Route 6, Brownwood, Texas.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been taken by women for more than half a century with very satisfactory results.

SMART SPORTS ENSEMBLES; SOME LINGERIE NOVELTIES

IN THE smart ensemble pictured here, fashion writes a brief epilogue to styles that have met with conspicuous success this summer, and sets forth, in black and white, the wide popularity of two-piece frocks and of the cape.

Satin is the medium in which this chic afternoon costume is developed. It is a simple affair, with box plaited skirt in black, and plain overblouse of the slip-on variety, in white satin. There are no decorative touches on the blouse, except the small buttons, set close together, at the neck opening, unless the pointed pockets piped to the bottom of the frock—is made of yellow homespun.

For some time lingerie styles though much varied in minor details, have shown few important changes, and nothing very radical in that particular appears in the fall modes now making their appearance. But there are a few new items in the cut and trimming of chemise and gowns that are noteworthy.

First there is much evidence of elaborate lacy treatments in trimming, especially noticeable in gowns. Filet, Irish, val and cluny laces, reinforced by net and net footing and by with black are counted as decorative. A long separate cape of black satin lined with white gives an air of importance to the ensemble. A wide collar and long ties are made of the black and white satin. Such a cape is very adaptable.

Capes made a triumphant entry in the spring and have been developed in a great many ways to the advantage of all sorts of dresses and sports clothes. A half-length cape is a graceful and vivacious contribution to a new sports ensemble. The dress is made of a natural-colored fabric with wide stripes in bright green and beige, that are made to run in a horizontal direction. It has a long vest and cuffs of natural kasha and a hip-length cape of the same material. A beige felt hat completes it. But in smart sports ensembles ulsters and cardigan jackets are emphasized for the coming fall. One of the handsomest new models has a yellow frock with long plain blouse and plaited skirt, and over this is worn a cardigan jacket of strawberry red flannel. A felt hat in the same color is worn with this dress and it is one of those new, fairly wide, floppy-brimmed affairs with round crown and a collar of self-color ribbon, finished with a buckle at the side. A long coat, that is, one that reaches georgette in bands and ruffles, are used for the square, V-shaped or round necklines which are interpreted in endless pretty ways on fall models. Many gowns are ruffled or bordered at the bottom with one of these airy trimming mediums, and many of them reveal uneven hemlines. Rudiments of the banished sleeve appear in ruffled sleeve lines, lace caps over the shoulders and borders about the deep arm's eye. Pockets and set-in medallions also elaborate gowns.

However far gowns may go in the direction of pretty frivolity, chemise, employing the same means, keep pace with them or go a step farther. Many of the new models are belted and some step-ins have fitted waistbands.

Latest in Lingerie.

Dance sets, which consist of a bandeau or bodice and panties, are the laciest of underthings, but daintiness is ever the outstanding style note.

In colors orchid, peach and coral lead off the high shades, but flesh pink has no real rival in popularity and is not likely to have. Crepe de chine heads the list of fabrics, followed by crepe-back satin, radium silk and georgette—the last used in combination with the others or as a trimming. In cottons the same colors appear in mercerized nainsook and fine batiste. JULIA BOTTOMLEY.

CORN BORER IS HERE, SOME CONTROL MEASURES

At last the European corn borer has been located in Concord township, on the Clarence Hart farm. Government men made a thorough inspection of his twelve acres of corn, and located but one live borer, while they found traces of them in the low ground, where the water had come up and drowned them.

The way they work in the corn can be seen from the sample stalks in the window of the News office.

To control the European corn borer the following practices are recommended:

Burn, or likewise destroy, before May 1 of each year, all cornstalks, corncobs, corn stubble, vegetable, field and flower crop remnants, weeds and large-stemmed grasses of the previous year. Remove all remnants of leaves from rhubarb stems before marketing.

Keep cultivated fields, fence rows, field borders, roadsides, etc., free from large weeds or large-stemmed grasses.

Cut corn close to the ground.

Cut and remove sweet-corn fodder from the field as soon as the ears are harvested. Feed direct to livestock, place in silo, or destroy by burning.

Cut and remove field corn from the field as soon as the ears are mature. Feed the stalks to livestock as soon as possible and burn or otherwise dispose of the uneaten parts before May 1 following. Shred or cut the fodder to increase its consumption.

Plow under thoroughly in the fall all infested cornstalks, corn stubble, other crop remnants, weeds and similar material which it is impractical to destroy in any other manner. When necessary to adopt this practice, an attempt should be made to plow under all of the material to a depth of at least six inches.

Plant small areas of early sweet corn to act as a trap crop adjacent to the fields intended for field corn or late sweet corn. Feed or otherwise destroy this early sweet corn as soon as the ears are harvested, or preferably just before that period, if the grower is willing to sacrifice the ears. Such plantings, where not destroyed at the proper time, constitute a menace to later corn.

Limit the size of corn fields to areas that can be kept free of weeds.

Do not plant corn within fifty feet of beets, beans, celery, spinach, rhubarb or flowering plants intended for sale.

Do not throw the uneaten parts of cornstalks used as feed or bedding into the manure pile unless this material is worked into piles containing enough fresh manure to produce heating.

Do not transport outside of the infested area any of the plants or plant products listed above as hosts to the borer.

Do not transport alive, in any of its stages, specimens of the European corn borer outside of the infested areas.

Do not attempt to circumvent the quarantine regulations. The penalty is severe.

Do not mix products grown within the infested area with those grown outside the infested area.

CORUNNA YOUTH SHOOTS BROTHER IN PLAY

Hary Patterson, a seventeen year old youth of Corunna, was shot near the heart Friday morning at the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Dayton Patterson, by his nine year old brother, Raymond Patterson, and died within ten minutes afterwards.

A .22 caliber bullet from a rifle penetrated the left chest. The victim staggered after being shot, then fell backwards on the kitchen porch of his parents' home.

Harry and Raymond had been tussling a few moments before in the kitchen. Harry was standing in the kitchen doorway when his brother went into another room, picked up the rifle and pointed it at him, pulled back the hammer and the gun was discharged.

Raymond claimed that the shot was accidental and that he did not intend to shoot his brother because he did not know that the rifle was loaded.

The father was at work and the mother was calling on a neighbor and no eye witness to the killing is available, other than the boy.

Home Bureau Activities

The Home Bureau Club met in the domestic science room of the school house Friday afternoon, August 20. The girls' club entertained them with several readings which were very good. There were three visitors present. The county nurse, Miss Sweeny, gave a very interesting talk. Mrs. Maginnis and Miss Georgia Walters of Jackson township also gave talks. After these talks Mrs. Pluma Hamilton gave a review of the work given by Miss Manahan of Purdue University, at Auburn in July. The subject was kitchen equipment. The club voted to have a community dinner on October 1, at which time they will entertain their families. This is a part of the nutrition project work consisting of a well balanced meal. They also voted to have a farm display on achievement day. After this the club girls served dainty refreshments to about thirty people. The club adjourned to meet on September 23rd in the Cheesetown school house.

CONGRESSMAN HOGG HIGHLY COMMENDED BY AGRICULTURE CONFERENCE

David Hogg, Congressman from the Twelfth Indiana District, was warmly praised by the Executive Committee of the Agricultural Conference of the North Central States at a recent meeting held in Chicago.

The resolution states, "We express our appreciation of the work and vote of David Hogg, in Congress in favor of farm relief. We ask farmers to give him their loyal support without respect to party affiliations, for the time has arrived when we must place the well-being of agriculture above petty lines of party division.

RELIC OF BARBARISM STRIKES ARE OUTGROWN

Conviction is growing that the weapon. The failure of the New York subway strike, following closely upon the collapse of the spectacular general strike in Great Britain, and the recent unsuccessful coal strike in our own country, is evidence of a new industrial era.

Such good as it was able to accomplish has been secured, and the world is moving on.

The strike is a relic of the time when men used violence as a substitute for intelligence. Laboring men realize that there must be a better way, and the leaders of both labor and industry who fall back upon such obsolete methods as the strike and the lockout, do not show sufficient intelligence to lead.

YOU CAN'T BE LOYAL TO TWO COUNTRIES

"The Good Book says that one cannot serve two masters. By the same token one cannot hold sincere allegiance to two countries—he cannot hold aloft two flags and be loyal to both at the same time. One or the other must ride at the top of the mast. Loyalty is an attribute akin to godliness. Treason is the outward expression of ingratitude.

"President Coolidge says that the greatest danger to our government today, lies among those who are here, but who are unassimilated in heart and spirit, and whose greater love is still for the foreign lands they left to better their condition in the United States.

"It is not unnatural, nor even cause for criticism, that a person coming to the United States from some foreign country, should retain a certain degree of love for the land of his birth. All citizens of the United States descended from foreign lands, and there is no disrespect in this. We love to trace our ancestry back to the Pilgrim Fathers, and even beyond. But there is a limit to ancestral boastfulness.

"Marital vows remove a young woman from the paternal home, and a new home is chosen. This does not mean that love and respect for the old home should be obliterated; but it does mean that a new alter has been erected—a new hearthstone built and dedicated to a new life, and this is the alter and this is the hearthstone that demands loyalty above all others.

"So it is with the country of one's adoption. No man ever came to the United States of America except of his own volition, urged by a desire to obtain greater temporal blessings. The highways of the seas are never closed against his return, if he finds himself unhappy under the laws and under the Constitution of this country.

"Loyalty to God, to home and to one's self commands confidence of others and bespeaks good citizenship."

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Mexican Catholics Ask a Truce and Reform of the Constitution.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

MEXICAN Catholics are now seeking a compromise of their controversy with the government. The episcopal committee, made up of archbishops and bishops, last week presented to President Calles a petition for suspension of the religious laws pending constitutional reform "so that worship, education and charity may from now on enjoy due guarantees."

The committee denies that the priests were rebellious in suspending public worship in the churches, and says they have given proof of their respect for the law as far as their consciences permit. The petition continues: "We answer the charge of not having petitioned for reform of the constitution by stating that the governors, for one reason or another, did not enforce the objectionable clauses, so we are not called upon to demand a repeal of the clauses, which were a dead letter. Similar action with regard to the constitution of 1917 we considered less called for since President Carranza himself qualified them (the religious clauses) as unjust and uncalled for and proposed the reform of certain articles that are contrary to liberties claimed by the Mexican Catholic people.

"These were not effected because of events known. Nor did General Obregon urge compliance with the objectionable laws. So we had no reason to object.

"Now, animated by a most sincere patriotism, desirous of a true and lasting peace, we ask you to use your influence to reform said articles, effectively, and also the penal prescriptions lately sanctioned.

"As a basis for this reform, we request full independence of church and state, so that the constitution and organic laws and regulations be faithfully interpreted; that the state dictate no laws prescribing any religious or legislative matters, as, for example, the fixing of the number of priests, or imposing conditions on the exercise of the ministry, etc.

"This is the true conception of civil law as observed among people faithfully respecting the independence of spiritual and temporal power. Accordingly, we ask the following liberties, to which we are entitled as Christians and citizens of a cultured nation and as men: Liberty of conscience, of thought, of worship, of instruction, of association, of press—all without onerous restrictions destroying the substance of the constitutional principles."

Though the Catholic authorities have repeatedly asserted that they do not countenance any revolutionary attempts, the government agents say they have uncovered extensive plans for rebellion, and scores of arrests were made. The one actual attempt at revolution so far was scotched by agents of the Department of Justice of the United States when they nabbed Gen. Enrique Estrada and more than 150 of his followers near San Diego, Calif., on charges of violating the neutrality laws. The band of insurrectos had an armored truck, machine guns, rifles and lots of ammunition and was on its way to cross the border.

Secretary of State Kellogg, calling on the President at White Pine camp, told him of his discussion with the leaders of the Knights of Columbus who had presented that order's demand for intervention in the Mexican dispute. Mr. Coolidge and Mr. Kellogg were in complete agreement that no grounds exist for such intervention or for any variation of the administration's policy of dealing with the Calles government.

There has been but one specific complaint of infringement of American property rights in the church embroglio, and not any complaints of bodily injuries to American citizens. The administration, it appears, has not felt warranted in interceding to prevent the expulsion of American clericals, from Mexico, inasmuch as these expulsion measures have applied to all foreign clericals alike.

In the controversy over confiscatory oil lands the President is satisfied that the Mexican government has made large concessions.

SECRETARY KELLOGG took occasion, in a speech at Plattsburg, N. Y., to state the administration's attitude toward the Geneva preliminary arms limitation conference, and the government cabled the full text to American diplomatic missions in all major capitals. Dealing with published reports that the United States might withdraw from the Geneva deliberations, which have been complicated by efforts of the French and other delegations to have a limitation formula which would cover land and sea forces, aircraft and even national economic resources and possibly man power, Mr. Kellogg declared that "we are now working to make the Geneva meeting a success," and expressed hope that "progress towards naval limitation, as well as toward limitation of land armament, will result."

He made it clear that "what we desire is results," but left the door open, if the Geneva meeting should adjourn without constructive action looking toward reduction of military burdens, for the Washington government to initiate a conference among great naval powers with a view to extending the scope of the Washington limitation agreements.

YET another result of Mr. Kellogg's conference with the President was the decision to ask the Canadian government to receive American officials for discussion of a plan whereby the supply of bootleg liquor from Canadian sources can be completely shut off. The proposed agreement would permit American prohibition forces to arrest liquor smugglers wherever smuggling was attempted. It was given out that the President was determined that national prohibition, being the law, should be enforced to the limit of the government's power. Gen. L. C. Andrews has been persuaded to continue in office at least until the present congress ends. He believes the agreement he negotiated with the British will stop the smuggling of liquor from British possessions, and he expects congress to amend the Volstead act so the diversion of industrial alcohol to beverage purposes can be prevented.

WITHOUT waiting for the return of Carmi Thompson, his personal investigator in the Philippines, President Coolidge has made it known that he still does not regard the Filipinos as capable of independence at this time. He believes that they should make further political advancement before being trusted to govern themselves. But that the United States will be justified in granting them independence eventually, he has no doubt.

POINCARE'S government in France, of which Ambassador Herrick, home on vacation, speaks most optimistically, is putting into effect its retrenchment program, the first step being to cut down the wheat importations to the extent of 28,000,000 bushels the ensuing year. Dr. Andre Queuille, minister of agriculture, told the cabinet that by increasing the percentage of whole wheat in flour the country could dispense with 5,000,000 bushels this coming year. A further saving of 23,000,000 bushels will be effected by the obligatory use of 10 per cent of other cereals in breadmaking.

WHEN Julius Rosenwald, Chicago capitalist, was in Europe recently he was immensely interested in the famous Deutsches industrial museum in Munich, and determined that his city should have a similar institution. Accordingly, last week he gathered together a number of Chicago's leading men and announced that he would give $5,000,000 to equip such a museum, to be located in the Fine Arts building in Jackson park, a World's fair structure whose reconstruction has been provided for at a cost of $5,000,000. Mr. Rosenwald's guests were enthusiastic over the project and gave assurance of financial and moral support that makes its carrying out a certainty. The museum with all its industrial exhibits installed will represent an investment of $20,000,000.

Another Chicago institution that will be of national interest, the Shedd aquarium, soon to be built in Grant park, was given an additional $1,000,000 by Mr. Shedd last week, making his total gift $3,000,000. It is planned to make this aquarium the greatest, from a scientific standpoint, in the world.

UNITED Spanish War Veterans held their annual encampment in Des Moines, Iowa, and elected United States Senator Rice W. Means of Colorado their commander in chief. He served in the Philippines during the war with Spain. Mrs. Jennie R. Dix was chosen president of the Spanish War Nurses. Detroit was selected for the 1927 meeting, and Havana, Cuba, for 1928.

PROSPECTS for peaceful settlement of the British coal strike are good, for the miners voted in favor of resumption of unrestricted negotiations with the mine owners, and conferences between the latter and the miners' executive committee were begun. It was presumed the government would name a neutral chairman. Winston Churchill, chancellor of the exchequer, said the government's good offices were available to both sides but that whatever happened, there could be no more subsidy. He added that the strike had already cost the taxpayers of the country £23,000,000, and asserted that if all the miners returned to work at once additional taxation could be avoided only with the greatest exertion, for funds needed for cultural and economic development had been consumed in the internal warfare.

TROUBLE is brewing in Tangier and British and French warships are there to meet the situation. The population is in a state of great excitement, due partly to the torturing of native prisoners by the international police and partly to the statement of Gen. Primo de Rivera, Spanish dictator, that Tangier should be included in the Spanish zone in Morocco. This is Spain's price for the relinquishment of her claim to a permanent seat in the League of Nations council, and if it is not conceded there is a chance that she may vote the admission of Germany to the league or more likely follow the example of Brazil and withdraw from the league. An Italian cabinet member says any solution of the Tangier question which does not include consideration of Italy's rights as a signer of the treaty of Algeciras and as a Mediterranean power will be protested to the League of Nations.

JACK DEMPSEY and Gene Tunney will fight for the heavyweight title in Philadelphia on September 23, instead of in Chicago or New York. Tex Rickard has made arrangements with the Sesquicentennial authorities for the use of the stadium and the contest has received the O. K. of the Pennsylvania boxing commission, Governor Pinchot and Mayor Kendrick. That's the status of this momentous affair at this writing. There may be a change any day.

ALLIED armies of Marshal Chang and General Feng, after a siege lasting 112 days, drove the Kuominchun or national forces out of their strategic position in Nankow pass. The losers, however, retreated in good order while their heavy guns slaughtered the Manchurians. Foreign military observers say that in this campaign the Chinese employed modern war methods with notable skill.

The Kuominchun are said to have received bolshevik support from Russia. The same influence is said to be animating the march of the Cantonese government troops in southern China against the central provinces controlled by Wu Pei-Fu.

DR. HENRY WADE ROGERS, former president of Northwestern university and also former dean of the Yale law school, and since 1913 a judge of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals in New York, died in Trenton, N. J., at the age of seventy-three years. During his ten year at Northwestern he raised that institution from the status of a suburban college to that of a metropolitan university.

POULTRY FACTS

GEESE THRIVE ON YOUNG VEGETATION

The most perplexing season of the year for the rationing of geese seems to be the late summer and fall, particularly if the season is a dry one. Geese are primarily grazing fowls and the growing stock, especially, requires a constant supply of young and tender vegetation upon which to forage. Therefore, unless such is provided, they will cease to thrive, and frequently a large percentage are lost, writes Oscar Grow in the National Poultry Journal. During the latter part of a hot dry summer the grass becomes tough and fibrous, even though it may still appear green, and then it not only lacks nourishment, but becomes indigestible as well, thus resulting in malnutrition and sometimes stoppage of the bowels, which, in turn, is more likely than not to prove fatal.

It is very important, therefore, to supplement the pasturage with other rations at such times. The younger goslings may be permitted to forage in the corn fields, where it will be found they greatly relish many of the weeds and grasses growing therein, in addition to the lower leaves and "suckers" developing upon the corn stalks. The older geese may be given access to second-growth clover, when available, or, better still, to a field of rape or similar crops, sown for this purpose. Such resources are equally suitable for the growing flock and should be provided for in event they are liable to be required.

A critical period in the rearing of goslings is ushered in about the time of the first frost. Something resulting from the action of the frost upon the grass apparently causes goose septicemia or goose cholera. At least both have a habit of appearing at about the same time. Septicemia is very fatal and often a large percentage of the flock is lost before there is any indication of infection. Many individuals apparently in good health at evening time are dead the next morning, while others may linger for several hours or even days before succumbing.

Good Summer Care of the Chicken Flock

Summer eggs are more than fresh air and sunshine. Mash containing protein, and pasture, shade and water are important factors of summer management of the laying flock.

A large mash consumption is necessary for the maximum number of eggs. It pays to induce the laying hens to eat as much mash as possible. One way is to reduce the amount of grain fed by feeding it only in the evening. This will keep the hens hungry and eating mash.

Be sure there is space enough at the hoppers at any time the hens want to eat or they will start to forage for themselves. One foot of hopper space for every five hens is recommended for maximum consumption.

Keep suggesting mash to the flock by placing the hoppers where the chickens congregate during the day. If the poultry house is stuffy during the day the hens will leave it and the hoppers for the orchard shade.

Laying House Should Be Cleaned Before Autumn

The laying house should be thoroughly cleaned before the pullets are put in it. A common method is to remove all the interior fixtures and clean thoroughly by sweeping down the walls and removing all the litter and dirt from the floor. Prepare a good disinfectant by adding 5 parts of some good standard stock dip to 95 parts of water, and with the use of a force pump saturate the interior of the building with this disinfectant. The same method should be used for cleaning the interior equipment. After a day's exposure to the sunlight for thorough drying, the poultry house fixtures may be put in place. Spread clean sand over the floor and cover it with 3 to 4 inches of bright clean straw. This will put the house in condition for the early maturing pullets which should go in the next week.

Poultry Notes

It is the mash feed that makes the high egg production.

* * *

Cull the flock and increase the profits from the laying hens later.

* * *

A suitable mash, fed throughout the summer, balances the grain ration and keeps the chicks growing without any setbacks.

* * *

It may seem cruel, but actually it's kindness to refrain from feeding chicks for the first 36 hours after hatching.

* * *

The calcium which is needed for egg-shell building can usually be best furnished with oyster shell, says the Nebraska experiment station.

* * *

Some form of animal protein such as meat scrap, tankage, dried skim milk, or buttermilk or semi-solid buttermilk is essential as part of the ration for the laying hen.

Insist That Frogs Arrived in Deluge

The government meteorological office in Washington gave scant credence to those Danville residents who said that it rained frogs. Officials said there had been several similar reports previously, but none of them had been proved.

North Danville residents, on the other hand, pointed to millions of black frogs as large as a man's fingernail hopping about Bryant avenue. Small boys with cans and buckets collected them by the thousands. In some cases the frogs were shoveled from porches and walks. At six o'clock in the evening there were no frogs in sight. Following a tropical deluge at that hour, lasting a half hour, the streets and yards of that section of the city were thick with them. One theory was that the tiny frogs were brought out of hiding places by the heavy rain, but this was held unlikely by the absence of trees on the street. —Washington Post.

Remembering the Sabbath

Secretary Thomas Todd of the American Congregational association, said in a Boston address:

"If some people could have their way the Sabbath would only be observed as the old salt observed it.

"'I'd like to hire a boat,' a vacationist said to an old Gloucester salt one July Sunday. 'Any objections?'

"'Jumpin' Jonah, no!'

"'Well, I thought,' said the vacationist, 'today being Sunday—'

"'Holy mackerel!' said the old salt. 'So it is! I'd clean forgot. Of course, in that case, shipmate, I'll have to charge ye double rates.'"

Royalty Seeking Mates

While King Boris of Bulgaria is looking assiduously for a wife to share his throne, his twenty-four-year-old sister, Eudoxia, is seeking a husband. Unlike Boris, she has no throne or royal estate to offer—only her regal lineage and her affections. She has no money in her own name. She lives modestly with her brother in Sofia, but, like him, finds life in a Balkan capital, without relatives or family kin, extremely irksome and lonely. Eudoxia is ready to marry a commoner, provided he possesses character, means and gentle breeding.

He Had the "Dope"

From a school boy's essay on the race horse:

"The race horse is a noble animal used very cruel by gentlemen. Races are very bad places. None but wicked people know anything about races. The last derby was won by Mr. Morriss' Manna, a beautiful bay colt by Phalaris, rising four. The odds was 9 to 1 against him, and he won 8 lengths. Good old Steve!"—Daily Express (London).

Bobbed Seals' Hair

Some fur seals in Bering sea got their hair bobbed under a dictum issued by the United States bureau of fisheries. The seals on the Pribilof islands were shorn of the thick hair or mane in order to note the increase, if any, next year. Only a certain number of three-year-old males were subjected to the trim. Regulation livery barn clippers were used to shear the seals.

Not Typewriting, Chemistry

A colored woman of ample proportions came into the office of Frederick E. Schortemeier, secretary of state, not long ago and inquired whether a position could be found for her daughter. She explained that the girl was a high school graduate.

"Can she do any typewriting?" the secretary asked.

"Oh, yes," replied the mother.

"I suppose she studied it in school?" Mr. Schortemeier asked.

"No, but she took chemistry," was the reply.—Indianapolis News.

Long Walk About Town

It is calculated that it would require six months to walk through all the streets of New York city, allotting eight hours a day to the task and keeping up a normal pace. The total of paved and unpaved streets in the five boroughs is over 4,000 miles. Brooklyn and Queens have the same street mileage, with totals each of 1,305 miles, while Manhattan has a trifle under 500 miles.

Back Home To INDIANA

Home Coming Ballad, to be used by ensemble chorus in Grand Entree of Pageant:—"SAWDUST RINGS."

ADAPTED TO "Carry Me Back To Old Virginia."
Words By C. A. Woodcox.

I'm going back to Indiana,
Back where the Linden and the sugar maples grow,
There's where the flowers blossom sweet in the springtime,
On the hillsides green and on the banks of old St. Joe.
There in my childhood days I have roamed throuh the woodland,
Down by the creek and along the B. & O.,
No place on earth is so dear in my memory,
As the dear old HOME TOWN,
Back where I long to go.

CHORUS:—

I'm going back to Indiana,
Back to dear old friends that I have known and loved so long,
Back to my home and the scenes of my childhood,
Back to dear old St. Joe, famed in story and in song.

Alfalfa Weevil in a New Picture Film

General Idea of How to Combat the Insect.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

"Alfalfa Weevil Control," a new motion picture of the United States Department of Agriculture, gives a general idea of how to combat the insect and is of particular interest in the western states. Alfalfa is described as the foundation of agriculture in the West—"a hog's dream of heaven"—and as one of the world's most valuable forages. About 1904 or 1905 the alfalfa weevil, which belongs to the same family as the cotton boll weevil, was discovered in Utah. Since that time it has spread slowly but steadily until now it is found in seven states. Because of the importance of the alfalfa crop the alfalfa weevil constitutes a serious menace. Several states enforce quarantine restrictions to prevent further spread of the insect, and the luggage of automobile travelers is often examined.

Two measures of control are shown in the picture. Dusting with powdered arsenates is still in an experimental stage, but appears to have promise of proving effective. The use of poisonous sprays has proved its worth and is particularly recommended. Several types of sprayers are shown, including one with a very wide boom. Several scenes showing sprayed and unsprayed fields, side by side, are particularly interesting in depicting the benefits of this method of control. One spraying is usually considered sufficient to permit plants to make new growth, and protects the second crop as well as the first.

The film is one reel long and is a contribution from the bureau of entomology. It will be circulated through the film distribution system of the Department of Agriculture and the cooperating state institutions. Copies may be borrowed for short periods, or may be bought by authorized purchasers, at the laboratory charge.

Free Scouring Tests of Wool Samples Are Made

Wool growers may have samples of their wools graded and scoured, free of charge, by filing an application with the bureau of agricultural economics, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., where a wool-scouring laboratory is now available for conducting such tests as facilities will permit. Applications should be mailed to G. T. Willingmyre, in charge of wool standardization. The applicant will be sent a parcel post mailing sack and instructions as to the proper method of drawing a sample so that it will be representative of any large lot of raw wool in the grease.

Experiments conducted in the laboratory during the past year have yielded valuable information on scourloss or "shrinkage" of a large variety of domestic raw wools. The results have proved of great interest to many wool growers and their practical application will enable any producer to obtain a reasonably accurate estimate of shrinkage of his wool.

Wool samples submitted to the department will be returned scoured, together with a report of the shrinkage and the grade in which the wool has been classified according to the official wool grades of the United States.

Grass and Grasshoppers Good for Young Poults

The Rhode Island experiment station demonstrated pretty completely that turkeys could stand all the green food and milk they would eat, but should be fed pretty sparingly on grain, given perhaps half or so of what one would naturally think they needed.

Turkeys should be kept in in wet weather, at least should not be allowed to get wet, but allowed as great range as possible as soon as they are old enough to take it safely. It is best to feed them around home so as to have them back every night, but the greater range they can have the more natural the food becomes, as in that case they eat greens and insects. Where grasshoppers abound, turkeys usually do well.

It is important to select healthy stock.

Farm Hints

The best grapes grow from pruned vines.

* * *

Lubricating oil is cheaper than machinery. Drain the crank case of your tractor often.

* * *

Potatoes may be kept in good condition for late planting by greening or sun-sprouting.

* * *

Sweet clover that was seeded this spring should not be pastured until the plants have made a growth of at least a foot.

* * *

Sweet clover requires as much lime as alfalfa on soils tested and found sour. It may be seeded in wheat like common clover or with oats in the spring.

* * *

The care of trees is quite similar to the care of domestic animals. As a cow must be fed, housed, and doctored, a tree must be planted in a well managed soil, pruned and sprayed.

Much Harm Done to Winter Wheat

Losses Nearly as Heavy as Caused by All Other Diseases.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Winter injury to wheat causes nearly as heavy losses to that crop as do all wheat diseases combined, says the United States Department of Agriculture. The acreage of winter wheat annually abandoned, largely because of winter-killing, averaged 9.9 per cent during the 23-year period from 1901 to 1922, inclusive, according to Department Circular No. 378, "Comparative Hardiness of Winter-Wheat Varieties," just issued by the department.

During the 14-year period from 1909 to 1922, inclusive, frosts or freezing caused an average loss of 3.5 per cent of the wheat crop and plant diseases 3.9 per cent, according to crop correspondents of the department.

With a view to developing winter-wheat varieties of greater hardiness, investigations were conducted at 26 experiment stations in the United States and Canada during one or more of the six years from 1920 to 1925, inclusive. In the experiments 45 winter-wheat varieties and strains were grown in uniform nurseries.

Data as to comparative hardiness show that the varieties Minhardi, Buffum No. 17, Minturki and Odessa are considerably more cold resistant than the standard Kharkof used as a check Padui, Turkey (Minn. No. 1488), and Beloglina are somewhat more hardy than Kharkof. Kanred and Nebraska, No. 60 are probably slightly hardier than Kharkoff. Nebraska No. 28 and Blackhull are much less winter hardy than Kharkof. The results obtained in these experiments are being used as a basis for breeding wheats to combine winter hardiness with other good qualities.

A copy of the circular may be obtained free, as long as the supply lasts, by writing to the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

One Work Horse Needed to Care for 35 Acres

How many acres will one horse take care of and how many horses are needed on a 320-acre farm? Those are questions which are now being studied by economists at the Kansas State Agricultural college, reports E. N. Chapman.

"We have generally believed," Chapman says, "that one work horse is required for each 25 to 35 crop acres where no tractor is used, but that on farms having a tractor one work horse is needed for 45 to 55 crop acres.

Farmer co-operators working in conjunction with the department of economics at the college have reported from various counties the number of horses used per farm and the number of crop acres per work horse.

In Lincoln county 14 farmer co-operators reported one work horse to 34 crop acres. Six of the farmers own tractors.

In Dickinson county eight co-operators report one work horse for every 33 acres and five of the farmers own tractors.

Washington county with 30 farmers reported showing an average of 26 crop acres per work horse and only four tractors.

Morris county with 32 farmers reporting shows an average of 24 crop acres per work horse with three farmers using tractors.

Free Martins Generally Supposed to Be Sterile

While twin calves of the same sex, as a rule, present nothing abnormal in regard to their future fecundity the case is otherwise when the twin calves are of different sex. The bull calves of such births become normal breeders, but the heifer calves commonly turn out to be sterile. Such animals often are referred to as "free martins." In one instance in which the future breeding capacity of 113 heifer calves was studied, only six were found to be fertile and in another observation only four of 77 such calves bred normally. The rest were nonbreeders.

The phenomenon appears to depend on a connection between the blood vessels of the fetal membranes which are commonly grown together. This enables an exchange of certain substances which play a part in the reproduction function, the substances of the male being predominant over those of the female, and this predominance inhibits the full development of the reproduction organs of the latter.

Chicks Offer Splendid Market for Extra Milk

Baby chicks offer a splendid market for milk. They make a more steady growth and keep in better condition on milk than on any other drink. It is better to give the milk sour. The lactic acid of the milk is a foe to white diarrhea; it is tonic in its effects. Also, the chicks like it better than the sweet, separated milk. The sweet milk has the disadvantage also of gluing the eyes shut if the chicks dip in too deep.

The breeders who dip each tiny beak in sour milk as they take the chicks from the incubator are not offering feed so much as introducing lactic acid, and sweet milk doesn't answer this purpose.

Control of Bee Disease Is Seen

American Foul-Brood Can Be Controlled by Water-Formalin Solution.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Widespread interest has been aroused throughout the beekeeping industry by the apparent success of some recently discovered disinfectant methods in the treatment and control of American foul-brood. Disinfectants such as an alcohol-formalin solution are being used with fair success, and eliminate to a great extent the large losses previously caused by the necessary destruction of all combs infected with this disease of the brood of bees.

The use of the alcohol-formalin solution as a disinfectant is a step in advance in the control of the disease, says the United States Department of Agriculture, but apparently there is still room for improvement which will eliminate the danger of occasional cases of failure. For that reason, and because of the great interest in the subject, the bee culture laboratory started preliminary work early in 1924 for the purpose of making an exhaustive study of the efficiency of various disinfectants, including the commercial alcohol-formalin solution as well as water-formalin solutions.

Results of Tests.

A discussion of the results of the tests completed to date has been published in Department Circular 284, which is now ready for distribution. It was hoped that the results of the investigation by laboratory methods would form a basis for practical work in the apiary. As the work has developed, numerous difficulties have been encountered which indicate that the problem of the perfect sterilization of American foul-brood combs is neither simple nor yet fully solved.

The results obtained with various dilutions of alcohol and of a alcohol-formalin solution as the carrier for 20 per cent of their volume of formalin are not sufficiently complete to warrant conclusions as to their relative efficiency. All of these solutions are unsatisfactory, in that they do not completely sterilize all sealed cells in 48 hours. A 20 per cent solution of formalin in water, without alcohol, is slightly less efficient than the alcoholic solutions in sterilizing in 48 hours the contents of sealed cells, because of its failure to penetrate many of the cappings; but it sterilizes all open cells in that period.

Satisfactory Results.

In view of the cultural results obtained, however, a 20 per cent solution of formalin in water was found the most satisfactory disinfectant for sterilizing infected combs, with regard both to germicidal action and low cost, provided the proper precautions are taken. All honey should be extracted, all brood cappings should be completely removed, and the combs should be treated at least twenty-four hours, or forty-eight hours if it is found desirable to wash them in water after treatment.

Care must be taken not only with the process of disinfecting combs infected with American foul-brood, no matter what solution or method is used, but equal or greater care must be exercised in the treatment of the diseased colonies themselves to eliminate the danger of recurrence of disease from that source. The successful sterilization of the combs will otherwise be of little avail.

A copy of the circular may be secured, as long as the supply lasts, by writing to the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

Poison Bait Effective in Control of Cutworm

An inexpensive poison bait is usually very effective in controlling the cutworms in a newly planted strawberry plantation. The following formula is enough for about five acres and you can make up smaller quantities according to the same proportion:

Bran, 25 pounds.
Paris green, 1 pound.
Cheap sirup, 2 quarts.
Three lemons.
Three and one-half gallons water.

The bran and paris green are mixed dry. The juice of the lemons is squeezed into the water, and the peel and pulp is chopped to fine bits and added to the water, then dissolve the sirup in the water and fruit mixture and stir the liquid into the bran thoroughly in order to dampen it evenly.

It is suggested that the poison bait be applied in the evening, since cutworms are night feeders, and the bait will thus be fresher than if it is applied earlier in the day.

Raising Orphan Lamb

If the orphan lamb cannot be given to another ewe, it can generally be raised satisfactorily on a bottle. Of course it is better to get another ewe to adopt the lamb if possible. When necessary to raise a lamb on a bottle, it will need to be fed several times a day at first. The number of feedings can be reduced until, by the time the lamb is six weeks old, three or four times a day will be sufficient. A lamb creep should be provided where some ground grain can be kept for the lambs. They will soon learn to eat grain and this will help a great deal in getting faster growth.

Best Time to Purchase Different Dairy Feeds

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A survey of the various feed markets indicates that wheat bran usually reaches bottom price in June, July and August; linseed oil meal in May, June and July; cottonseed meal in August, September, January and February, and gluten feed in May, June and July. By making out their feed budgets accordingly and buying what feed they need at the proper time, the dairyman not only can make an important saving in feed costs but also will probably feed a better ration, it is pointed out by O. S. Rhode, dairy extension specialist of the college of agriculture, University of Illinois.

Dairymen should, and a great many of them do, produce most of the feed that is necessary for their cows, but in most cases it is advisable to balance the home-grown grains with high protein feeds. It therefore is to the advantage of the dairyman to study the feed markets and determine when these feeds can be bought at the best price, Mr. Rhode says.

WATCH TOMATO VINES; GREEN WORMS ABUNDANT

The large green tomato worms which often strip the plants of foliage are unusually abundant in Indiana and has been especially noticeable in the southern half of the state. Every grower should carefully examine his plantings because early detection of the worms before they have conspicuously defoliated the vines will enable one to apply an effective control according to Prof. J. J. Davis, head of the Entomology Department of the Purdue University Agricultural Experiment Station.

The green worms are so nearly the color of the foliage that they are hard to detect until they become large or have eaten considerable foliage, so that a careful inspection may be necessary. An effective control is spraying with arsenate of lead at the rate of one and one-half pounds to 50 gallons of water. If the plants are too large to use a power sprayer and the planting too extensive to use a hand outfit, one must resort to the dust applications with good results. For this purpose mix one pound of arsenate of lead or calcium arsenate with five pounds of hydrated lime.

Business and Popularity.

One of the essential features of any house, store or structure is that it will stand the wear of years.

The same is true of the reputation of any business firm, and that is why THE SPENCERVILLE LUMBER COMPANY at SPENCERVILLE, under the management of Mr. Knaak, enjoys an ever increasing volume of business and popularity.

At the outset this firm realized that a satisfied customer is the best influence for more business and they were determined to build for their establishment a reputation that would be the envy of the Lumber and Building Material trade. That they have succeeded is evidenced by the large amount of patronage they now receive, and the amount of territory that their activities cover.

THE SPENCERVILLE LUMBER COMPANY'S volume of business enables them to go into the world's largest markets to purchase supplies of the best quality and in large quantities. Quality at Low Cost

In Chevrolet you will find quality features such as you would look for only on the highest priced cars.

In the 12 great Chevrolet factories are machinery and equipment for fine motor car production, unsurpassed in the automobile industry.

With such design and with such manufacturing facilities Chevrolet has produced a quality car to sell at low cost. The CHEVROLET, which is sold in this section by RALPH E. FURNISH, AT SPENCERVILLE, has met with such tremendous success that it has become the world's largest builder of automobiles with modern three-speed transmission.

First and foremost of the quality features that contribute to Chevrolet's leadership is the famous Chevrolet valve-in-head motor. In the improved Chevrolet of today, this motor—of the type which has won every Indianapolis race since the introduction of that world-famed speed classic—delivers new elements of smoothness, quietness, acceleration and power. Its improvements include a flexible 5-point motor suspension; lighter pistons and pins; a re-designed motor head; new endless v-shaped silent belt drive for the generator; new oil pump located in the crankcase, submerged in oil, assuring positive lubrication under all conditions.

The frame of the improved Chevrolet is of heavy pressed steel, channel section, and has four rigid cross members to prevent wearing. The wide cross member at the rear completely covers and protects the gasoline tank. In the rugged oversize rear axle the gears and pinions are designed, heat treated and finished with a precision that allows them to withstand the longest wear and the most grueling service. A banjo-type rear axle housing such as is found on the finest built cars provides additional strength and unusual accessibility.

Feature after feature emphasizes the truly high quality construction of this car—the dry disc clutch, which is completely enclosed and requires no lubrication, the latest approved type steering mechanism, the large equalized brakes, New Departure bearings throughout and the Remy system of starting, lighting and ignition—recognized the world over as being unsurpassed for excellence.

The steering mechanism is of the semi-reversible worm-and-gear type found on the highest priced cars, so designed as to permit balloon tires to be used with ease and safety.

Chrome vanadium, semi-elliptic springs of new design and extending 88% of the total wheelbase length, insure great comfort for passengers and long wear for the chassis parts. Seat cushions are deep and wide and provide an exceptional degree of comfort.

It is only natural that on such a high grade chassis you would find Fisher-built closed bodies. Handsome bodies of modern design finished in beautiful colors of Duco—bodies built of steel and wood with all joints mortised, glued, screwed and re-inforced by angle irons—a type of construction found on all of the highest priced cars.

In these enclosed models the famous Fisher VV one-piece wind shield with automatic windshield wiper, and Ternstedt rotary type window regulators, are standard equipment. MR. FURNISH invites you to take a ride in the improved Chevrolet. Subject the car to the most rigorous tests you can devise. Drive it over country roads, through sand and mud, up hills that balk bigger, bulkier, cars. Whether you spend one hour or five at the wheel you will step from the car with a new respect for Chevrolet's ability and a new appreciation of the quality features that make Chevrolet the world's finest low-priced car. Because the CHEVROLET has always led the field in modern improvements, Mr. Furnish feels that he can put behind this car, reputation. He knows that he is giving the public the best there is on the market at the price. We know Mr. Furnish and we know the Chevrolet, and we can truly say to our readers that it is a sterling car handled by a sterling man.

When fed to dairy cows with silage and in connection with a high protein concentrate, sudan hay is a valuable feed.

Do not throw away the skimmed milk. Feed it to the calves, pigs and chickens. There is where part of the profit must come from.

Two decades ago the question was how to make two blades grow where one grew before; today the problem is what to do with the extra blade.

Do not feed brood sows for 24 hours after they farrow. They should have plenty of fresh, clean water all the time, but should not be back on full feed for at least eight or ten days.

FARM FACTS

Change the water occasionally in the tractor radiator.

An average of the figures indicates that farmers are using appreciably higher protein feeds than they were five years ago.

• • •

Gather the eggs at least every day and better twice a day during the hot weather. Keep them in a dry, cool, well-ventilated place.

• • •

Culling costs about seven cents for each nonproducing hen removed from laying flocks during the past year. Can you afford to do without it?

• • •

Any time is a good time to kill burdocks. Cut them below the crown with a sharp spade. This will prevent future sprouts coming from the same root.

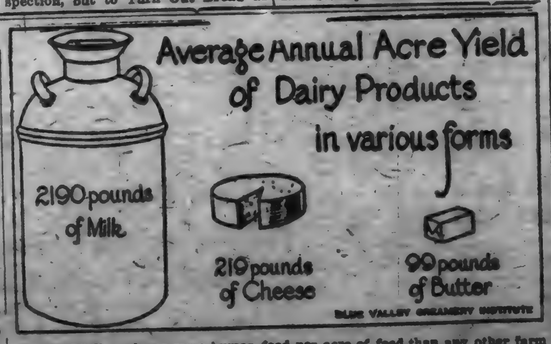
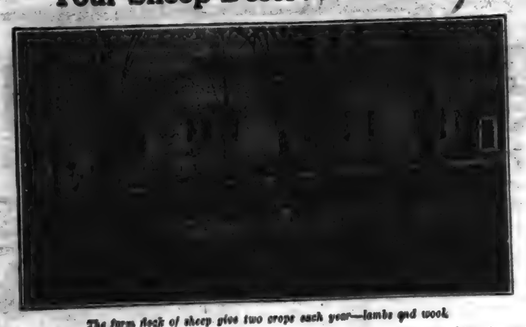
On short pastures the dairy cow does not get enough feed for both maintenance and milk production. Grain must be fed in addition to keep up the milk flow.



THE COW produces more human food per acre of feed than any other farm animal in the world, according to the Blue Valley Creamery Institute. This is largely responsible for the steady increase in the number of dairy cows in the United States, as compared with other classes of live stock. If the products of the American cow were consumed as fluid milk, an acre of ground would produce 2,190 pounds, which has the energy and heat-producing value of 711,800 calories and contains 72.8 pounds of digestible protein. If the products of the cow were consumed in the form of cheese, the acre yield would be only 219 pounds, having an acreage energy value of 247,000 calories and giving 56.7 pounds of digestible proteins. If consumed as butter, the acre yield would be 99 pounds, with an energy value of 355,000 calories and giving one pound of digestible protein. The skim milk is left for feeding to hogs and poultry, of course. Next to the dairy in acre-returns is the hog. Far below the hog in economy production are poultry, beef cattle and sheep.

Your Sheep Deserve Attention



The farm flock of sheep give two crops each year—lambs and wool.

As time goes on, progressive farmers are placing a higher valuation on the variety of sheep they raise and the care they are given. It is generally realized that a sheep raiser secures two crops per year—the lambs and the wool. All indications point to a well sustained price for lamb and mutton due to the fact that consumption has at last overtaken production and prices being paid for wool, mutton and lambs are, even now, most inviting.

Compared with other live stock, sheep raising provides a profitable source of cash income. Early lambs can be made ready for market by June and when the wool is harvested and sold in June and July, this revenue is received at a season when most needed by the average farmer. There are many instances where farm flocks of sheep have kept farmers out of debt. In one instance, 50 ewes produced 65 lambs which when marketed averaged 66 pounds at 15c per pound or a total of $643.37. The wool clipped from the 50 ewes averaged a trifle over seven pounds per head and brought well over a $100.00 or a total of almost $300.00 from the flock of only 50 ewes.

Such a harvest, however, is not possible without a return by the owner. He must lay the foundation by securing a desirable ram and must have good basic value in the breed of sheep he is raising.

While there are more than 40,000,000 sheep in the United States, only 463,504 of these are pure bred. Annually the number of pure bred sheep increase in proportion to the total number of sheep, which is a favorable indication for a continuance of quality for years to come. The sheep owner realizes that only on quality may he build a permanently profitable business in sheep raising.

A close study of breeds most suitable to existing conditions and most advanced methods of feeding and care, always carries with it a large dividend in results obtained. Your sheep deserve good attention.

HINTS ON CARE OF EGGS.

PROVIDE plenty of clean nests for laying hens.

Gather eggs twice a day.

Keep the eggs is a cool, fairly dry place.

Keep out the cracked, dirty, small and very large eggs for home use.

Never wash eggs unless they are to be used immediately by local trade.

Market the eggs frequently at least once a week and preferably twice.

Know the preferences of your market and strive to meet them.

Grade your eggs for uniformity in size, shape and color.

Know the shipping requirements of the express or railroad companies when you use their services.

Use only sound, strong standard packages and pack the eggs properly.

Remember quality is essential for best prices.

If you sell to local dealers insist upon their buying eggs on a "loss off" or quality basis.

Dispose of all old birds that have stopped laying.

Under good husbandry there would be no "marginal" land; if it can't grow field crops or furnish pasture, let it grow tree crops.

Good Equipment Makes a Good Farmer Better.

The success of the Farm Implement Establishment of THE DEKALB FARM IMPLEMENT COMPANY at AUBURN may be explained by the efficient and satisfying service it is rendering to the farmers of this community.

Believing in the great agricultural possibilities of this flourishing community, the organizers of this company determined to establish a business that would meet every demand of the farmers in the way of Farm Machinery and Farm Implements. As a result no firm in this part of the state is better equipped to meet the needs of the farmer, whatever they may be. The standard lines they carry, the honesty of their dealings, and efficient business methods have built up for them a reputation not limited to this particular vicinity or county. The DEKALB FARM IMPLEMENT CO. is better known to the farmers of this and adjoining counties than any dealer in any town in this section of the state.

The Dekalb Farm Implement Company carries everything for the farmer in Harvesting Machinery, Tillage Implements, Plows, Binder Twine, Cream Separators, Farm Wagons, Feed Grinders, Genuine John Deere Repairs, Hay and Corn Machines, New Idea Manure Spreaders, Wire Fencing and Slagle Radios.

The Slagle Radio is a 5-tube set, containing the special Slagle circuit. This Radio also is the only one having a tube modulator.

These are all specialties with them and represent the most modern and scientific developments in the line of Farm Machinery and Farm Implements.

Not only the fine quality of the many lines they carry, but the unfailing courtesy and consideration shown to the farmers here, makes this firm popular with them. The "Farmer Be Pleased" has always been the slogan of this establishment.

The Dekalb Farm Implement Company do more than merely sell the farmer a piece of machinery or implement. They have a service department that watches the particular implement and machinery until it has proved that it will give satisfactory service. They are assisting the farmer to take his rightful place in the community, and are doing their part toward having every acre of tillable land in this section produce its maximum, which insures prosperity to the farmer.

The Dekalb Farm Implement Company at Auburn is headquarters for the farmer who comes to the city for a day or a part of a day. They are always glad to have the farmers call and every effort is put forth to make them feel welcome here. They always have on display the latest models of the most scientifically improved farm machinery and farm implements.

Don't Forget the Dates---September 21-22-23-24

The greatest event of the year to the residents and farmers of Defiance County and surrounding country should be the DEFIANCE COUNTY FAIR that will be held at HICKSVILLE, September 21-22-23-24.

Also on the night of the 22nd and 23rd they will hold a night fair. The feature attraction will be an elaborate display of Fireworks.

Not only from a pleasure but from an educational standpoint, should the Defiance County Fair be attended by every one and their entire family. More so this year than any other the country needs every acre planted so as to produce more than ever before, and there is no institution that gives the farmer more real practical experience and universal information than the machinery and farm appliances that are exhibited and the high grade products that are shown and produced on Ohio soil.

The Superintendents of the different departments are going to do their part this year in making the fair the best from an educational standpoint and should receive the full support of every resident of Defiance and surrounding counties.

It's your fair and for your benefit. Look over the corn-crib, take an invoice of your stock. You may have some extra fine vegetables or your wife may be an exceptionally good butter maker, or does she have some excellent canned fruit? See if you cannot find a display that will beat the other fellow's. You should hold your head up, push out your chest and let everybody see by both your actions and your boasting that "this is my fair and I am proud of it."

A half mile track, which is one of the best in the state, with a good grandstand and bleachers, offers to the lovers of racing the best there is for speed and comfort. Good honest race events are carried out, the association receiving a statewide reputation for being one place where all receive a "Square Deal."

Every Exhibiting Department indicates that it will be filled to the limit, which will insure the largest and most interesting fair to be held this year in Western Ohio.

MR. BIRDSALL, the Secretary, believes in looking out for the comfort and pleasure of the fair's patrons. One of the real little comforts is the large number of seats which are distributed throughout the grounds for the tired visitors who can rest and visit friends, look at the crowd, listen to the band music, or watch the races. Another convenience that is generally appreciated by those who drive to the fair is the ample room for parking automobiles upon the grounds, which is very easy to get to and there is plenty of room for all.

We feel that due credit should be given Mr. Birdsall and his associates whose untiring efforts have been the means of placing in the front ranks of fairs the Defiance County Fair.

Is a Man's Word as Good as His Bond?

Any person with a few dollars in his pocket can purchase a "USED CAR." In the days of time past when horse trading was considered an art, every fellow trying to get the best of the trade, or in other words the one that was the most scientific in "doping the beast" and making it appear "what it was not" was the party that got the best of the transaction.

Today a person in buying a USED CAR has the same amount or more so of "doping" to contend with as in the old days of "horse swapping."

There are many unreliable dealers selling "Used Cars" that try to put it across on the purchaser. Unless a person is a mechanic it is indeed difficult to detect the weak spots in the mechanism of a Used Car.

The purchaser in almost every instance is compelled to rely upon the word of the dealer. It is, therefore, good business judgment to buy a Used Car from a firm who has a reputation at stake and who will not misrepresent just to make a sale.

We know of no more reliable firm than the DEKALB SALES AND SERVICE AT AUBURN and its management. In fact, we are so confident that there will be no misrepresentations made to sell a car we are willing to risk our standing among our readers and say we recommend THE DEKALB SALES AND SERVICE and its management in the highest terms to our readers. In fact, on all of their better used cars they make a thirty day guarantee and there are very few dealers willing to do this on used cars.

What has been said of their dealings in "Used Cars" can be repeated in regard to their repair department. Here only expert mechanics are employed and only genuine parts are installed, their charges are right and the work most skillfully done and the job delivered when promised.

Since the new improved Ford cars have been put on the market THE DEKALB SALES AND SERVICE have delivered many of these all over the county. This is the reason for the large number of first class used cars they have for sale at all times.

This has been accomplished by progressiveness and no misrepresentation and there is not a purchaser of a car from this concern but will say, "Their Word is As Good as Their Bond," and so say we.

Putting Farm Work Horses in Condition

© Underwood & Underwood.
Harvesting small grain in the great Northwest.

Progress in farm field work in the coming months depends largely on the condition of the work horses. Soft from the winter's rest, farm work horses require conditioning just as an athlete requires training for his test.

Every farmer knows that two or three weeks spent in a gradual toughening and conditioning of a horse for the heavy work is more than made up before the season of heavy field work is over. Not only does this conditioning include breaking them in to the long hours of hard pull that they must undergo, but applies as well to breaking them in to a working ration.

It is poor practice to allow a horse to pasture on much new lushy grass if he is to go on a strenuous work schedule. A little grass is good for him, helps to condition him, but he must have oats, bran or old corn, or still better, a combination of the three and good sound hay. These are the best possible rations in the spring and early summer. The horse that is fed a major ration of grass soon gets soft, sweats profusely, lags and quickly plays out. Oats, bran, corn and hay will give him stamina and leave him in the best condition at the end of the day.

By treating old Dobbin fairly, getting him ready for spring work with daily exercise, keeping him thoroughly groomed, especially while shedding, and a work ration instead of his winter feed will pay big dividends in a short time.

If the horse takes a long time to shed his coat, this can be facilitated by thorough, frequent grooming and if this does not do the work, a clipping all over will get him through the shedding period quickly. After the horse has started to work in the field, it is advisable to bathe the shoulders and neck two or three times daily with cold, soft, salty water or with white oak bark tea which toughens and cleanses the chafed parts.

A prominent veterinarian states that excessive sweating is remedied by clipping the horse. Excessive sweating weakens the animal and it is doubtless quite advisable to clip him to relieve this condition. It is also true that this practice enables the horse to be thoroughly groomed in much less time than when it retains its long winter coat of shaggy hair.

INDIANA POTATO GROWERS ARE GETTING REAL YIELDS

By E. R. LANCASHIRE
Horticultural Staff Purdue University

Indiana potato growers are increasing their yield per acre by adopting methods tested out at Purdue University. Men who follow all the practices recommended are obtaining 400 bushels and in some cases even higher yields per acre. Increases of fifty to 100 bushels are found in every county in the state.

Anyone can put into operation the few practices necessary to get increased yields. The backbone of the program for increased yields is Certified Potato Seed Stock. The use of this selected seed leads other requirements for the successful production of potatoes.

Certified seed alone has produced gains of 50 to 100 bushels per acre. Seven hundred potato growers secured an average yield of 133 bushels per acre in 1925. Their record is fifty-two bushels more per acre than was secured by the other growers of the state.

The use of Certified Seed is a fine beginning. When this practice is supplemented by seed treatment, green sprouting, proper cutting of seed pieces, selection of a good fertile soil, and the application of 500 pounds or more of 2-12-6 per acre, a yield of 200 to 400 bushels of potatoes is a possible result.

This paper stands ready to vouch for the reliability of any advertisers whose messages appear herein.

Often Buttered--But Never Bettered.

The staff of life is bread and we should be very particular about the kind of bread we eat. That it is made in a Sanitary Bakery by Bakers who are particular as to Perosnal Cleanliness and who use only Wholesome and Pure Ingredients.

That is why BANNER BREAD, made by the SEELY BAKING COMPANY, at Hicksville, is found upon so many tables in this section.

The housewife has discovered that this bread meets all the requirements of a "good bread" and that is why she insists upon her dealer keeping BANNER BREAD.

No other bread meets with such universal satisfaction as this, and that is why the SEELY BAKING COMPANY is kept busy at their bakery at Hicksville.

The baking industry is practically as old as the discovery of fire and the methods used in ancient times have changed from baking on stones and in rudely constructed ovens, as like other great industries, it had a humble beginning. Today it is quite different at the MODERN and UP-TO-DATE Establishment of SEELY BAKING COMPANY, where the latest style of ovens and machinery are in operation for the production of BANNER BREAD.

Another feature of this establishment is the Cleanliness which is insisted upon throughout the entire plant. Everything is Kept Scrupulously Clean and in a Strictly Sanitary Condition. Only the Very Best of material is used, which is made of the best quality of ingredients that money can buy, and the most competent help employed.

The housewives of St. Joe and vicinity can always obtain BANNER BREAD at the leading grocers.

We assure you that you will always find in "Banner Bread" a uniform standard of quality that has won for it a place among the housewives of this section who know good bread and therefore will only have "Banner Bread," the Bread that is "Often Buttered but Never Bettered."

They Invite our Patronage.

There is no firm in this section more widely known as extensive dealers in EGGS and PRODUCE than the HICKSVILLE PRODUCE CO., at Hicksville, Ohio.

Through their forward and above board policies they have established an enviable reputation in these parts and the farmers and the people generally have come to look upon them as one of the prominent concerns of this section that always pays the highest prices.

Through their extensive dealing in EGGS and POULTRY they have afforded the farmers of this community a most advantageous market right at their very door, where they are able to secure the best prices for their products, and in addition are saved trouble and expense of shipping.

They bring thousands of dollars into this section each year that would otherwise go to some other center were their policy and service not so entirely satisfactory in every particular.

As regards EGGS and POULTRY let it be said right here that this concern is considered among the leading establishments in these parts on this subject. Just as they have come to this firm for information and advice in regard to Eggs and Poultry, so have the farmers of this section learned that they can secure here "The Highest Market Prices."

Here also the farmers can obtain by phone the latest market quotations and the HICKSVILLE PRODUCE CO. invites every farmer in this section to avail themselves of this service.

There is no one concern in this section that is more worthy of the patronage of the farmers than the HICKSVILLE PRODUCE CO., at Hicksville, Ohio.

There are few sections that have located in their midst such a large firm or one of more benefit to the community than this concern.

In this Dekalb County Farm Edition we wish to compliment this firm and Mr. Swisher, the manager on the way this establishment is conducted.

For Dad and Lad.

There is nothing so important to the farmers and residents of the smaller city as an up-to-date establishment in close range where "Dad and Lad" are able to secure the metropolitan styles and service in Clothing and Haberdashery.

This is the day and age when men, both old and young, must be neatly attired in clothes of distinction and quality. In Hicksville and vicinity the desires and demands of the male population are more than satisfied at the store of MAXWELL BROTHERS. This establishment is strictly modern and up-to-date, stocked with a class of goods that would do credit to a much larger city than Hicksville.

They feature HART SCHAFFNER & MARX, MICHAEL STERN and CURLEE CLOTHES FOR MEN AND YOUNG MEN. These clothes are widely known for their snap and style, as well as the high quality and wide range of patterns for both conservative and ultra fashionable customers.

You will find that their other departments are on a par with their clothing, for MAXWELL BROS. are representative for widely known and highly popular lines of Men's Wear, which are known as the most superior grade of Men's Furnishings.

Their entire store is stocked with Collars and Underwear of highly popular brands; Shirts of the most fancy stripes; Ties that are approved by the arbiters of fashion for the present and approaching season; Hosiery of the latest styles and patterns; Hats and Caps of the latest styles and shapes; in fact, every need of the well-dressed man will be found here at most reasonable prices.

Maxwell Bros. up-to-date Boy's Department is their pride, and well they may be proud of this department, as it is one of the most modern and up-to-date Boys' Departments in Western Ohio, where everything can be found for the youngster.

MAXWELL BROS. are among the leading business men of Hicksville, and we are pleased to compliment them upon the very excellent establishment which is adding to the prosperity and progress of this section.

Cars to Be Proud Of.

One almost unique feature about the "WILLYS-KNIGHT" that is sold in this section by the LINCOLN SALES AND SERVICE COMPANY at BUTLER, is that it has always been a leader in the Automobile field. No feature has appeared on the automobile but the "WILLYS-KNIGHT" was not among the first, if not the first, to adopt it. There are a number of these; that "Silent Engine," which improves with use, the engine that never needs cleaning or valve grinding; the body design which immediately captures the eye; the feature which overcomes one of the greatest problems of automobile construction, that of eliminating vibration. This you will find in the WILLYS-KNIGHT—there is absolutely no vibration at any engine speed. Gone is that tiresomeness in driving a car after about the first fifty miles; gone, too, the weariness of riding in a machine for any distance. It is because the Willys-Overland Corporation have always been foremost in making improvements on their cars, because they have been abreast and ahead of everyone in ideas of automobile construction, that the LINCOLN SALES AND SERVICE COMPANY consented to take the agency for the WILLYS-KNIGHT and OVERLAND cars.

They were convinced that here was a line of automobiles that could be offered to the people of this community without any apologies whatever and they have not been disappointed.

They have lately come out with the very latest thing in automobiles, which is known as the "WHIPPET." The Overland WHIPPET represents a combination of the most advanced European and American thought. It is "a "Complete New Car" designed and built as a UNIT, not an "old fashioned "reconstructed" chassis.

The distinctive body lines of the Overland WHIPPET frankly resemble the smartest automobiles of America and Continental Europe. Stand in front of this car and you can imagine yourself on the boulevards of France.

The Radiator is typically foreign and is the result of painstaking craftsmanship and study.

Here at last is an automobile that will run 30 miles on a gallon of gas—well over 1,060 miles on a gallon of oil—with extraordinary mileage on tires—and the smallest tax rating of any car in America—55 miles an hour; 5 to 30 miles in 12 seconds—4-wheel brakes—stops in 51 feet from 40 miles an hour—turns in 34 foot circle—easiest car in America to park—5 feet 8 inches high—lower gravity center — greater safety — European Type body—more inside room than any other light car. Offered in three style bodies—Sedan, Touring and Coupe.

These cars are priced to sell. The Touring for $845; the Coupe and Sedan $785. All these prices are F. O.B. Toledo.

You must see this marvel in order to fully appreciate its many extraordinary features. MR. SILBERG invites you to come in and have him explain the details more fully. He is a very courteous gentleman and always willing to demonstrate this new "wonder car."

We are pleased to give MR. SILBERG commendable mention in this Dekalb County Farm Edition for his good judgment in taking the agency for the WILLYS-KNIGHT and the OVERLAND cars.

INSURING HAY CROP FOR NEXT YEAR

By M. O. PENCE,
Soils and Crops Department, Purdue University.

As a result of the extended drouth the past several weeks, covering much of the state, the spring seedlings of clover and clover mixtures in small grain have been seriously damaged, if not entirely killed. These clover failures and poor stands of the crop, particularly of soils needing lime, will result next year in a decreased acreage and a lowered production of hay, and will seriously interfere with the economical feeding of livestock in the state.

In order to meet the anticipated hay shortage of next year, the Soils and Crops Department of Purdue University suggests that farmers of the state reseed clover, where it has failed in the spring seeding, as soon as possible after threshing is completed, whenever there is sufficient moisture to provide a satisfactory seed bed. The success of this method of seeding will depend largely upon the moisture supply in the late summer and fall. As most sections of the state have had a deficit of rain since the first of the year, it is probable that the rainfall following clover seeding will be above normal and favorable to its growth.

On soil that is not acid alfalfa may be seeded not later than September 1, for central Indiana, at the rate of 10-12 pounds Grimm or Ontario Variegated seed per acre.

For pasture, next year sweet clover may be seeded at the same rate as alfalfa on sweet soil.

THE VALUE OF CATALPAS.

The high price of posts makes the catalpa groves more valuable than ever anticipated. And it is surprising how rapidly the small catalpa trees grow into post size.

AN ETERNAL TRIANGLE.

One eternal triangle is commendable. It has for its vertices the farmer, the banker, and the farm bureau in the dairy community.

A Bulwark of Protection.

The strength of any community rests to a very great extent on the strength of its banks, fiduciary institutions, great monetary reservoirs from which come the currents which set in motion the wheels of productive energy and stimulate the sinews of trade and commerce. In Auburn and vicinity all classes of people are well cared for by THE CITY NATIONAL BANK, one of the soundest and safest financial institutions in the state, and one that has stood as a mighty "bulwark of protection" to the interests of the community for years.

This institution's building from a banking standpoint is complete in every particular and the officials of the bank have used every effort to make it practical and convenient, as well as artistic. The bank has had a wonderful growth during recent years.

A general business is done along safe and improved lines, accounts are opened for corporations and individuals, drafts and letters of credit in any part of the world are sold at lowest rates, commercial paper discounted and collections made for home and out of town clients. A large Savings Department is a feature; here also are Deposit Boxes for rent in the most modern equipped vaults. Through this bank's membership in the Federal Reserve Banking System it is placed in the strongest position to take care of the requirements of all of its depositors, whether large or small, whether they keep checking or savings accounts and at the same time give them the most modern banking service.

They specialize in the highest type of Road and Municipal Bonds, as a Safe Investment, which are tax exempt and yield 4½ per cent and up. First Mortgage Bonds to yield 6½ per cent.

The modern business man before coming to a decision of an important proposition should consult his banker.

The proper handling of your affairs after you are gone is a very important proposition.

The judgement which was at your disposal during your life time is available to your heirs when this bank is named as Executor under your will. Their Trust Department invites your inquiries regarding any matter of Trust.

In this DeKalb County Farm Edition we wish to call our readers' attention to this strong and reliable financial institution, THE CITY NATIONAL BANK at AUBURN.

Give the Farm Home a Distinctive Name

"Name your farm home" is the slogan of a movement fostered by home demonstration agents in Tennessee for the past four years. More than 3,000 homes have already been named, according to a report received by the United States Department of Agriculture. This year the idea is again being stressed, as there are still many homes which have not registered a distinctive name either with the extension service or the state department of agriculture. The state recently passed a law permitting such registry.

Farm home owners are urged to give some thought and trouble to the selection of the right name. It should be dignified, suitable, lasting, not too common, easy to read and easy to remember. It should appear on the mail box or over it, or on a signboard or on the gate. It is intended that it should be used on letterheads and on the label of anything sold from the farm.

UNITED STATES DRANK A LOT OF MILK LAST YEAR.

Whether you are a "wet" or a "dry" and whether you as an individual got your extra one and one-fifth pints of milk last year, or allowed somebody else to get your share, the fact remains that the United States population used 54,326,000,000 pounds of milk in fluid form last year, according to the United States Department of Agriculture. This was an increase of 1,544,000,000 pounds, giving 1.2 pints a day of fluid milk and cream for each of us. The big increases came in the large cities, educational campaigns involving better health for school children and grownups and the higher quality milk coming to the city market as a result of the "T.B." eradication campaign, all help to put more milk on the average American's table. Better cows are being housed in better barns with ventilation systems, individual drinking cups, sanitary steel stalls and feed and litter carriers as a result of the health campaigns that are beginning to give this country the best milk supply of any nation.

Soft-shelled eggs may be caused by condiments Spices often lead to trouble.

Wash Comfort Into Your Clothes.

Cleaning and washing clothes is not only taking the dirt out but also consists of turning out a clean, smooth garment, which one would be proud to wear. New machinery and sanitary methods are necessary to "wash comfort into clothes," and in this the AUBURN STEAM LAUNDRY AT AUBURN, surpasses all others.

While the old-fashioned method of dumping a bunch of laundry into a tub and swishing it around in a few gallons of water doped with some washing powder may suit some laundries and their patrons, this popular AUBURN institution thoroughly cleanses your linen by the latest sanitary methods and returns them to you fresh and free from all germs and dirt.

Cotton and Linen Clothes have been laundried for many centuries. Long before the birth of Christ the women of India and Egypt went down to the banks of the Ganges and Nile to wash out their clothes, rub and beat them on a rock, wash them again and take them home. So you see it had a humble beginning like most great industries.

Today it is quite different at the modern and Up-to-Date Establishment of the AUBURN STEAM LAUNDRY where pure soap is used and Scientific Machinery for the Softening of the Water, which "Washes Comfort Into Your Clothes."

One of the rules of the AUBURN STEAM LAUNDRY is to make right anything that does not please, and this arrangement is a most satisfactory one in this day of hurry and rush.

The patrons of the Auburn Steam Laundry have always found that their "Linen is Returned to Them in the Best of Condition" by this up-to-date Laundry, which is turning out the Most Excellent Work at Most Reasonable Prices.

If you have never sent your laundry to the Auburn Steam Laundry, do so and you will receive prompt service.

In St. Joe leave your laundry at L. B. Meeks' Barber Shop or notify him that your laundry is ready and their truck will pick it up, as they make two trips each week to St. Joe.

We are pleased to point to the efficiency of the Auburn Steam Laundry, and to compliment them upon the admirable manner in which they are serving the public of this community.

Keep Your Hens Laying

Science has added another convenience for the farmers of Dekalb and other adjoining counties: "The Chick Hatchery," operated by MESSRS. BRIEGEL AND SCHIMPS, at Butler.

The farmer in raising chicks for market or home, runs no risk in the hatching. He can sell his eggs direct to the hatchery and buy the baby chicks. He sees what he buys and thereby can select "Strong Healthy Chicks." Then again he does not have to set one hen after another, at different times, but can "Get His Chicks from the Butler Chick Hatchery any day and just when they are wanted."

Another feature is the saving of time and trouble of setting hens and continually fighting lice, mites and other infections common to hen hatched chicks, where on the other hand Chicks Hatched at the BUTLER CHICK HATCHERY are Healthy and Free From All Vermin.

In this age of Science and Machinery every one should take advantage of every possible convenience and labor saving device that proves itself successful. This Hatchery saves labor and many steps for the farmer's wife, who in most cases is the one that has in charge the hatching and raising of the chicks. All the worry of eggs being broken during the period of setting and then only the hatching of a few is done away with by machinery.

As to the financial feature of having your chicks hatched by this firm. During the time required for hatching and brooding a hen will lay eggs to the value of $3.75. This Hatchery will hatch the eggs for you, saving the Care and Worry of Uncertainty of Hen Hatching.

Our older readers can remember the Cradle, then the Binder. The Scythe and then the Mower and many other improved farm implements from time to time, that helped to reduce the labor and expense of farming. Now, today, THE BUTLER CHICK HATCHERY AT BUTLER is here to "Do the Hatching and Keep the Hens Laying." Call them at BUTLER and have a talk with the management, who will gladly explain all details to you.

We are pleased to be able to bring before our readers this most up-to-date concern who are aiding in bringing Dekalb County to the fore as one of Indiana's largest poultry producing sections.

They Deserve Your Support—Mr. Farmer

It is with a feeling of pride that we can point in this DeKalb County Farm Edition to the HARKEY CANNING COMPANY at Hicksville. In the years they have been in the canning business they have gained a position as one of the foremost of its size in the country.

The HARKEY CANNING COMPANY always pays the Highest Prices for Tomatoes and Corn and Pays in Cash, and any farmer who wants a ready market for these products, where he has no expense in shipping and where he can get the Cash as soon as the crop is grown, should contract with THE HARKEY CANNING COMPANY each year for the acreage of these products.

In addition to being a crop that gives the producer handsome results for his labor, the planting of Tomatoes as a rotation crop is a great aid to the farmer in building up and increasing the fertility of the soil, as Tomatoes supply a large amount of nitrogen to the soil and by turning the tops under as soon as the crop is removed a large amount of humis is secured. It is always a crop that can be cultivated along with the corn crop, and it is harvested at a time when the farmer has no other crop coming off.

Furthermore, the raising of tomatoes aids in the destruction of the chinch bug, which has been wreaking damage to the wheat crop. This is a fact which has been proven by many Universities through scientific tests. We advise the farmers to give more attention to the raising of this important crop and feel that the Harkey Canning Company will increase their capacity in proportion to the increase in production.

The people of this section owe a debt of gratitude to this concern which can best be paid by keeping them supplied with Tomatoes and Corn sufficient to enable them to operate at their full capacity.

We offer this suggestion to our readers: Would it not be good business judgment to contract for next year with the HARKEY CANNING COMPANY for Tomatoes and Corn, with the determination to plant as large an acreage as possible.

This concern is making an effort each year to increase their Tomato acreage and will willingly assist the grower in every way possible to increase their crop. They have at their plant a number of two horse tomato planters which make the work of the farmer much easier.

Another feature of the HARKEY CANNING COMPANY is the preparing of their products for market. Buying only the best that is produced and preparing it in the most painstaking and sanitary manner for the trade, has won a reputation among the buying public for Harkey's Brand of Tomatoes and Corn as the "Best There Is."

The Flour Depends on the Mill.

A mill struggling to keep pace with an age of progress with old, out of date, worn out machinery, with meager facilities for making flour, with no thought of cleanliness or sanitation; a mill run by millers whose chief object is to get the wheat ground and the day's work done, cannot or could not be expected to produce a good flour.

The mill in the front recognized as an institution having the most modern mill machinery that money can buy, with every means of making their product clean and sanitary, with a reputation of being a sanitary mill run by millers who have made and are still making a study of their business in a continual effort to make their products better.

This is the class of mill that is operated by the AUBURN ROLLER MILLS, AT AUBURN, and from which is produced WHITE STAR FLOUR, the flour that is becoming a household word the country over.

THE AUBURN ROLLER MILLS at Auburn has one of the most modernly equipped, clean, sanitary mills in the country. They are very particular not to allow an inferior product to leave their mill; that is the reason for the high quality of White Star Flour.

Their greatest desire is to have their mill stand in the front ranks of mills throughout the nation, and it is their earnest desire that every barrel and sack of their White Star Flour that leaves their mill will go into the home as the best flour that modern machinery and careful milling can manufacture.

The flour depends upon the mill and for this reason the management of THE AUBURN ROLLER MILLS insists that their mill not only be the most modern, but clean and Sanitary Mill in Indiana, but also that White Star be the Best, Cleanest, Most Sanitary and finely milled flour.

WHITE STAR FLOUR is a real triumph of better milling. Ask your grocer or the opinion of a friend who has personally used WHITE STAR FLOUR. Their opinion is what counts. Then also remember that behind every sack of WHITE STAR FLOUR is a guarantee of satisfaction or your money back.

Ask your grocer for WHITE STAR FLOUR. If he does not have it, insist upon his getting it for you.

They Assist the Farmer.

Few businesses combine the function of conservation and production for the good of the community as much as the DEKALB TANKAGE COMPANY, AT AUBURN, Phone 180, as they conserve waste material and at the same time give to the farmers Tankage for Hogs at Most Reasonable Prices.

The DEKALB TANKAGE COMPANY believed that this community offered a fine opportunity for a concern which would take care of the waste material in the form of Dead Stock, and at the same time furnish the Farmers here as well as elsewhere with TANKAGE for HOG FEED. The growth of this industry has proven that its promoters were absolutely right in their judgment.

Farmers in this community have been particularly pleased to have this enterprise located in their midst. It solves the problem of the disposition of the Dead Animal in a Sanitary and Satisfactory Manner. At the same time it assures them a Good Quality of Tankage for Hog Feed that is manufactured here in their own community where they may inspect the process whereby it is made.

Stringent State Laws now discourage the burying of dead stock and this makes it particularly imperative to have some other means of disposition which is satisfactory. There are only two: cremation and rendering into Fertilizer and Tankage. Of these two the latter is much preferred. Not only is rendering the More Sanitary Way, but it is productive at the same time.

Few people outside the farmers realize the promptness and convenience of service which this plant offers in the disposition of any animal carcass, whether it be hogs, sheep, calves, colts, horses or cattle.

No matter what part of the county you live in, if one of your herd of Live Stock dies, call this firm by long distance at its expense and one of its trucks will call immediately for the carcass. Just tell the operator that you wish the charges reversed.

This concern is in close touch with the Board of Health and every possible step is taken to make the plant Absolutely Sanitary at all times. The plant is as Modern as the Latest Scientific Rendering Machinery can make it.

The management of the DEKALB TANKAGE CO. is a firm who are thoroughly conversant with all the details of the manufacture of Fertilizer and Tankage and the size of the plant and the volume of business has given it an enviable reputation in commercial circles.

Everything To Build Anything

With a vision of "GREATER THINGS" always in mind, the CLINE BROS. LUMBER COMPANY AT BUTLER, operates the Largest Lumber Establishment in this section of the State and has become an important factor in the development of the community.

While it is the CLINE BROS. LUMBER CO.'S object to obtain a fair and honest profit from their extensive dealings in LUMBER, BUILDING MATERIAL and "EVERYTHING TO BUILD ANYTHING", the guiding influence of this company will always be the determination to furnish the Highest Grade of Goods at Prices so Reasonable that the extension and beautification of the community could progress rapidly in leaps and bounds.

There is no establishment in the community that has greater influence for better than the building industry.

Thus farmers have come to know that whatever they desire in their business can be secured from the CLINE BROS. LUMBER CO. with a knowledge that it will be of the Highest Grade consistent with price.

LUMBER, LATH, DOORS, SASH, INTERIOR FINISH, BUILDING PAPER, ROOFING AND CEMENT, and "EVERYTHING TO BUILD ANYTHING" are furnished by this progressive firm.

By purchasing to advantage when the market is right and employing the most experienced help they are able to offer this High Class Grade of Goods at prices so Reasonable as to encourage the beautification and extension of home and enterprise.

The management extends to the farmers of this section a cordial invitation to call at their yards and any information will be gladly given, no matter whether you wish to buy at this time or not.

We are pleased in this Dekalb Co. Farm Edition to give commendable mention to the Cline Bros. Lumber Company, and to assure the public that they will receive the best of service, and any information that is desired will be given in a most courteous and obliging manner by this firm's efficient employees, and we only wish that there were more such firms within our midst, where "Everything to Build Anything" can be had.

Almost Indispensable to This Section.

The opportunity is not given every firm to work out their own successful career and at the same time be of service to the people of their home town and surrounding country. But such is the case with the HICKSVILLE GRAIN CO., under the management of Mr. Grover, who operates a most modern and progressive Elevator at HICKSVILLE.

With acute business judgment they realized that it was important that the people of this community not only have an Elevator, but an institution that would be thoroughly modern and in keeping with the demands of the people of the present day.

To the farmer the HICKSVILLE GRAIN COMPANY offers a good market right at their very door for their products and they pay as much, if not more, than would be received in any other community. Their "Good Business Methods" have won the general confidence of the populace, and now, farmers and the people generally come to the large establishment of the HICKSVILLE GRAIN COMPANY at Hicksville with their products as a matter of course.

As extensive dealers in GRAIN, FEED, SEEDS and COAL, and other allied lines, they have added greatly to the satisfaction and progress of the community and have rendered their Elevator almost indispensable to this section.

Thus the Management has always worked in the interest of his home community, while securing for this establishment the well merited commercial success that the large volume of this elevator evidences.

MR. GROVER is well and favorably known throughout this section and is highly esteemed in the business world.

They will continue to minister to the needs of the farmers and people in general and to provide every modern and scientific improvement at this Elevator and thus are deserving of the prominent position which they hold in the commercial and industrial life of the community.

We wish in this Dekalb County Farm Edition to compliment them upon the success of the HICKSVILLE GRAIN COMPANY, and upon the valuable service they are rendering the public of this section of the country.

Farm Shop as Important to Farmer as Railroad

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The farm shop is just as important to the farmers as pivision point and terminal shops are to railroad managements, C. K. Shedd, rural engineer at the Kansas State Agricultural college, is convinced. "It looks as if higher prices for machinery have come to stay, and it will no longer be possible for farmers to follow the wasteful methods of using a machine until it is out of repair, then threwnig it away," says Shedd.

If the machinery is to be kept in service longer it must be maintained, he points out. "A farmer cannot afford to go into the busy season with machinery that is just about ready to break down," he declares. "Suppose that one is using a cultivator with dull shovels and wabbly beams. If the weather conditions are favorable through June and the ground stays reasonably mellow he can do good work with such a cultivator. On the other hand, if the weather is rainy for a week just when cultivating should be done, the ground is beaten down hard and has a healthy growth of weeds when it dries. Now with such a cultivator it is impossible to do good work.

"I have known a farmer to lose 25 bushels of corn per acre because of the work done by such a cultivator. Probably most farmers of several years' experience have observed similar results—in a neighbor's field, of course."

A Pillar of Strength.

The ST. JOE VALLEY BANK at ST. JOE has been gaining prestige at such a rapid rate since its organization that it has taken its place as one of the Gibraltars of Finance in this section of Indiana, as it is conducted with a conservatism that makes it a very reliable institution.

It was organized by the people of ST. JOE and vicinity, and little did these gentlemen realise, although they were optimistic, that the institution would make such rapid strides to the front.

With such men at its head it naturally follows that it would be successful, and it would be conducted on a sound and conservative basis.

The bank occupies a very commodious building and the interior is furnished with the banking furniture of the period, and is arranged both for convenience of the officers and for the benefit of the public.

The Safe of the Bank is fire-proof and in keeping with the style used by some of the leading banks of the country. A general banking business is transacted and money is loaned at reasonable rates on the proper security. All classes of accounts are solicited and proper treatment is assured all.

THE ST. JOE VALLEY BANK is organized under the laws of the State of Indiana and is under the direct supervision of the Department of Banking, its affairs being examined periodically by the department.

The strength of the institution is not found alone in figures as large as they may seem, but in the fact that the business is being conducted along conservative lines of modern finance.

The Directors of the ST. JOE VALLEY BANK represent business people of well known financial ability, and under their guidance the News feels that this institution will continue to prosper and be one of the important factors in the continued development of this section.

The Wool Industry in South Africa

(Letter from E. S. Bartlet, Bloemfontein, O. F. S., Africa)

© Underwood & Underwood
Weaving woolens with primitive looms in Africa. Note the Overseers.

Four of a kind. Kaffir children.

The Union of South Africa is rightly classed among the great wool producing countries of the world. Climatic conditions there are admirably adapted to the breeding and raising of the Merino type of sheep with a strong, staple wool.

A large part of this country is suitable only for the raising of sheep, and the government is making progressive and intelligent efforts to improve both the sheep and the manner of preparing the wool for market.

Jackals being a strong menace in South Africa, long-time government loans are extended to sheep owners for the erection of jackal-proof fencing. Government sheep experts are maintained permanently in alloted districts so that their services and advice may be assured at a nominal fee.

The mutton sheep of South Africa is the fat-tailed, black headed Cape—a non-wooled sheep. As no cross-breeding for mutton lambs is done, the wools are purely Merino in character.

Progress in this South African industry is particularly noticeable in the harvesting. Despite the fact that Kaffir labor can be secured at the equivalent of $8.80 American, per month, there is a trend towards the modern shearing machine as against the age-old hand blades, which, even in America, have not been discarded by many otherwise entirely progressive wool raisers.

A study of this fact, however, readily reveals the reason for it. While there is a first cost for the machine, the unskilled black adapts himself to its use much more readily than to the hand blades, and soon does a remarkably smooth job of shearing with the machine.

Once adapted to the use of the machine, its economic value is demonstrated in the materially greater number of sheep shorn daily, the better market value of the wool, the fewer maimed sheep, and not least important, the additional 5% to 15% more wool obtained with the machine over and above the amount of wool secured with the hand blades. As a consequence, the machine resolves itself into a small investment with certain and big returns.

Steadily, the science of wool-marketing in South Africa is fast approaching the scientific efficiency of the Australian marketing plan, which is, without doubt, the most practical and efficient in existence today.

Considering that the four provinces, Natal, Transvaal, Orange Free State, and Cape Province, which comprise the Union of South Africa, have 20,000 square miles less of territory than Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Montana and Wyoming combined, it is surprising to note that they contain two and one half times as many sheep as our five states named.

This alone, makes that country a strong contender for future leadership in the wool industry. It is interesting to note however, that the great bulk of foreign progressiveness is due to American initiative, American implements, and machinery and American ingenuity. The South African wool industry holds true to this in that American methods and American machinery are destined to take a large and important place in the economic progress of the far distant Union of South Africa.

Cultivation Increases Yields of Soybean Seed

Ample cultivation will prove profitable for soybeans which are grown for seed, either when they are planted solid or when grown in rows, according to data secured on almost three hundred farms in ten counties of central Indiana, by the Farm Management Department of Purdue University. The figures show conclusively that most soybean growers cultivate the crop too little to achieve maximum yields and profits.

Solid planted soybeans which were not cultivated gave an average yield of 12.9 bushels, those cultivated once gave a yield of 13.7 bushels, and those cultivated two or more times gave a yield of 13.8 bushels. The cost per bushel were respectively $1.59, $1.48 and $1.49. The harrow, weeder or rotary hoe was used for cultivation in all cases and each gave excellent results, their relative value depending upon the soil and moisture conditions.

Soybeans planted in rows for seed respond very readily to cultivation. Those which were not cultivated gave a yield of 11.2 bushels per acre at a cost of $1.49 per bushel; those receiving one or two cultivations gave an average yield of 13.6 bushels at a cost of $1.46 per bushel, and those which were cultivated three or more times gave a yield of 16.4 bushels at a cost of $1.38 per bushel. Corn cultivators and beet plows are most commonly used for cultivating soybeans in rows. Most of the farmers ran over the crop the first time with a harrow, weeder or rotary hoe.

SILAGE VERY CONVENIENT FEED FOR DAIRY FARMER

Among the many different advantages of a silo for the average dairy farmer are the following:

1. In a silo all the corn crop is saved for feed. When not stored in a silo 40 to 50 per cent of the crop is lost.

2. Silage has a benefical affect on the digestive system and therefore is worth more than its feed value alone.

3. Silage furnishes a succulent feed during the winter when there is no grass.

4. More feed may be stored in a smaller space and at less cost than any other way.

5 Silage is convenient to feed and is a cheap roughage.

6. The silo can be built during July when farm work is slack.

7. The dairy farmer who waits until August to think about building a silo usually does not have one.

8. Join with your neighbor to buy a silage cutter.

9. If concrete silo is built it should stand at least a month after completion before being filled, to insure proper setting.

A cow that produces 30 pounds or more of milk per day requires a ration rich in lime. Clovers or other legumes will supply this need.

Some Visible Signs of Binder Troubles

Nebraska Experts Give Few Good Pointers.

According to farm machinery experts at the Nebraska Agricultural college, a careful observation of the following "ifs" will secure better operation and less trouble:

1. If the machine travels with a jerky motion, main drive chain is too loose or it may be dry. Try a little oil on it.

2. If the slats rip off the canvas, the elevators are not square.

3. If the knotter hook is rusty and rough, it will not work properly. Polish it with fine emery paper.

4. If the binder attachment is not timed properly, it will not work. Some binders are timed in as many as five places.

5. If the knotter hook does not turn far enough to close the fingers on the twine, no knot will be tied. Look at the knotter pinion. It should not be worn.

6. If the twine slips through the cord holder, the twine will be pulled out before the knot is tied. Adjust the cord holder spring. It should take 40 pounds to pull the twine from the disk.

7. If the disk does not move far enough, the knotter hook grasps only one cord, hence a loose end band.

8. If the needle is bent or out of shape, there will be a loose end band. The needle is of malleable iron and may be hammered back to shape.

9. If the twine is pulled from the hook before the knot is tied, try the knife, it may be dull.

10. If you wish to change the size of bundles, do it with the bundle-sizer spring, not the tension or compress spring.

JUDGE SIRE BY PROGENY

Pure-bred sires should be judged by their progeny rather than by their ancestors.

SHIP THE NON-LAYERS

Hens and pullets should be put into a coop and if they do not lay ship them to a produce dealer.

If You Need Money—They Have It.

But few people have not known the time in their lives when they did not need a "Quick Loan" to meet some emergency. An accident occurred in the family, some one dependent upon them took sick unexpectedly, a trip incurring rather heavy railroad fare was necessary. These times seem to come during the days when an individual is struggling financially. Few situations are more embarrassing and more trying than when one needs money and it is not available, the only recourse is to go to some friend or to stand the humiliation of accepting charity.

It was to meet needs like this arising every day in this and every other community that the AUBURN AMERICAN SECURITY COMPANY at AUBURN, was organized. The men who are responsible for this "Confidential LOAN Organization" know that reliable people "Need Money at Times." These men felt that such people could be saved much embarrassment and inconvenience many times by the establishment of such a Loan Service located at Auburn, and serving the community in general. THE AUBURN AMERICAN SECURITY COMPANY is composed of men of the Highest Financial Ability.

They make loans up to $300. If you need money hurriedly you can write or telephone the AUBURN AMERICAN SECURITY COMPANY at Auburn, and a loan can be made through security on Household Goods, Pianos, Live Stock, Etc., and it will be a Confidential, Dignified Transaction. All consultations are confidential. You need not humiliate yourself by going to a friend and admitting that you are in need.

A Loan Service of this character is a great asset to any community. Its success, of course, is due to the high character and the financial ability of the men who direct its course of affairs. They are individuals known and trusted by all in the community. The Rate of Interest is Not High; the officers are not interested in anything but a fair margin of profit.

Every effort is put forth by Mr. BROWN, the Manager, to extend courtesy to every man and woman who comes to the AUBURN AMERICAN SECURITY COMPANY for a Loan, and their dignity is respected at all times, no attempt is made to humiliate or embarrass them in any way. A Complete Banking System

Built on the solid rock of a sound financial policy, THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK at BUTLER has stood as a "financial pillar" of this community. The policy of this bank has been shaped and directed by men in whom the people have always placed confidence.

From the organization of this bank it has always been spoken of as a "Bank of the People." This reputation is well merited. This bank has been strong and has never catered merely to capitalist or manufacturing interests. These accounts have been handled, to be sure, but it has at the same time been a Banking Institution for the Farmer, Workingman and the Small Merchant Who is Just Beginning.

The management of this banking Institution is in a large measure responsible for the fact that this Bank has been ready and willing to help any business, large or small, which by any justification merited help. The Directors and Employees of this Bank are courteous and obliging; they are anxious, and are there for the purpose of trying to help solve the personal problems of any and all of the patrons of this institution.

This readiness to accommodate the people of this community has increased the power and prestige of this bank among the financial institutions of this section of the State and Country.

THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK, at Butler, has all the facilities for Banking found in a metropolitan bank. The most considerate service is given on all Checking Accounts. The officials who have charge of the Granting of Loans are considerate of the financial needs of any patron who may come for advice and aid.

A special feature of this Banking Institution is the Safety Deposit Box Department. This provides for the customers of the bank a place for the Safe Keeping of their Valuable Papers, Jewels and other articles which they do not wish to keep in their own homes.

We are pleased in this Dekalb Co. Farm Edition to bring before our readers the FIRST NATIONAL BANK AT BUTLER as among our strong financial institutions and their Directors and Officials are men that are boosters for our community and are always back of every progressive project.

Baking Results Are the Supreme Test.

In this day of scientific flour making machinery, the progress of manufacturing flour is largely automatic. Most high grade mills make flour on the same general principle. Methods do not differ much.

Thus with the utmost machinery which every good mill has, the only advantage one mill has over another is the "quality" of the wheat ground. Scientific machinery will not make good flour unless the raw material is good to begin with.

The miller who makes mediocre flour or "any old kind" of flour, takes the easiest way. His products answer a purpose and he lets it go at that. The house-wife who uses this flour takes a chance every time she bakes of meeting with failure.

The reason is obvious that any kind of wheat makes any kind of flour, never the same twice in succession. The results of baking, the supreme test of flour, are just as varied as the flour differs. When THE BUTLER MILLING COMPANY at BUTLER started to make WHITE WONDER FLOUR they determined to make the Best Flour that could be produced from the Choicest Indiana Wheat that is grown.

Investigation and research will show that the great trouble of the flour shipped into this section from the west lacks uniform baking results, due from the fact that wheat over a large area is used in the production, doing away with uniformity. Women complain that while using the same products from two different sacks of the same kind of flour they sometimes succeeded and sometimes they failed. WHY?

THE BUTLER MILLING COMPANY discovered that the rich, meaty, nutty flavor of the choicest Indiana wheat was evident in everything it made. So they select the very best of this Indiana wheat in manufacturing WHITE WONDER Flour. Tests extending over a long period showed that flour from choice Indiana wheat makes a uniform product and the Baking Results Always The Same.

It appears to us that it is good business policy for people of this section to insist upon having WHITE WONDER FLOUR, as every sack that is used helps the Indiana farmer in getting a better price for his wheat and assists in reducing the demand for western flour which reduces the price of Indiana wheat.

The Store of Courtesy

Popular and always up to the minute in Styles, SCHAAB BROS. & COMPANY at Auburn is eloquent evidence of the fact that Exclusive and Distinctive Women's Garments are not confined to Fifth Avenue shopping centers. Right here in our own community is a store whose management is always alert to the most detailed need of the Miss and Matron. It is commonly known that the most discriminating lady may find here that which suits her taste.

In establishing this store 40 years ago Schaab Bros. believed that the best possible way to gain patronage of the women of this community was to offer them nothing less than the best.

This policy has been followed consistently. Each year when the buyers from this store go to New York markets, they insist upon building up the stock with the most exclusive line of garments available in order to meet the exacting tastes of the women of AUBURN and vicinity. By careful purchasing, by equally careful management and by watching closely the demands of its patronage, this store has been able to offer a Superior Line of Goods at Prices well Within Reach of its Customers.

Completeness in Stock is another characteristic of this store. Whether your need is for a stylish Traveling Suit or simple Afternoon Frock you will find it here. Your need may be smaller. In such articles you will find the same exquisiteness and the same superiority of quality. Indeed, you will find the same fineness in all the small Accessories of Dress at this shop.

But stock alone does not make an attractive Woman's Store. Patrons must be served courteously, efficiently and with dignity. Realizing the absolute necessity of the "Best Service to the Public," this store has made it a point to have a full stock of everything in Men's, Ladies' and Children's Ready-to-Wear. They have the largest line of Piece Goods, Men's Wear, etc., in this part of the country for Men, Ladies and Children and everything is of the highest quality consistent with the price.

Every Man, Woman and Child who enters this store, whether their purchase be large or small, may be assured of the most courteous attention. If they desire suggestions regarding apparel, anyone of the people on the floor can direct them. Extremely slender or extremely stout women will find specially designed garments to fit their figure most attractively.

SCHAAB BROS. & CO. at Auburn conduct an establishment that is a credit to Auburn and vicinity and should receive a large patronage.

Build Not Your House Upon the Sand

How foolish is the man that builds for a day. His work disappears as a fleeting dream. It says in the "Good Book," "build not your house upon the sands." And how true is this statement. Look around you at the old dilapidated wooden houses and brick foundations and you will have still greater confidence in its application.

The AUBURN NOVELTY WORKS at AUBURN, is equipped with the latest automatic machines that will turn out all sizes and kinds of cement blocks. By their process and the expert operators that are employed they are enabled to handle all kinds of cement work efficiently, and at prices that are right. They invite the public to visit their plant and let them bid on your work. Their daily production is 1250 cement blocks per day.

Their Cement Blocks are more durable than any other kind and will last for years. You have only to buy material once, build once, and your house stands for all time. They will not crack, rot, shrink or crumble; are fireproof and will last practically forever. Within a radius of many miles the AUBURN NOVELTY WORKS are known as builders of foundations, Houses, Barns, Churches, and Ice Houses, and everything made of Cement. They have furnished blocks for the construction of over 150 houses in this section. They recently received a contract for finishing the Cement Blocks for one building 200 feet square and another two story building 60 feet by 250 feet. They operate three large trucks and prices quoted are laid down at the building site, which is a real service to the buyer. Their reputation as straightforward and honest business men extends far and wide.

The work they turn out speaks for itself and they bring in many new customers. Though expert in their lines, they will always be found to be very reasonable in their prices and the people of this section will find it worth their while to consult with them before contracting elsewhere. Special service and comprehensive information will be given to customers at all times, whether the request be by person or telephone.

Their policy of "Goods of High Quality," Service of the most painstaking kind and "very reasonable prices" brings them the confidence of the people of this section.

The management are well known business men and manufacturers who always take an active interest in our onward progress. They are valued citizens of this community and we wish to compliment them upon the success and progress of their industry.

DAIRY FEED BILL MAY BE KEPT AT A LOWER FIGURE

Feed constitutes about one-half the cost of milk production so that dairymen find it profitable to economize in the dairy ration so far as possible. Feeding practices with the herd of Jersey cows at the New York state agricultural experiment station at Geneva since 1900 shew how the feed bill may be kept at a low figure without sacrificing high production in the cows.

Alfalfa or clover hay and corn silage have been used freely in the station dairy ration and have decreased materially the cost of producing 100 pounds of milk. Legume hay comprises from one-half to three-fourths the hay fed at the station, the rest being timothy and orchard grass.

A simple home-mixed grain ration has been used at the same time, containing bran, oats, corn and oil meal in about equal parts by weight. This mixture usually represents 13 to 19 per cent of crude protein, and during the past three years has cost from $31 to $46 per ton. This is a saving of about $15 per ton as compared with ready-mixed grain feeds of 24 per cent protein content.

Many Sires Are Killed Too Soon

Bulls Sent to Butcher Before Their Full Usefulness Is Known.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

What becomes of the bulls that head the average cow-testing association herds? Are the good ones recognized and kept in service, or are they unwittingly sent to the butcher before they have completed their full period of usefulness? Some idea as to the tendency in the disposal of the pure-bred sires in our dairy herds may be had from the results of a recent study made by the bureau of dairying, United States Department of Agriculture.

Proved Sires in Aged Class.

The bureau had previously gathered a list of 58 pure-bred sires, and ascertained their transmitting ability by comparing the records of their daughters with the record of the dams. Naturally these proved sires were in the aged class by the time their value could be determined in this way. Nevertheless, it was desirable to know which were still in service. Inquiry brought information about 22 of them. Of this number only five are alive and in service today. These are all good sires as evidenced by their 31 daughters, whose production is better than their dams by 17 per cent in milk and 28 per cent in butterfat. The other 17 were slaughtered for various reasons.

Eleven of the seventeen slaughtered bulls were good. Their 67 daughters showed an increase over their dams of 22 per cent in milk and 20 per cent in butter fat. Only 2 of them were slaughtered because of sterility, while 9 went to the butcher for other reasons such as unrecognized value, unruliness, and a need for new blood. Six of the 17 bulls were poor. Of these, 2 were slaughtered because of sterility, 1 died, and 3 were killed for beef. Perhaps it was recognized that the last 3 were inferior, and for that reason were discarded.

Value Recognized.

While this is a very small number from which to draw definite conclusions it is evident that the value of some of the good sires was recognized, which accounts for the 5 that are still in service. Perhaps some of the poor sires were also recognized. The unfortunate part is that in the weeding-out process, if such practice existed, 11 out of the 17 dead sires were outstanding from the standpoint of transmitting production to their offspring. Some means must be found to keep the bulls until the records of their daughters prove them either good or otherwise.

Much Improvement Is Made by Poultry Raisers

Much improvement has been made along many lines in the poultry business during the last few years, but the work which has been done by the rank and file of producers to improve sanitary conditions is undoubtedly the most important.

During the last two years there has been much less from disease by the produce houses than previously. This was especially true two years ago. Last year these men handled the birds in a more sanitary manner and the losses diminished. Farmers appreciate that many of the diseases that cause loss on the farm and at produce houses may be eliminated by improved sanitary conditions.

The practice of raising chicks on fresh ground has spread rapidly. This movement is of prime importance. Worms, lice, mites, coccidiosis and tuberculosis are spread by the older fowls and infected premises to young chicks.

POULTRY HINTS

Tuberculosis of fowls should be watched for at all times, as its influence in the control of fowl cholera is not to be ignored.

The successful dairyman is the man who applies the most approved business methods to his dairy operations, from the cow to the delivery of his product to the consumer.

In producing clean milk, dairymen not only perform a service to mankind by reducing the dangers of impure milk, but they also perform a service to themselves.

FARM FACTS

Hogs are the most efficient domestic animals found on the farm since they will consume a greater diversity of feeds than other animals and since they will convert this feed in to more pounds of meat.

Variety in the diet is essential to health and growth, so recent experiments show.

Selection of Dairy Cattle Breeds Influenced by Shows

A good typical Ayrshire sire Putting on the finishing touches

Many a man who is undecided as to the breed of dairy cattle that he will select has been influenced in making his decision by the animals of a particular breed that he has seen in public.

The individual breeder secures a great deal of advertising as the result of exhibiting at fairs, or in offering good animals at public sales. It gives people a chance to see and know the kind of stock that a man is breeding and paves the way for future business.

It is essential that special care and attention be given dairy animals far in advance of the time that they are to be exhibited or sold. Exhibiting or selling animals publicly in their every day clothes is poor advertising and puts them at a disadvantage when the competition is keen. It takes several weeks to put a dairy animal in good show condition and what applies to fitting for show applies as well to fitting for sale.

It is important that the dairy animal to be exhibited or sold be in good flesh. A good covering of flesh adds to size, increases smoothness and indicates that the animal is thrifty and in good health. Dairy animals being fitted need extra feed.

Stabling and blanketing are great aids in putting the hair and hide in condition. By stabling in summer, the animal is protected from the hot sun which makes the hide harsh and stiff to the touch. A roomy box stall that is kept clean and well bedded provides desirable quarters. Continuous blanketing helps keep the animal clean, sweats the hide, thus improving its handling qualities and makes the hair lay to the body. The blanket need not be expensive but it must be tied on securely.

Every dairy animal that is to be exhibited should have the hair clipped from the entire body about three weeks previous to the date of the show or sale. This will get rid of the old hair and allow a new, even growth to develop which will greatly improve the appearance and increase the selling value of the animal.

A point often overlooked in the preparation of a dairy animal for show or sale is that of training to lead and stand properly. An untrained animal cannot display its good points to advantage if it combats the efforts of the attendant to exhibit it properly. A little time spent each day in training to handle properly will save effort and embarrassment at the show or sale and increase the financial return.

While in the show or sale ring, the man in charge of an animal should have one main thought in mind, namely that of showing the animal to advantage. By this is meant that when it stands, its feet are properly placed, back straight and head alert. Any movement on the part of the attendant or animal should be as graceful as possible. Until the ribbons are placed or the auctioneer's hammer falls, take no chances.

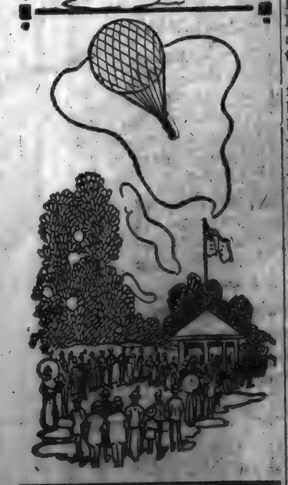
ST. JOE NEWS.

VOL. XL — ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 2, 1926 — NUMBER 35

HOME COMING



We are not mentioning names but we actually found a St. Joe man the other day who thinks a good wife is one who will wash the flivver and sweep out the garage.

OUR INTEREST IN "THE OTHER FELLOW"

No one man ever made a base ball team, and no one man ever carried on a successful business by himself. City carpenters and plumbers may think they have little interest in the farmer. The man handling freight on a city delivery truck or the timekeeper paying off a bunch of stevedores on a seaport deck, may say: "What do we care about the farmer's problems?"

But the majority of carpenters secure employment from individuals or corporations, who, in turn, are dependent for the business they do, upon the sale or manufacture of the city drayman and the waterfront stevedore, will be handling farm crops, either in their fresh state, canned, or in the shape of sugar, flour, cured meats, etc. The man who says he is not interested in agriculture, lacks good sense.

Lack of tariff protection on crops where it is necessary, simply cuts off the jobs of thousands of workmen in other lines of industry besides farming. What good does it do the laboring man if he can buy butter, eggs or sugar for a few cents less each month, if unrestricted foreign competition causes him to lose his job? The sooner we all learn that we have an interest in each other's problems, the sooner will industrial and agricultural stability be assured.

Obituary

James W. Sherwood, a well known farmer resiidng three and a half miles east of Auburn on the Auburn-Butler road, died at 6:15 Thursday evening as the result of a heart attack. He had been in failing health for two years and his condition was more serious than usual on Thursday, although no particular alarm was felt by his physician or the members of his family. Mr. Sherwood was able to be in town on Wednesday, transacting business.

Mr. Sherwood was born on the farm where he died which had been entered from the government by his father. The house in which he passed away was only four rods distant from the one in which he was born. The date of his birth was January 17, 1857. September 28, 1879, he was united in marriage to Susan Hornberger, who survives and who is seriously sick at the present time.

Besides Mrs. Sherwood there survives a daughter, Mrs. Faye Miller, a brother, Etna Sherwood and two grandchildren, James and Irene Miller, all residing in the Sherwood home.

The deceased was a member of the Norris Chapel church and for many years was the teacher of the adult class in the Sunday School. His funeral service was held Sunday morning at 10 o'clock from the late home. The Rev. Hollopeter of Grabill officiating.

Money is the root of all evil, and the lack of it the cause of all worry—except to deadbeats.

SURRENDERS PAPERS AND PAYS A FINE

Frank Gerls of southwest of Kendallville, Thursday surrendered to the possesson of Charles D. Henderson, of Spencer township, DeKalb county, a horse and a cow. He also gave up a note for $100 given in payment for the stock, and a chattel mortgage.

Mr. Henderson had filed a charge of robbery against Gerls in the Kendallville mayor's court, alleging that Gerls took the note and mortgage from him by force when he went to the Gerls place to collect. Gerls agreed to return the note and mortgage to Mr. Henderson and to give him the horse and cow. Mr. Henderson in turn agreed to change the charge against Gerls to assault and battery.

Gerls pleaded guilty to this charge and payed a fine of $5 and costs, amounting to $25.45.

AUTO DRIVEN INTO TREE

Sunday morning, as Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Lindley were coming to town, Mrs. Lindley driving, at the William Gutie corner she went to turn north, and going so rapidly she could not turn the corner, the machine was guided onto the side walk and in front of the W. ANOTHER FARM FIRE LOSS

Fire of unknown origin destroyed the barn and contents on the Neff Culler farm four miles east of St. Joe Wednesday night at 10 o'clock. The contents included hay, grain, farm implements and two horses.

When the family were awakened by the blaze, Mr. Culler made a desperate effort to save the horses but was unable to do so although he was burned badly in the attempt.

The loss will approximate $2,500 with only partial inaurance.

K. OF P. CEMETERY NOTES OF INTEREST

When putting in foundations for monuments they should measure at least six inches more than the base of the monument to allow for proper mowing and cleaning of graves.

Vases are preferred for flowers, rather than plants or shrubs, thus agan making the work of the care taker easier and he really can do a espectable job of cleaning.

When you visit the cemetery, if you would just pull a ltle grass around the stones it would only take a very few minutes and keeps the appearance up-to par.

Lesson for August 22

THE TEN COMMANDMENTS—DUTIES TO GOD

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 20:1-11.

GOLDEN TEXT—Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, with all thy soul and with all thy strength.

PRIMARY TOPIC—The Commandments About God.

JUNIOR TOPIC—How to Serve God.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Loving and Honoring God.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—God's Claims to Loving Service.

The Ten Commandments furnish us with the greatest moral code that the world has ever seen.

I. The Preface to the Decalogue (vv. 1, 2).

The Ten Commandments are based upon the truth set forth in the preface. Two great thoughts underlie this. What the Lord is and what He did. What He is is embodied in the name Jehovah-Elohim. The name Jehovah sets forth three great truths, viz.:

1. His all-sufficiency. All that He is and does centers in Himself.

2. His sovereignty. There is no being equal to Him, nor above Him. He is outside of and above every being in the universe. He is immanent and transcendant.

3. His unchangeableness. The "I am that I am" (Ex. 3:14) may be expanded into "I am what I was," "I will be what I am," "Jesus Christ is the same yesterday, today and forever (Heb. 13:8). The name Elohim signifies the strong and mighty one. What He did is asserted to be their deliverance from Egyptian bondage.

II. The First Commandment (v. 3).

"Thou shalt have no other gods before Me" means literally, "Thou shalt have no other gods before My face." This commandment requires single-hearted worship and service. Every man has his god. It is either the true God or a false god. Life itself with all its activity is worship. The center around which our activities revolve is our God. This commandment may be broken:

1. By living for one's self. If one's activities gather around himself he worships himself and is therefore an idolater.

2. By making pleasure the goal of our lives and spending our time and money for sensual enjoyment.

3. By being covetous (Col. 3:5). Every man who is greedy for gold breaks this commandment.

III. The Second Commandment (vv. 4-6).

The first commandment is directed against false gods. The second is directed against the worship of the true God with false forms. This commandment may be broken:

1. By resorting to the use of crosses and images in our worship.

2. By putting into the place of Christ the pope and following after priestcraft. It should be observed that this commandment is accompanied with a warning and a promise. The warning is that iniquity will be visited upon the children even to the third and fourth generation. The promise is that He will show mercy to thousands. This means that the workings of the same divine law will pass on God's mercy to thousands of generations.

IV. The Third Commandment (v. 7).

The Hebrew word translated "vain" in this prohibition against taking the name of God in vain means lying, deceptive, unreal. Therefore, to take the name of God in vain means to use it in a lying, deceptive and unreal way. The word "guiltless" is from a Hebrew word, the root-meaning of which is to be clean, to go unpunished. The meaning, therefore, is that God will not hold such a man to be clean and will not allow him to go unpunished who takes the divine name in a lying and hypocritical way.

The third commandment may be broken:

1. By profanity.
2. By perjury.
3. By levity and frivolity.
4. By hypocrisy, which is professing to live for God when living for self.

V. The Fourth Commandment (vv. 8-11).

The essential principle embodied in this commandment is work and rest. It enjoins work on six days and forbids work on the seventh. The command to work six days is just as binding as the rest on the seventh. Only those who have worked can really rest. This commandment may be broken:

1. By living in idleness.
2. By working on the day set apart for the worship of God.
3. By making it a day of feasting.
4. By devoting it to pleasure and games.

Trusting in God

An individual heart, which worships God alone, and trusts H[illegible] as it should, is raised above all anxiety for earthly wants.—Gelkie.

PRETTY DAYTIME FROCKS; MID-SEASON PARTY FROCKS

IN SPITE of all its silk and silken rivals, fine cotton voile holds its aristocratic own in the field of chic daytime frocks for hot weather. It is the only unmixed cotton fabric that challenges the popular priced silks and silk mixtures to comparisons that are never to its disadvantage.

France sends over the delicate and beautiful frock illustrated here and lavishes tasteful decorations on it. Fine plaits, ingeniously arranged at the front, tiny flat buttons and hand-drawn needlework give it an appeal that never fails to find a response. Americans are clever at making replicas of this painstaking workmanship and do it so well by machinery that frocks of this character are found everywhere. They are liked best in soft pink shades, in apple green, blue, maize and lavender. A new neck treatment with square opening at the front, a turn-over collar at the back and long ties, distinguish the dress pictured.

An Informal Daytime Frock.

Aside from silks and silk crepe other mediums used for making these informal but elegant daytime dresses are fine rep, wool crepe, challis and mixtures of silk and cotton in soft crepe. But whatever material is chosen simple designing is required for frocks that are appropriately worn in the house or on the street.

In a season of elaborated millinery and equally elaborated footwear, some care is required in making selections that will be in keeping with these practical and dainty dresses. There is a wide choice in footwear which is expected to be decorative and flattering to the feet. Plain silk stockings and fine kid pumps or strap slippers provide a variety of pretty styles. "Practical and dainty" applies to them as to the dresses, and slippers are varied, in the management of straps, and in the combinations of leathers.

More or less unwittingly, millionaires and "movie" stars do us mortals many a favor. They are privileged to shine in the firmament of fashion, clothed in the best that money can buy—which is the best that genius can offer—and all of us may profit by the contemplation of real beauty in apparel. The jolly part of it is that this beauty is in the reach of beholders who will never get within speaking distance of any great sum of money—and, in fact, they do not need to.

Here is a pretty midseason party frock, worn by a winsome "movie" star, who is entitled to a rising vote of thanks for her good taste. The shimmer of white taffeta, the airiness of net and the sparkling touch of rhinestone make it look as cool as snow. But it would not be less refreshing in pink or blue or any other light, flower-like color. Note that the bodice is not molded or fitted, but is straight and allowed to adjust itself to the figure in the most casual fashion. The bouffant skirt is cut with very wide, shallow scallops at the bottom and is quite short. The net ruffle lengthens it sufficiently and finishes it gracefully, besides allowing the fashionable and correct ankle display. Taffeta always seems to inspire designers to make trimmings of it, and wide puffs of the silk are applied to the skirt, forming long panels that follow the curve of the scallops on the skirt. A soft, crushed girdle is also made of the silk. It fastens at the right side, where two small rhinestone cabochons are set against a finishing ruffle.

A Dainty Party Frock.

Silver brocade slippers, with rhinestone buckles, and silver chiffon hose clothe the feet in exactly the right way for this and many other party frocks.

PRESERVES MADE FROM WATERMELON

Rind Can Be Utilized for Delicious Dish.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Watermelons seem to be especially plentiful this year. Why not utilize some of the rinds to make delicious preserves? suggests the United States Department of Agriculture. Cut the red portion from the rind. This can be chilled and served in slices or blocks. When ready to make the preserves remove the green outer skin and cut the white part into pieces of the desired size. First soak the pieces for 3½ hours in lime water, to make them firm. The lime water is made by dissolving one-fifth ounce of lime in one quart of water, for each pound of watermelon rind. The lime should be bought at a drug store and should be accurately weighed, as too much or too little will not give the desired results.

At the end of 3½ hours put the rind into fresh water for an hour. Next boil it in clear water for 1¼ hours. Make a sirup in the proportion of one pound of sugar and two quarts of water and drop the rind into it after it has reached the boiling point. Add half a lemon, sliced, for flavoring, and spices or ginger root if you like. These will tend to darken the color of the preserves, but for many tastes will improve the flavor. Boil for 1 hour and 40 minutes. It may be necessary to add more water to the sirup while boiling to prevent it from burning, or to transfer the preserves to a smaller pan without adding more water. If a thermometer is used the preserves should be cooked until the temperature has reach 222 degrees F. If any of the sugar caramelizes it will darken the color. When the preserves are cooked, pack the pieces in sterilized jars, add three-fourths cupful of sirup to each quart jar, and seal.

Chief Causes of Failure Found in Whipping Cream

The chief causes of failure in whipping cream are high temperature, cream low in fat and new cream. To secure a satisfactory whip, it is well to use cream containing at least 30 per cent fat which has been aged for 24 hours or more. The cream, bowl and whipper should be chilled.

Eat Mutton and Lamb

Americans do not eat as much mutton and lamb as the people of other countries. They eat but five pounds of mutton and lamb per person each year, while Canadians and French each consume ten pounds; the British 26 pounds; and the Argentinians, 28 pounds. Nearly half of the total quantity of this product eaten in the United States is consumed in the states along the Atlantic seaboard. It is difficult to understand why this delightful dish is such a stranger on the tables of the Middle West and South.

Artificial Wool

Artificial wool is a name which has been applied by some persons to a new artificial fiber which recently has been made from the waste fibers obtained in the manufacture of artificial silk. Fabrics made from it seem to have some of the properties of wool materials, but they have not been studied extensively as yet and little is known concerning their real value.

Can Some Pimentoes for Use During the Winter

Pimento peppers may be successfully canned by the water-bath method. So if you are raising this pleasant-flavored vegetable, be sure to put some up for winter use. They are fine as flavoring in soups, stews and mixed vegetable dishes, on salads, and with cheese in sandwiches. They may also be stuffed and served like green peppers.

Pimento peppers have a very thick flesh, tough skin and are comparatively smooth and free from ridges. They should be ripe, sound and not bruised. Use only whole peppers. To remove the skin dip the pimentoes in hot cooking oil (290 degrees Fahrenheit) for two or three minutes, or place them in a hot oven (450 degrees Fahrenheit) for six or eight minutes. Cool quickly by dipping in cold water. The skins then come off readily and leave the peppers soft and pliable so that they can be folded into the cans after stems and cores are removed.

Use pint glass jars or No. 1 or No. 0 tin cans. No liquid is added, since the processing brings out a thick liquor which almost covers the material in the can. Add one-half teaspoonful of salt to each pint. Process pint jars for 40 minutes in boiling water, and No. 1 or No. 0 tin cans for 30 minutes. Send to the United States Department of Agriculture for Farmers' Bulletin 1471-F, "Canning Fruits and Vegetables at Home," which gives directions for all the canning you may need to do this season.

Government Method Given in Canning Lima Beans

Lack of success in canning lima beans may be due to several causes. It is a mistake to attempt to can them when they are too old, or too long after picking. Only the steam pressure canner should be used, since lima beans are among the non-acid vegetables that need to be processed at a temperature higher than that of boiling water in order to kill the bacteria that cause spoilage.

Lima beans should be canned when very young and tender—what are known as "baby limas." Older ones may be dried. The following method is given in the newest canning bulletin issued by the United States Department of Agriculture. After washing the beans, bring them to a boil in water to cover. Pack boiling hot into the containers and add one teaspoonful of salt to each quart. Process immediately at ten pounds pressure, or 240 degrees Fahrenheit in quart glass jars for 60 minutes, pint glass jars for 55 minutes, and No. 2 and No. 3 tin cans for 30 minutes. Remove from the canner, observing the usual precautions in regard to opening it, cool by inverting glass jars or plunging tin cans into cold water, mark, and keep under observation until you are sure that all are keeping.

Mineral Constituents

Mineral constituents of milk that are especially important to the body are phosphorus, iron and lime. Phosphorus is fairly abundant in milk. Although not much iron is present in milk, what little there is can be easily used by the body. Milk is much richer in lime, the chief copstituent of bones and teeth, than are most other foods, and this is one of the reasons why it is an excellent food for children.

Test Wash Fabrics

A much larger proportion of wash fabrics are faster in color, both in sun-fading and water-fading than they were a few years ago. This is because better dyes are being developed. The manufacturer realizes the loss to the consumer when colors are not fast. Some are guaranteed, others are not. It is a wise precaution to get a small sample, when this is possible, and test it for both sun-fading and water-fading before using.

Canned Food Products

The prevailing idea that it is necessary to remove food products from cans as soon as they are opened is erroneous. For a reasonable period incident to its utilization it would be safer to allow the food to remain in the can. Transferring to another receptacle only adds to the danger of contamination.

TEMPERATURE FOR SUCCESSFUL CANNING

Types of Water Bath Canners.

For successful canning the temperature applied should ordinarily be the lowest possible that will insure a safe product. While no growing or so-called vegetative bacteria will survive for any length of time at the temperature of boiling water (212 degrees F.), some bacteria are able to go into spore form. These spores are killed only by very long-continued heating at boiling temperature, especially if the fruit or vegetable being canned has juice that is alkaline or only very slightly acid. When the juices are acid, as in fruits and tomatoes, all forms of bacteria are killed more quickly at 212 degrees F., which is the highest temperature possible in the water bath. Corn, peas, beans, and other vegetables that do not have acid juice need to be processed under steam pressure at temperatures higher than 212 degrees F.

BEFORE HER BABY CAME

Used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Adkins, Texas.—"Before my baby came I was so weak I had to stay in bed most of the time until I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. My mother-in-law, who is a midwife, told me it was all foolishness for me to stay in bed. She told me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it would help me. She handed me one of your little books and I read it and was interested in it. I went to a drug-store that night and got a bottle of your wonderful medicine. I took it until the baby was born and was able to be up and do my work. Baby is 4½ months old now and weighs 14 pounds. I have plenty of milk for her and she gains steadily. I recommend it. I am willing to answer letters and will do anything I can for any woman, for I know how I suffered."—Mrs. A. H. Tschirhart, R. No. 2, Box 39, Adkins, Texas.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been in use by women for over fifty years. It is a vegetable tonic made from roots and herbs and is sold by all druggists.

Recommended by women everywhere.

Just what the developments will be in the paving of the road from Fort Wayne to Butler, will be seen when the Highway Commisson drives the route. This is the agreement made with the Allen-DeKalb delegation, upon their visit last week at Indianapolis. Frequently of late the News has agitated the theory of the necessity of the people cleaning up their lots, and it seems that it is useless to talk. Now that the Home Coming is to be this week and no doubt hundreds of visitors will be here, let us all get busy and cart away all the rubbish and cut the weeds. Let us give the people who come here a good time and let us present to them a good clean looking little city.

A Good Man To Know

IN every town and in every line of retail business you are pretty sure to find at least one merchant who chooses his lines of merchandise on strict quality standards. He believes in giving unusual value to his customers for every penny they spend with him.

This merchant may not always have the cheapest goods. But he is pretty sure to have the leading lines—those with service records that prove their sterling quality. This merchant is always on the lookout for the kind of goods that give greater satisfaction, last longer, and prove cheapest in the long run.

In placing our line of Red Top Steel Fence Posts we try to select this kind of dealer. Usually he's looking for us too. We know that such dealers will naturally attract buyers who believe in quality merchandise and thus do a bigger business for themselves and for us.

When we say that your local Red Top Steel Post dealer is a good man for you to know it's only another way of pointing out the merchant who is prepared to give greater value in fence posts and undoubtedly in other lines too.

Mrs. Forest Clark and Mrs. Carl Clark of Fort Wayne, were Sunday afternoon visitors of Mr. and Mrs. John Miller.

Mesdames Clara Brunson and Vera Miller figured in an automobile accident Wednesday afternoon of last week, while driving to Garrett. An auto stopped suddenly in front of them when they were turning a corner and Mrs. Miller was unable to stop quickly enough to avoid a collision and the accident was unavoidable. The windshield on the car the ladies were driving was smashed and glass cut the little four year old boy's face in several places. Both children screemed and a lady living near by ran out and took them into her home and cared for the little bleeding face. Mrs. Brunson and Mrs. Miller's baby each received a bruise above the eye. The next morning it was seen that the cuts on the little boy's face were only through the skin. No other injuries only those mentioned above for which we have much to be thankful for. Vera Miller has been driving a car since she was a young girl and never had an accident before.

Dewey Miller and family spent Sunday with Simon Nicholls and family at Orangeville.

A number of Newvilleites attended the Orange Brothers Show at Butler, Thursday. We called it a little show with a big price.

"Why so depressed, Jimmy?"

"The horrible cost of living, old chap; constant bills for materials paint and shingling."

"What, house?"

"No, daughters."

The telephone girl just sits in her chair and listens to voices she hears everywhere. She hears all the gossip, she hears all the news; she knows who is happy and who has the blues; she knows all our sorrows, she knows all our joys she knows every girl who is chasing boys. She knows all our troubles, she knows all our strife. she knows every man who is mean to his wife, she knows every time when we are out with the boys, she knows the excuse that each man employs, she knows every fellow who is inclin-to be fast, with all his short coming from the first to the last. In fact there is a secret under each saucy curl that encircles the face of the telephone girl. If the telephone girl should tell all she knows it would turn half of her friends into bitterest foes, she would start a small wind that soon would be a gale, engulf us in trouble and land us in jail. She could turn loose a scandle (which gailing in force) would cause our wives to sue for a divorce. She would have all our churches mixed up in the fight and turn all our day into sorrowful night. In fact she could keep the whole town in a stew if she'd tell but a tenth of the things she knew. Now doesn't it scare you and make your head whirl when you think what you owe to the telephone girl?—Wakarusa Tribune.

CHAPTER VIII
—11—
Prospects

Caleb secured an amiable, steady-gaited saddle horse for his trip the next morning.

He carried his creel, an awkward thing to a rider of his lack of experience. In it he packed his lunch and a survey instrument or two with notebook and drawing materials. In his rod case, another cumbersome thing for him to carry, he included besides the joints of his pole a steel rod that he had secured at a blacksmith's in the upper valley, a tempered probe to be used for investigating depths of deposits. He had a geologist's hammer in one pocket, in another pipe and tobacco. His camera was tied to the saddle.

Leisurely he rode down the valley, diverging sometimes and climbing a ridge, probing with his steel rod, taking photographs, making a contour sketch where the camera would not serve his purpose, marking closely the lip of strata, the character of rock formations, the general lie of the country. Finally, close to noon, he rode down a wash, the sides of which were clothed in buckeye and oak, and lunched by the side of Boca creek, where the two sycamores made an archway for its waters.

He took the pendant from its packing and laid it in the palm of his hands. The artificer had done well. The tiny fishes, united by the ribbon, were delicately yet sharply cut.

Two fish united. A symbol of two living things that lived and moved in the same medium—water. Joined by a ribbon. Pisces and Aquarius. A swift suggestion came to him that the symbol might indicate more than he had intended when he ordered the trinket. He flushed a little as he wondered whether the girl might devise some intimate intention in the design. Then he laughed at his own presumption. It was her sign. Its connection with that on his own seal was fanciful, far-fetched.

He put the pendant back, got up, rolled his blanket, saddled and rode out into Caliente Sink, turning south along the creek, on through the canyon to the suspension bridge. There he dismounted and led his horse down the bank to the edge of the creek. He took off his roll and thrust the blanket and raincoat into the hollow of a tree that was masked with ferns, together with his creel and rod case. Unencumbered, he loped on to El Nido.

"This is my party call," he announced to Betty, who came to meet him, after Padilla, with a smile of greeting, had led away his mount for a grain feed and a promised rub-down and Maria had shown him into the patio.

The girl looked grave, seemed quiet, he fancied. But she brightened at the gift and accepted it without reserve.

"Is this really my sign?" she asked. "One would think that I was a twin.

"It was very thoughtful and original of you to choose this. I shall like it best of all my gifts. Something made for me, something that belongs, if we are to credit the astrologers. Do you know, we have an old volume that treats of such nonsense. Father will be pleased, too." Her own pleasure was so open and earnest that Caleb felt his satisfaction growing. He was glad she appreciated his taste.

They discussed the picnic and her friends, in friendly fashion. Thurston had returned to his Fresno vineyards. The Vedders, it seemed, had liked Caleb and wanted to see more of him. Carmen had reiterated her determination to insist upon a new beret from him. "If it was only a souvenir of the occasion," she had said. Betty appeared inclined to tease him a little about the impression he had made on Carmen.

"I am afraid I shall not see much of Miss Wilson," he said. "I expect to be very busy shortly."

She did not inquire specifically what he meant and he did not volunteer it. He did not mean to discuss his discovery with anyone until it was an accomplished fact—unless it became necessary in the order of business. Later he might have to broach the subject to Betty and her father.

At the end of an hour he rose to go and the girl ordered his horse saddled.

She gave him her hand, cool and calm but with the grip that told of efficiency, and he rode off. He left the direct trail to the canyon and mounted to a low rolling ridge that paralleled the stream. His eyes roved the valley, looking again for the beachmarks he had noted on his first visit.

And then he saw from the height what his previous trails had hidden from him—the grove of cedars about a low white railing and, within the fence, some white headstones—the three-generations cemetery of the Clintons.

He frowned a little at the sight, remembering the girl's declaration. But he did not forego his present purpose. He was firm in his belief that public service was greater than private sentiment and he hoped that he could overcome the feelings of the father and daughter when the time came. If this obstacle had to be surmounted, it should be. He was strong in his conviction that he would overcome all hindrances to his great project, that already promised too much to be abandoned.

It was nearing twilight when he came to the gorge. He considered it best not to risk a fire. He did not want his operations observed until he had come to a conclusion concerning them. He believed himself outside the bounds of the Clinton property, but he was not certain. If he was trespassing, he felt that Clinton and his daughter, in their present moods of resolution regarding any disposition of Hermanos valley, might resent what he was about, if they guessed its import, as a breach of hospitality.

He felt a little uneasy about his ethics. What he was about was for the public weal; it outweighed private considerations, he told himself, hammering home the argument. Hermanos valley was a private holding, yet, if public necessity demanded it for a dam site, public pressure, leading perhaps to legislative procedure, might insist upon condemnation proceedings.

But, if Clinton did not yield gracefully, the affair would create quite a stir, and Caleb would appear to Betty and her father in the light of a treacherous guest who had taken advantage of their hospitality to spy out the land. They would hold him responsible for ultimate condemnation and the desecration of the little graveyard.

"I Am Not In Love With Her," Caleb Said Half-Aloud.

The face of Betty Clinton, hurt, indignant, scornful, rose up before him. Perhaps he might be able to argue them to his standpoint, though he knew that idea was hardly tenable. He wanted her good will. Some instinct, entirely foreign to what he would have described as good Yankee common sense, whispered that his sentiment toward her was deeper-rooted than he imagined. That it might ripen into love. A love that might be reciprocated and that would be well worth while.

"I am not in love with her," Caleb said, half aloud. And, as he said it, he knew that the girl could not be dropped out of his life without leaving a wound that would ache long after it had become a scar. He was in the grip of complex emotions. Brain pointed out the importance of the project, born of his own talents, made possible by his talents. And the sex instinct, the desire of one woman, wrestled with the offspring of his intellect. Brain and heart were at odds.

But two things had come plainly out of the muddle. He wanted to carry out the work. That was a thing that should be done—if he did not someone else would, sooner or later, make the same discovery. And he wanted Betty Clinton. It was not that he merely did not want to lose her respect and friendship—he wanted her. The desire of her emotionally inhibited concentration on his project.

He woke before dawn, moved his horse to a better patch for browsing, took his probe and geologist's hammer and started to work, resolutely dismissing any aftermath of the night's problem. He had not brought wading boots with him and he took off shoes and socks and puttees, turned up the laced ends of his riding breeches and waded out into the gut where the pent-up waters of Hermanos, when the valley was a lake, had broken through.

The sun was two hours high before he came out of the creek, his pockets filled with rock samples, wet, tired, his purpose accomplished. He had still to refer to certain geological reports, to analyze his samples, but he was sure of the result.

His jaw was set and his face grave from concentration, but it shone with a certain satisfaction.

"That problem is solved," he said aloud as he mounted his horse at last and rode the willing steed down canyon toward the breakfast that both craved. He did not notice the man who came out on the suspension bridge and watched him until the foliage shut him from view.

It was Padilla. The Mexican's face was puzzled, suspicious. He could not understand why el senor should have stayed the night at the head of the canyon. He descended to the creek bed, readily finding evidence of what Caleb had been doing, evidence that a day or so would have erased. He saw where Caleb had gone down into the stream and his quick eyes noted where the rocks had been chipped. A convulsion came over his face with the sudden conviction that the guest had been up to no good.

"The dam' Gringo, Yankee spy!" he muttered. But his thoughts were twisted. He remembered Caleb's gallant action with the bull. He could not justify the two affairs. And he could not comprehend what Caleb had been up to. Unless it was mining. And there was no gold on Gabilan, no silver or cinnabar. Save that, whatever he had done, he had accomplished secretly, deliberately giving out the impression that he had gone down the canyon the night before. He decided to talk the matter over with Maria.

For four days Caleb worked day and night, almost unceasingly. Every night he practiced his qualities as Water Diviner. He cut his own hazel twigs and, as soon as the moon was up, he went out on the desolate surface of the Sink, with results that justified his first impressions. There was water everywhere. It backed up to the southern border and the presence of the water proved that clay lay under it. This he verified by finding clay on the side hills with his boring probe. His cistern had walls as well as bottom, a lining that was impervious. It was a giant clay saucer holding water for the population of a whole city.

At the end of the time he was worn lean and tired in body. Sleep had been snatched in catnaps through the day, before the moon came up and in the early hours of dawn. He returned to the hotel, gave up his horse and slept luxuriously for thirty hours. But, before he went to bed, he dispatched a telegram. It was to his lawyer in the East, to whom he had given certain powers-of-attorney concerning the possible sale of his house. In the message he urged an instant sale, even at some slight sacrifice, and asked for the wired remittance of the price through his Golden bank.

Quick with enthusiasm, he went back to Golden, fully rested, to complete plans for submission to Cox. The latter, he found, was out of town and not expected for two weeks. This suited Caleb, who had much to do. He hired a small office and equipped it with drafting table, desk, a small filing cabinet and two stools.

He had to set his plans on paper, to make drawings, put together rough estimates, and he resolved to make a working model of the whole project. He did not anticipate being able to do more than suggest the magnitude of the affair and its cost. What he mainly hoped for was to prove its practicability, and the model would go far toward that.

Russian Given Credit for Radio "Invention"

Who was the "inventor" of radio? The Soviet government claims the honor for a Russian, Prof. Alexander Stepanovitch Popoff, and has adopted a characteristic method of telling the world about it.

A new Russian stamp came to the notice of the writer a short time ago. Above an excellent likeness appear the words "Inventisto de Radio-Popov." The language of this inscription is Esperanto, though the other characters on the stamp are Russian.

The facts appear to be that Professor Popoff—admittedly one of the great pioneers of wireless—publicly transmitted wireless signals over a distance of 40 meters in 1895, the year before Marconi took out his first patent for Hertzian wave telegraphy.

But Branly and Sir Oliver Lodge had been experimenting for some time along the same lines, and the latter gave demonstrations in 1894 in which "coherers" (the earliest form of radio "detectors") were employed. It is not easy, therefore, to award the palm. Herts, after all, was the first to produce the radio wave.

Parasitic Ivy

"At the moment when there is so much talk and action in the direction of afforestation," writes a correspondent of the London Times, "may I call attention to the awful destruction of many hundreds of thousands of trees, caused by that terrible scourge, the parasitic, pernicious weed, ivy? As I drive through the country, I regret to say that it is the exception to see a tree which is not having its life's vigor sucked from it and its ultimate asphyxiation and strangulation brought about by this scourge."

POULTRY

RAISING CAPONS AND COCKERELS

With a view to obtaining definite figures showing the relative size and rate of growth of capons and cockerels, the author carried out experiments in 1919, at the Maryland agricultural experiment station. Forty-two White Plymouth Rock cockerels, all hatched on May 28 in the same incubator, were divided into two groups as nearly equal as possible, as regard health and vigor. On May 30, one of the groups were caponized. The two groups were kept entirely separate, and their gain in weight and the food they consumed were recorded.

Until October 1 both groups had access to poultry yards measuring 15 by 125 feet, and after that date they were confined to open-front houses 15 by 15 feet in size.

Until January 16 the following dry mash was fed to both groups ad libitum: Bran, 100 pounds, wheat middlings, 100 pounds, beef scrap, 30 pounds, bone meal, 5 pounds, salt, 1 pound. A mixture of white maize and wheat was also given as a scratch feed. From January 17, the following fattening ration was fed: Maize meal, 100 pounds, wheat middlings, 50 pounds, beef scrap, 20 pounds, lucerne meal, 30 pounds, salt, 1 pound, and in addition, wheat and yellow maize were given twice daily.

From May 28, 1919, to February 7, 1920, the average feed eaten (mash plus grain), by the capons and cockerels, respectively, was 63.28 pounds and 62 pounds, and the gains made were 6.66 pounds and 5.86 pounds.—R. H. Waite of Maryland State College of Agriculture.

Young Poultry Especially Susceptible to Disease

Turkeys, like other fowls, are subject to roup, but when the greater part of a half-grown flock dies there is a strong suspicion of something else than roup to be entertained, says the Rural New Yorker. Young poults are especially subject to blackhead and coccidiosis, two diseases which have made it almost impossible to raise any large number of turkeys on farms where good-sized flocks were formerly reared without trouble. These diseases show themselves by drooping, weakness in walking, gradual loss of flesh, more or less diarrhea, and finally death. They attack young poults from a few weeks of age until maturity. Usually a few survive out of any flock, but mature birds may also show these troubles and die after having become full grown.

There are two preventives that have gained some reputation in the treatment of these diseases, but nothing can be said to be anything like a certain cure. Powdered catechu may be given in the drinking water of the flock, one teaspoonful being added to each three gallons of water, this being done for three days at a time, with an interval of a day or two between the three-day periods. This is for coccidiosis. For blackhead, powdered ipecac, one teaspoonful in the mash for each twenty birds, old and young, may be given at intervals, beginning early. The symptoms of these two diseases are much alike.

Poultry Facts

The importance of strong, vigorous chicks cannot be overestimated.

• • •

One of the costs of running a poultry business is the death rate among laying stock.

• • •

Nothing is more discouraging than to start with a bunch of small, weak, puny chickens.

• • •

The poultry house need not be expensive or elaborate but must be roomy, well ventilated and convenient.

• • •

There are general rules for feeding, but sudden changes in weather, extreme cold or heat, or wind will make some change in the needs of the chickens. The age and breed of the laying flock also has its influence on feeding.

• • •

Some people cull their flocks quite successfully by selling those that are the last to leave the roost in the morning.

• • •

Blackhead is the most fatal turkey disease. Parasites causing it are carried by chickens, therefore keep the young "turks" and the chicks apart.

• • •

Male chicks grow faster than the females, and as early as two weeks of age there is a significant difference in the rate of growth between the sexes.

• • •

In order to lay well, a hen must have comfortable quarters. Hens may live and lay some, even when kept in a poor house, but a flock, kept in a good house and given good care, is much more likely to be profitable.

• • •

Fowls a year old, when properly prepared, make good roasters; taken from the general yard, they are tough and fit only for soup. Cockerels ten or twelve weeks old will, by special fattening and inactivity, become plump very quickly.

Cereal Every Morning

"Goodness, I wish I never had to eat any more oatmeal as long as I live!" petulantly exclaimed a young hopeful at the breakfast table, receiving in return the severe admonition that oatmeal was good for him—made big strong men, and that he could eat his or receive something he would care even less for!

Yet the youngster really was not so much to blame as the mother. Variety is the spice of a child's life as well as of a grown person's, and to face the same uneventful bowl of cereal every morning is to become as bored as a young person possibly can. It is the home-maker's job to avoid boredom and foster eager interest in the members of her family, and the more thought she gives to producing varied and palatable dishes, the more popular her meals will be.

There is no need, as a matter of fact, to serve the same cereal every morning. In fact, one may have a different cereal every day in the week and differently prepared each time. Oatmeal may be followed by cornflakes, cream of wheat, puffed grains, wheatena, bran, porridge, shredded wheat. The cereal shelf should hold a large variety of breakfast foods, and each be drawn upon in turn or as the child calls for it.

Combining cereals and fruits, or cereals and eggs, also affords endless variety. Dates, fresh apples cut into small pieces, figs, bits of sliced pineapple, bananas, canned pears, peaches and cherries, all blend appetisingly with cereals and a pouring of half milk, half cream. Sometimes a sort of tutti-frutti combination makes an appeal to a young child.

A poached egg, a semi-hard boiled egg cut in slices, or a tiny omelette laid on top of the cereal will often please a school boy or girl. In fact, anything different always commands attention, comment, experimentation, and a certain amount of extra interest. A little brown sugar, instead of white, may mark the variety one morning. The next morning a spoonful of clear bright red jelly may top the dish. Very often a child's capricious appetite can be tempted by the mere appearance of a familiar and necessary dish. And the same cereal two mornings in succession—never!

The Care of Books

Many women who take beautiful care of their clothing and their kitchen utensils, their linen closets and their refrigerators, are careless about those choicest treasures of the home—the books. We are all apt to stick books away in bookcases or on open shelves and forget all about them except to whisk an occasional duster along the fronts of the shelves.

Books need just as loving care as furs, household linens, and fine leather shoes, if they are to enjoy long life and keep their shape and their freshness. Dust accumulates on book shelves almost more quickly than anywhere else in the house, or at least it seems to, perhaps because there are so many small edges exposed to the sweeping dust particles.

The light wool or feather duster should be used daily, and, at least once a month, every book in the house should have individual care. Take it down and wipe off the cover and the tops and sides of the pages. Many little-used books have a yellowed edge of dust along each page, which could be avoided if they were wiped off frequently. If you have choice leather-bound books in your collection, whether or sheepskin, calf, or morocco, give them a light coating of pure neatsfoot oil once a year, to preserve the leather.

Keep all books out of the direct rays of the sun. This dries out the glue and tends to loosen the binding, and will dismally fade all of the colored cloth covers. Another way to keep books in good condition is to see that they stand upright at all times, whether between the book ends or on the shelves. A book tipped sideways gets its covers pushed out of shape and tends to come apart. If books do not support each other by standing close together, a small japanned book-end may be inserted here and there on the shelves.

The way a new book is opened has much to do with its future health. By opening a few pages at a time and gently pressing them back, the backs will not be broken nor will the glue and the stitching be strained. A book that is grabbed and cracked open violently may be permanently injured.

THE COLONEL'S ERROR

By H. M. EGBERT

(Copyright by W. G. Chapman.)

COL. JIM SLEE sat in his swivel chair and looked at Miss Elizabeth Ray and pulled his drooping mustache.

Colonel Slee was the last man in the world whom one would have associated with a large city store. A little over fifty, perhaps, with a splendid figure and military bearing, there was something chivalrous about the man in spite of his reputation. If there can be grades of fast livers, the colonel undoubtedly belonged to the highest grade. In fifty homes he was regarded as a man of unblemished reputation; and those who knew what his life was somehow exonerated him.

The colonel had fallen heir to the store on his brother's death, and he had not known what to do with it.

His first act was to call all the employees together and raise their salaries. Then he promoted all the pretty girl clerks. The colonel's old-fashioned idea was that the prettier a girl was—and every girl was pretty if she had health and a sweet temper—the less right she had to labor for a pittance. Miss Ray, being the prettiest and most innocent of the lot, was appointed the colonel's private secretary.

That was as far as the colonel got before the departmental managers interfered and told him, with firm politeness, that he would have to leave the charge of affairs to them unless he wished to drive the store into bankruptcy.

The colonel made them agree that the revised salary schedule should stand, and after that he came down to the store for about two hours a day and pretended to answer letters.

It is doubtful whether he would have come more than twice a week but for Miss Ray. She was about twenty, and she came from a little town in New England. She was one of the prettiest girls the colonel had ever seen, with her fluffy brown hair, gray eyes, red lips and unsophisticated ways. The colonel was a little afraid of her at first, but after a while he won her confidence. He knew how to do that; he was always gentle and always a gentleman.

He had employed her as his secretary, at thirty dollars, for about a month when he learned about Tom. Tom was a young farmer in her home town, and they were engaged to be married—perhaps in a year's time, when she had saved her trousseau money and he had begun to make things go better. He had only lately taken over the land, and it was heavily mortgaged.

"Miss Elizabeth," said the colonel, and, though it was the first time he had ever called her by her Christian name, his tone was so respectful that it was impossible to take exception to his words—"Miss Elizabeth, you are much too charming a girl to take up country life. Why, here you could have your pick of a dozen millionaires."

Miss Elizabeth laughed softly and looked at the colonel with that innocent expression that always puzzled him.

"I'll prove it," said the colonel. "I'm going to take you out to lunch with me, and just you watch the men stare at you."

Miss Elizabeth put on her hat and accompanied him. She had never been in a big restaurant before, had never eaten cold jellied consomme or tasted punch. She sipped about two teaspoonfuls of the ice-cold beverage out of courtesy.

"I have had a most delightful time; you are very good to me," she said, when they returned to the office.

"Feel like repeating the experiment?" inquired the colonel, and Miss Elizabeth nodded gayly.

That was the beginning of many luncheons. At times the girl's heart misgave her; she felt that she ought not to accept so much kindness from this friend. But he was always so gentle, so entirely respectful to her. Then one day the colonel invited her to dine with him and go to the theater.

For the first time that night, after she had left him at her door, Miss Elizabeth began to dread that his interest in her was not wholly platonic. There had been an undertone of something that she did not understand in his demeanor that evening. And, what troubled her most, she had somehow felt that it was not advisable to make any reference to him in her letters to Tom.

Tom was looking forward anxiously to seeing her when her vacation came, the following month. Perhaps then she would tell Tom. Perhaps. . . .

She went to bed with a conscience not wholly free from problems.

It was a day or two later that Miss Elizabeth spoke of her vacation to the colonel.

"Why, I have been thinking of that," he said. "I shall want you—at least, I should like to have you help me, if you can. You see, Miss Elizabeth, I am taking a little yachting party to Key West, and I ought to keep in touch with business affairs. If you could accompany us, you can have another holiday when we get back."

The yachting trip was to take about six weeks. Miss Elizabeth had never been at sea; much as she wanted to see Tom again the invitation was irresistible. The colonel told her that there were to be three or four other ladies. They were to go aboard the vessel at the little private dock at seven in the evening, a week hence.

Miss Elizabeth wrote a letter to Tom, explaining the situation and promising to come home as soon as she returned. Then, at the appointed hour, she accompanied the colonel, who called at her boarding house in a taxicab, to the pier.

The yacht lay alongside the wharf. A watchman paced her decks, but, though they inspected her from stem to stern, there was no sign of the others. They had sat down for a moment in the dining room. The girl was becoming a little nervous.

"We will have dinner now," said the colonel.

"Wait a minute," said the girl hurriedly. "When will the others be here? Your sister—is she not expected before we dine?"

The colonel pulled his mustache and looked hard at her. Then he stretched out one hand and patted hers gently.

"My dear," he said, "we are going to be the only two passengers aboard this trip."

The girl looked at him with terrified eyes and rose from her chair with a little gasp. To the last day of her life she always pictured the colonel thus, seated before her, pulling his drooping mustache, and smiling at her with such a kind expression on his face.

"I thought you understood, Elizabeth," said the colonel in tones of grave politeness. There was reproach in his voice, but Colonel Slee could never be anything but a gentleman.

"But—you said—you said—" the girl exclaimed; and even then she could not quite believe it. But presently she understood. She was not at all angry. She felt the tears of humiliation rush to her eyes, that he should have misunderstood her so. And there was more than humiliation—there was real sorrow for the loss of a friend, the only friend she had had, except Tom, since her parents died.

"Are you going, Elizabeth?" asked the colonel, watching her.

She began buttoning her coat. "You ought not to ask me that—oh, what have I done to make you think otherwise?" she pleaded.

"My dear," said the colonel, "I thought you understood the situation. Perhaps I was wrong; I had no wish to deceive you. That is not my way. There are certain conventions . . . why did you think I was taking you out to luncheons and dinners?"

"As a friend," she cried hotly, feeling her cheeks burning.

He shook his head. "Men of fifty do not make friends of their lady employees in that way, my dear," he answered. "I am sorry. Let me help you with your coat."

They went up the stairs to the deck and stood side by side there for a moment. Everything in Elizabeth's life seemed to have crumbled into ashes. She turned.

"I am sorry," she said. "I wish I had understood. Good-by."

For the life of her she could not summon any indignation against him. She did not feel the insult then, only the unbearable loss.

Colonel Slee took her hand in his and bent over it. They strolled up the dock; he called a taxicab and escorted her to her door. Then he raised his hat and left her.

On the following morning a special delivery message arrived for the girl, asking her to hold her position at the store till the colonel's return. They need not meet, he said, but he trusted she would take charge of his interests till he could make arrangements. Elizabeth went back to business.

She did not see him again. The yacht was wrecked in the great storm that ravaged the Florida coast that summer. Colonel Slee never appeared again. He doubtless died, with all the crew. But he had had time to make certain arrangements. The girl found herself the possessor of a substantial legacy. But she never told Tom all the circumstances. That was a page of her life that she tore out of the book.

Claims Recording of Pulsation of Plants

A device which makes it possible to take the pulse of a plant is an announcement that comes from that ancient land of mystery and occultism, India. Working along other lines than those chosen by Luther Burbank, Sir Jagadis Chandra Bose, a very learned and accomplished botanist, has invented a machine of such delicacy and sensitiveness that it records the impulses and sensations of plant life. It is a fact now accepted by all qualified botanists that plants have "nerve reactions," that is, they are sensitive to outside influences. Their tissues form a sort of nervous system which reacts under varying conditions. Their feelings are played upon by heat, cold, food and poisons. That they respond to tender care and culture is admitted. To watch and measure their sensitiveness is one of the interesting studies of present-day botany. American botanists respect Sir Jagadis, an authority on the subject, although they are inclined to think he is going a little too far in predicating the existence of intelligent consciousness in plant life. That a plant has feelings which can be cheered or depressed is all the scientists of the University of Missouri are willing to concede pending further demonstrations.—Anaconda Standard.

Austrian Lines Electrified

The Austrian State railways has just completed converting its 85-mile Arlberg line from Bludenz to Innsbruck in the Tyrol Alps and its Salzkammergut division, 67 miles long. These lines run through tunnels and around many windswept mountain shoulders. The overhead trolley wire is of bronze over most of the distance to withstand the high winds and heavy sleetstorms.

1 in every 4

DURING the first six months of 1926 one in every four buyers of new automobiles bought a General Motors car. During 1925 the proportion was about one in five. During 1924 it was one in six. This steady addition of new friends for the products of General Motors has a double significance.

1. It is proof that the grouping of strong companies in one big family is economically sound. Large scale operations do make possible important economies; and these economies do benefit the buyer, in greater value. The public has recognized this principle and profited by it.

2. Increased public patronage involves increased obligation. General Motors is directly responsible for the welfare of its 152,000 employees and their families, its 20,000 dealers, and indirectly for the six thousand companies which furnish it with supplies and materials — at least a million men, women and children to whom its public good is a very personal concern.

As the volume of production increases there must be a corresponding increase in the values offered. The new series of cars just presented does embody larger values; it is a direct reflection of the fact that more than 1,075,000 General Motors cars were sold at retail during the year just closed. The added quality has been built in where its presence counts most in comfort and safety and long life.

With great pride we invite you to inspect these new General Motors cars.

As French babies become scarcer and scarcer the governmental desire to increase the population grows stronger and stronger. A law has just gone into effect substantially increasing the awards portioned out to the parents whose progeny are many.

Families with four children or more under the age of thirteen are allowed 360 francs annually for each child after the third. Provision is also made for widows and widowers. A widow with five children would receive under the new regulations 1,800 francs, or $360, according to pre-war standards.

Magnetism

Faraday demonstrated in 1845 that all substances, even the gases, are either attracted or repelled by a sufficiently powerful magnetic pole. Practically, however, the metals responsive to magnetism are the three which, with their alloys, comprise the ferromagnetic group. These are iron, nickel and cobalt. Certain other combinations of metals will respond to the magnet. Thus there was discovered in 1902 an alloy—Heusler's alloy—which is comprised of copper, aluminum and manganese, and which is said to be not greatly inferior to iron in its capacity for being magnetized.

HOW TO AVOID DIVORCE TOLD BY OHIO JUDGE

On the eve of his resignation from the domestic relations court, Judge Ronald W. Baggott, drew up a list of rules which he has entitled "How to Avod Divorce," and has offered them to every married couple.

Tha rules apply both ways—to both man and wife, the judge declared. Here are a few of them:

Don't play with gin.

A wife should spend at least one afternoon a week in the home.

If there are children they should have an occasional bath.

If a husband is attracted by certain externals, it would be well for the wife to use rouge, lipstick and short skirts.

Boosting Business

You are boosting your business every time you make a deal, if you are courteous, obliging, friendly, cheerful. These little things count. They are the best kind of business boosters.

In fact they are good advertisements. An advertisement is merely letting the people know of some service you are in a position to deliver. The better the service, the more room to advertise—to tell about it. That's why we use this space—to tell you about banking in general, and the safe, reliable service of our Bank in particular. Stump Addresse Party Workers

A meeting of the DeKalb county Democratic central committee was held Monday night in the court house assembly room in Auburn.

Short addresses were given by R. Earl Peters, state chairman; Albert Stump, candidate for long term senator; James Adams of Columbia City, twelfth district chairman and Mrs. Hazel Luckey of Wolf Lake, the distrist vice chairwoman.

Miles Baxter of Auburn, DeKalb county chairman, presided at the meeting. Roll of the precinct committeemen was called and the registration of voters was explained. Mr. Baxter urged the committeemen to be thoroubh in the matter of registering voters. Registration will commence next Saturday, September 4, and will continue until October 4.

Following the business meeting Mr. Baxter presented Mr. Peters. The state chairman laid special stress on the importance of getting out the vote in November. He urged that workers forget local differences, get together and work for the success of the party.

Mr. Stump then spoke for a short time. He did not make any attempt to discuss political issues. He has made 3,000 speeches over the state, the greatest number in one day being thirteen. He spoke twice in Auburn on Monday at the teachers' institute and on Tuesday was scheduled for three addresses and he desired to conserve his strength, he said.

Mr. Stump emphasized his appreciation of the loyalty of party workers. "There ought to be a book written of the splendid and glorious work for your party leaders," he declared. "The interest of the people is now enlisted in justice and truth and you people can carry that conviction into every community. There is so much at stake at this time in the interest of self government for the purpose of breaking down dictatorship. Now is the time to get together a great organization, pledged to a principal—and we will have cohesion. On the other hand the republican party is in pieces and cannot be drawn together; it has lost its cohesion because it is characterized from top to bottom with personal ambitions and selfishness. Try to get three republican leaders togeth er and you will find that instantly each is seeking his own personal preferment; instantly there is asorted selfishness, distrust and suspicion of each other.

"I am impressed," said Stump with the spirit of sacrifice and the devotion to the truth of the principals of the democratic party, a party which was built upon sacrifices. It is inspiring to think of a leader like Evan Woolen, that brilliant and devoted man who is making a sacrifice of his business interests to defend the institution of democracy. Following his example we want you men and women to share in the work of preserving our institutons in times of peace.

PRESIDENT MUST HEAR THEIR STORY

Somewhat dissatisfied after his recent conference with Secretary of State Kellogg, Supreme Knight James A. Flaherty, of the Knights of Columbus, will call on President Coolidge tomorrow, and undertake to set him straight as to the policy of this society of the Catholic church, regarding the Mexican religous controversy.

It was with some reluctance that President Coolidge consented to the conference, after previously referring Flaherty to the state department. The executive feels that his policy of noninterference has been demonstrated already to have been the wiser course, and he believes that the Mexican controversy is adjusting itself more rapidly than would have been the case had the United States sought to meddle.

And no doubt, by this time, our President has been told what a great mistake he has made by not giving aid to the Mexican stuation.

ST. JOE NEWS.

VOL. XL — ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 9, 1926 — NUMBER 36

HOME COMING A GREAT SUCCESS

With lowering clouds, and a murky atmosphere which is not calculated to raise the spirits, and is not associated with the festive spirit, the long looked for day has dawned, and now pased into history, in which the town of St. Joe welcomed into her midst, the old time residents and friends, for their third annual home coming.

The unpleasant weather conditions, however, did not seem to dampen the spirits of the pilgrims who were once more in their native haunte, even though it did its best to besmear old mother earth. On the contrary, sunshine, good cheer and fellowship pervaded the spiritual atmosphere, and the committees who worked so faithfully were rewarded by seeing the program carried out, with practically no nterference, the weather man granted them at times respite, in other words acted nice.

S. S. Widney, chairman of the registration committee, reports 545 perons as registering, this is perhaps only a third of those in attendance. Mrs. Mary C. Bartlett of Fort Wayne, being the first to register, she was also the first to register last year. The band under the efficient management of C. A. Woodcox, discoursed music in quanity and quality highly gratifying to all.

The horse shoe pitching contest finished the forenoon's program. The results were as follows:

First Game. Wm. Keeler and DuWayne Kinsey against Frank Miser and Claire Coburn. Keeler and Kinsey winners.

Second Game. Earl Smith and Chas. Jordan against Beams Bros., of Spencerville. Smith and Jordan winners.

Third or Final Game. Winners of first and second games played. Smith and Jordan winners. 21-6, score.

At the dinner hour, meals were served by ladies of the Lutheran, Methodist and Christian churches.

Owing to the threatening aspect of the weather, the solid part of the program was given in the Lutheral church: this consisted of the address given by Rev. J. N. Scholes; the recitation of poems by Frank Nelson, Hoosier poet of Fort Wayne; a medley of airs on the hand saw by Philip Smith, a one time resident of the community and reading of a poem by Ruth Bowen of Fort Wayne.

H. M. Widney being chairman of the committee, did not give his talk as per program, but, instead in few words, but forceful manner, introduced the speakers.

Miss Ruth Bowen gave, "Memories of Other Days," which follows:

MEMORIES

Written by T. W. Blair, Fort Wayne, Indiana
Read by Miss Ruth Bowen of Fort Wayne

We were children together, now old pals in gray,
And we've listened to the mocking bird sing,
Back in the twilight, in days that are gone,
When their echo, made the wild forest ring,
Their music was sweet, and the thrill that it gave,
Is still lingering, close to our heart,
And cheers us again, in our march on the way,
To that Haven, where the loved never part.

We see through our vision, the old cabin Home,
With one room, where we slept, cooked and ate,
And the tall posted beds, that stood in the corner,
And we thought, they were all up to date.
We remember so well the old crooked chimney,
With its mortar and sticks, rising high,
And we've watched in the evening, the smoke curling upward,
With its sparks lighting up, the blue vaulted sky.

Our thoughts turn again, to the old puncheon highway,
And the oxen we drove on its bed,
And the wagon with linch pins, and queer rolling wheels,
Found its way, o'er the road where it lead.
We almost believe, we are dreaming again,
When our thoughts, wander back, to those days,
But we welcome their memory, though our hair is silvered now,
And our hearts go back again, where those scenes, in silence lay.

We cannot forget, the log schoolhouse so dear,
That stood in the forest alone,
Where we sat through the day, on its benches so hard,
And at eve went to Mother and Home.
We recall the old stove, with its warm heating sides,
And the teacher in her soiled gingham frock,
And the old wooden bucket, with its water and cup,
That stood in the corner near the old rusty clock.

These old oaks remember, when St. Joe was born,
And have stood watching progress take place,
And the axe, and the hammer, used by arms that were strong
Have made Churches and Homes fill the space.
How well we remember the old St. Joe river,
Where we waded and rode on its crest,
And today its still there, flowing on to the sea,
Whispering peace, to its banks, where our loved are at rest.

But today, there's something missing, and we pause to drop a tear,
For the friends that we used to love, and know,
We do not hear their voices, they have softly slipped away,
And their smiles no longer greet us with their glow.
We are only waiting now, for the mystic bells to ring,
That will call us to that Haven above,
Where we'll peacefully rest, in the shade of the trees,
In God's beautiful forest of love.

The medley of airs by Philip Smith was rendered in a pleasing manner and was highly appreciated by the audience, as were the poems by Frank Nelson, whose own composotions were particularly well adapted for an occasion of this kind.

In the address which followed by Rev. J. N. Scholes, was able and timely an illustration, taken from an incident in his own life formed a basis for his theme, in it one could see a counterpart in his own experiences, which shows the relationship that exists between all human kind; that humanity which makes all the world kin. The circumstances under which St. Joe came into existance; it's location, was explained; this perhaps would be news to the younger generation, who never knew that St. Joe was once called Blair, Ind., or Blair P. O. rather. The relation of matter and spirit was explained by reference to a Scriptural passage, in which matter is said to come first, also church and state are andshould be one, that is co-exist, but not yet, we have not yet arrived to that state in which this can be. The conclusion of this address marked end of that, which, chairman Widney designated the "solid part of the afternoon's program. The clouds began to thin, and Old Sol almost showed his face, at this time, the audience was ready for the parade, which in a short time was forth coming. The order of parade was as follows:

1st., Grover Curie, Frank Leighty bearing the national colors.
Band.
Roy Keller, Uncle Sam and Liberty.
Children with decorated pony and buggy, two entries, Eloise and James Draggoo and Ethelyn, Alice and Billy Baker of Concord.

Decorated Bicycles, James Monroe and Earl William Kinsey of St. Joe and Howard Burton Benninghoff of Fort Wayne.

The float displayed by the local Fish and Game Association is deserving of special mention. It was unique in conception, and in point of workmanship left nothing to be desired, consisting as it did, of an elevated platform upon which displayed heads of animals dressed and tanned hides, fish heads, etc., many were of the opinion it should have captured a prize. The ox team and wagon, entered by David Gerden, was perhaps the greatest thing as regards novelty in the entire parade. The public schools were represented by a float in which young children seated in the mouth of a horn of plenty, were the nations greatest boon. It was a beautiful float, both as regards it's conception and in the artistry displayed in it's building. Freed Hershberger of Millersburg, Indiana, who is the contractor of the St. Joe High School and Community Building, now under construction, is to be commended for the splendid spirit he showed by entering this contest, we like men of this type.

The W. C. T. U. had a fine float, an auto trimmed in pure white, the emblem of purity, letters of yellow W. C. T. U. across the back, work of decoration beautiful in its simplicity. We have not room to comment on all the entries in this parade, suffice to say all reflect credit upon the part of the entrants. The judges, Dr. Baumgartner of Spencerville, Glen Abel of Peru and Earn Johnson of Concord, announced the prize winners as follows:

Best motor drawn float, $5.00, W. C. T. U.
Best horse drawn float, $5.00, Roy Keller.
Best fantastic, Ox team, $5.00, David Gerden.
Best decorated bicycle, $2.00, James Monroe.
Best decorated pony outfit, $2.00 Ethelyn Baker.
Best decorated horse, $2.00, Priscilla Borthwick.

In the sports contest, which was next in order, the prizes were awarded in this order:

Barrel rolling race, Gerald Stemen, winner, three entrants.
Boys' Twin race, Moore and Chapman, winners, eight entrants.
Jumping contest, Roy Koch, winner, eight entrants.
Girls' race, Baker and Bailey, winners, eight entrants.
Barrel tilting contest, Forest Beams, winner, two entrants.

This ended the afternoon program.

The Home Coming committees are to be congratulated for the manner in which they did their work, it reflects great credit upon those who's toil and public spirit made this affair possible. People who have never taken upon themselves the responsibility of "pulling across" an effort of this kind are sometimes unappreciative of the efforts of others. Those who have, know, and they will vouch for us when we say, from the bottom of our hearts, we thank you.

In going over the registration books we find many from a distance, and we reproduce them:—

ST. JOE MAN ELECTROCUTED TUESDAY

Last Tuesday, the citizens of this community were shocked, when news was sent here announcing that Charles Jordan, a lineman in the employ of the Indiana Service Corporation, while at work at Butler Center, was electrocuted at 11:30 o'clock. His left arm came in contact with a live wire.

The body was taken to Garrett and from there to St. Joe, where it was left in the care of E. R. Kinsey, undertaker. Only a few days ago Mr. Jordan was with us, an active participant in the home coming preparations, having had charge of one of the stands. He was of a jovial and active disposition.

Mr. Jordan came to St. Joe some few years ago, while in the employ of the Central Union Telephone Co. It was, then, he met and married Miss Pauline Barney, whom with one son about five years of age, survive him. Mr. Jordan was a native of West Virginia, living near Huntington of that state.

The arrangements made today are that the body will lie in state at the home until Friday, when it will be shipped to the home of his parents at Milton, West Virginia, for burial.

ST. JOE TEACHER AND AUBURN ATTORNEY WED

A simple but pretty wedding was solemnized at the Church of Christ at Angola last Sunday afternoon when Miss Mary Lois Murphy became the bride of Howard S. Grimm. The church was beautifully decorated with summer flowers and the ring ceremony was performed by Rev. Harman of Angola. The attendants were Miss Marguerite Milliman, of this place and A. G. Hercules of Fort Wayne.

The bride wore a gown of pale yellow georgette trimmed in ecru lace. Her footwear was of blonde satin. Miss Milliman wore powder blue georgette and blonde satin footwear.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Grimm are well known here, Mrs. Grimm having graduated from the St. Joe High School in 1920 and having taught since in the local school. Mr. Grimm is a graduate of Cumberland University of Nashville, Tennessee, and a prominent lawyer of Auburn.

Mr. and Mrs. Charley Murphy and daughter, Vivian, of this place also attended the wedding.

Forty-nine persons were injured in automobile accidents in Fort Wayne during the month of August.

CASSEROLE HELPS MAKING A DINNER

One of Most Satisfactory to Serve Guests.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

If you have not discovered the possibilities of a casserole for making a dinner both delicious and easy to prepare, now is a good time to try it. An earthenware or glass baking dish with a close-fitting cover, is desirable if you have one, especially if you intend to bring the casserole to the table. But if you wish to experiment first with this method of cooking and have no casserole, a heavy enamel or aluminum saucepan or even an iron pot with a tight cover can be used. In this case the contents of the pan used for baking will, of course, have to be dished on a platter, which makes an extra piece to be washed. The casserole is a dish saver.

A casserole dinner is one of the most satisfactory to serve to guests when one is both cook and hostess. It can be cooked in the morning, and reheated at dinner time for half an hour or so. In this way the housekeeper is free to finish the other details of her dinner, and is spared that flustered and tired feeling that results from having too many last-minute foods on the fire. The meat or poultry cooked in a casserole, well seasoned and accompanied by the right vegetables, will be unusually fine in flavor because of the long, slow, moist cooking in the covered dish. It is also usually ready to serve in pieces of convenient size without carving at the table, and this is sometimes a boon to the one who has to do the carving.

What goes into the casserole: Any combination of meats and vegetables you think could be cooked well together by this method. The casserole enables you to have a "meal in one dish." It also offers an excellent way of using the less expensive cuts of beef, veal, lamb and pork. Fowls, oxtails, calf hearts and tongues, rabbits in season, and many small meats may be cooked to good advantage in a casserole. The preferred blend of flavors will govern the vegetables to go with these meats. As a rule, the meat should be cut in pieces of a suitable size for individual portions, seasoned and then seared and browned in fat. Vegetables are also cut into pieces of convenient size. Moisture in the form of gravy or water is needed. If one plans a tomato gravy, for example, or has meat stock on hand, the gravy may be made at the beginning of the cooking period. Otherwise the water juices drawn out of the meat and vegetables may be thickened at the time of serving the dinner. A tight-fitting lid keeps the steam inside the casserole and prevents the meat from drying out.

Source of Vitamines

Grapefruit is a good source of at least two vitamines, those called B and C, which help to prevent certain so-called deficiency diseases. The pleasant aromatic oder of grapefruit also literally makes the mouth water, or in other words starts the flow of digestive juices, and the acid that gives the tart flavor helps the food to move through the digestive tract in a healthful way.

Egg Yolk Is Invaluable in Diet of Young Child

Left-over egg yolks have many good uses. The egg yolk contains a larger percentage of iron than almost any other food. For this reason it is invaluable in the diet of children who get plenty of calcium from milk but are not likely to get enough iron. Egg yolks can be cooked hard without the addition of any fat, for they themselves contain a large amount of fat. This cooking can be satisfactorily done in a double boiler. Hard-cooked egg yolks mashed and seasoned make a very good filling for sandwiches. Egg yolks, raw or hard cooked, make good salad dressings. Chopped beef mixed with raw egg yolks contains a higher proportion of iron than almost any other meat dish. It can be broiled in cakes or baked in a roll. It has a very delicate flavor and is therefore recommended for the sick. Hollandaise sauce which consists chiefly of egg yolks and butter is good to serve with fish and is particularly appropriate for this purpose since most kinds of fish contain less iron than meat and far less fat. The proportions usually given for Hollandaise sauce are rather alarming for the economical housekeeper because of the large amount of butter called for. For every-day purposes a simpler sauce made out of 4 yolks, 2 teaspoonfuls of lemon juice, ½ cupful of water, with salt and cayenne pepper to taste will do. The ingredients should be combined in the top of a double boiler and cooked with great care over hot water. It is necessary to beat the mixture even after it is taken from the hot water to prevent curdling.

Watermelon Pickles Are Excellent for a Change

As a change from other sweet pickles this year, try some made from watermelons, which promise to be abundant. Only the white portion of the rind is used. The red heart of the watermelon can be eaten as usual.

The following recipe has been tested by the United States Department of Agriculture:

For each two pounds of watermelon rind allow

2 cupfuls sugar
2 cupfuls vinegar
2 sticks cinnamon
½ tablespoonful cloves
½ tablespoonful allspice

Trim off the red portion and outer rind of the watermelons, which are best used at the height of the season, and in ripe, fresh, condition. Cut the white part into pieces of suitable size and cook until tender, for about 15 minutes, in a part of water to which one teaspoonful of salt has been added, and drain well. Put into a sirup made of the vinegar, sugar and spices, and cook about fifty minutes, or until clear. If the vinegar is very acid it may be necessary to dilute it. Much of the success in all pickles lies in using a well-flavored vinegar. Bottle the pickles in usual way.

Smooth Chipped Places on Edges of Glasses

Jelly glasses, drinking glasses, and fruit jars frequently become chipped. Not only are chipped edges unpleasant, but they also afford a lodging for micro-organisms and not infrequently for soap used in washing. The chipped places on the edges of tumblers and other glass articles can be made smooth by rubbing down with fine emery paper, or with fine sandpaper if the emery is not available. To avoid breathing the glass dust, one should tie a dampened cloth over the nose and mouth. Such repair as this is quite commonly carried out where food is sold and served in quantities, emery wheels instead of emery paper being used to smooth down the chipped and broken edges. In this case, too, precautions should be taken to avoid breathing the glass dust.

Canning Pimentos

Pimentos to be canned should be packed without water, it is stated in the latest Farmers' Bulletin on canning, No. 1471-F, "Canning Fruits and Vegetables at Home." This is because the processing brings out a thick liquor in the can. The skins of the pimentos must first be removed by immersing them in hot oil or placing them in a hot oven. If you have surplus pimentos to can, be sure to send for the bulletin, which gives all necessary time tables and detailed directions.

PROPER HEIGHT FOR THE KITCHEN SINK

Women of Different Sizes Need Sinks of Varied Heights.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The right height for the kitchen sink depends on the height, length of arm, and general build of the person who is to use it. Any homemaker can test this out easily for herself by placing the dishpan at various heights until she finds the most comfortable one. Most sinks are set too low. Thirty-six inches from the rim to the floor is often given as a good average height for the sink.

Watch Elimination!

Good Health Depends Upon Good Elimination.

RETENTION of bodily waste in the blood is called a "toxic condition." This often gives rise to a dull, languid feeling and, sometimes, toxic backaches and headaches. That the kidneys are not functioning properly is often shown by burning or scanty passage of secretions. Thousands have learned to assist their kidneys by drinking plenty of pure water and the occasional use of a stimulant diuretic. 50,000 users give Doan's signed endorsement. Ask your neighbor!

Through fire, gas, fog, mist, rain or hail a tank can be kept to a safe course without the crew's having to get out to take its bearings, when the new gyroscopic "eye," being perfected by army scientists at Baltimore, is installed.

This "eye" is a device attached to the tank's machinery, says Popular Science Monthly, that indicates just where the tank is on a map, drawn to scale, of the land being crossed. It is controlled by a compass on the rear of the tank. As the tank moves, its exact path is marked with a needle on the map.

AROUND THE HOME

Household Research

Every time that one of the little articles in this home-making series deals with some new device or convenience for the housewife, I receive a great sheaf of letters from readers inquiring where the article may be obtained. I am nearly always able to give a prompt answer, giving the name and address of the maker.

Now, there is no mystery or secret about this. My sources of information are open to every woman in this country, if she will but look through the advertising columns of the magazines and newspapers. The first step that any manufacturer takes to create a demand for his product is to broadcast advertisements of it. Such "ads" generally read: "If your dealer cannot supply it, write us direct." Of course, the dealer, when he keeps getting inquiries about any article, puts it in stock, and there you are!

In many cases these new devices are advertised some time before they appear in the shops. By sending a line, or cutting out a coupon, any reader may obtain an illustrated folder describing the article, and learn its price. This folder can be turned over to the dealer (unless one wishes to order direct), and the article may then be seen before it is bought. The attractive novelties described in this department shortly before Christmas were nearly all so new that they were not yet on the market; that is, they were not yet widely distributed to the shops. By clipping out the advertisement and sending for the printed matter I was able to write an article and give readers the address of the maker in time for them to order the novelties as Christmas gifts. Any woman reader of the magazines might have done this for herself, of course.

This household research is what keeps any home-maker up to the minute and makes her the envy of her neighbors, who wonder how she happens to know all about the newest equipment, odd little accessories, and unusual foods. A two-cent stamp, or even a postcard, will bring full information, and the reader may then buy or not, as she chooses. We must be on the lookout for better utensils, cleansers, special furniture ideas, fabrics, and ingenious mechanical devices. And the advertising column is the treasure chest where we may find all these things.

The Conserve Closet

"What in the world are you doing, Clarjase? You look as if you were putting up your summer preserves, and here it is only the middle of February!" The alert young woman on the threshold looked questioningly at the pot of boiling sirup, sniffed the fragrant air, and peered into the array of jelly glasses on the window sill.

"Making orange and grapefruit marmalade this morning," was the reply. "Tomorrow I'm going to make my year's supply of apricot-pineapple marmalade. There's a delicious combination for you, by the way."

"Well, it certainly sounds good. But I never heard of putting up a year's supply of any preserve-closet stuff at this time of year."

"Why, this is the ideal time to make all sorts of marmalades and conserves that can be made without the fresh summer fruits," responded the little housewife. "Oranges and grapefruit are plentiful during the very early spring, and this year they have been cheaper than ever before, it seems to me. I am making some bitter orange marmalade, some grapefruit, and some combined orange and grapefruit.

"Another delectable marmalade, as I just said, is made of dried apricots or peaches (apricots are better, I think), combined with fresh or canned pineapple. To make it I cut up a half-pound of the apricots and soak them overnight. Next morning I drain them and add the grated pulp of one large pineapple or two small ones. Add a cupful or less of water and boil the fruit ten minutes. Then add the sugar—one scant cupful of sugar to one full cupful of fruit—and simmer slowly for an hour or an hour and one-half. Keep the gas very low.

"I put up several dozen of these marmalades during the cold, raw days, when it is a pleasure, instead of a torment to work in the warm kitchen and bend over the boiling fruit. This saves me many hours of hot work during the summer, and fills my shelves with delicious conserves for breakfast and afternoon tea."

HOW MANY WOMEN GET UP SINGING

Two Women Find Health Essential to Happiness

MRS. BELLE THOMPSON
ROUTE 3, ROSSVILLE, GEORGIA

Springtime streamed in through the open windows. The green fields of Georgia were basking in the sunshine. Somewhere a bird was trilling. It was a day to be happy.

But the pale woman at the table sighed and pushed away her plate. Nothing tasted right. She couldn't eat much. She couldn't sleep well, either. She was so weak, it was hard to do her work. When the baby cried, she wanted to cry, too.

She had not been well for four years. Her husband watched her with a man's helpless expression. But his mother knew a remedy.

"My mother-in-law," says Mrs. Belle Thompson, Route 3, Rossville, Ga., "told me of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash. I took six bottles of the Vegetable Compound. I could sleep and would get up in the morning singing and feeling fine. I am the mother of three children, and always after the babies came I had to take treatments, but I can truly say that this last time I have only used the Sanative Wash. It does more good than the treatments. It keeps me on my feet to care for my children and I do most of my work. I feel it my duty to let you know how both of the medicines have helped me."

Another Happy Woman

Decatur, Illinois.—"I took your medicine for weakness. I would sometimes have to hold myself up with my hands. I was this way for five years, off and on. I read in the newspapers where Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has helped a lot of women, and I thought I would take it. I am now getting better so fast that every month I can feel a difference. My work now is cooking. If you like, you may use these facts as a testimonial. I am willing to help you boost your medicine."—Mrs. Irene Remp, 635 Greenwood Ave., Decatur, Ill.

This dependable medicine has been in use for over fifty years.

Loopholes

Chief Justice Taft, at a Washington reception, was advocating certain law reforms.

"These reforms," he said, "will be good for the lawyer, too."

"A young minister of the modernist school was haranguing a millionaire.

"'Can a rich man,' he asked, 'go through the eye of a needle?'

"The millionaire chuckled and poked the young minister in the ribs.

"'Why, my boy,' he said, 'you should see the little bits of loopholes my lawyer has dragged me through.'"

Leads in Maple

New York state produced more maple sugar and syrup this year than Vermont. Of the large producing counties in the state, Wyoming county stands at the head with a production of 96,000 pounds.

As a rule, sharp business men are rather blunt.

Word More or Less

A colored man was slowly looking over cantaloupes on the fruit and vegetable counter of a Senate avenue store. The clerks were busy at other counters.

"How much these melons?" the man asked in a sing-song voice none too distinct.

"What's that?" snapped the storekeeper, a bit impatient at being interrupted while he was weighing sugar.

"I said, how much these breakfast melons?" said the colored man, attempting to be more explicit.—Indianapolis News.

"Why don't you pay attention?" he shouted?

"I never pay anything," the deadbeat snorted.—Good Hardware.

HOME, DAD AND THE BOY

By FRANK H. CHELEY

(© W. N. Cheley, Denver, Colo.)

The Alibi Dad

HIS stock excuse is "too busy."

He is a good friendly fellow, but he never delivers. His intentions are good, but his self-starter is out of fix.

He fully intends to pal with his boy, but his middle name is "As-soon-as-I-can-get-to-it."

He always finds himself engulfed in an emergency and so begs off with the kid until a later time.

He belongs to forty-nine committees for the deaf, dumb and blind; serves on the Board of Directors of the Orphans' Home; but his own boy gets his inspiration and man-contact with a "total stranger."

There is one committee he fails on utterly—the committee of one to give his own boy a square deal.

He is the Dad who "Could tear down the world

And build it up new,
If he did half the things
He intended to do."

He is High Past Master at the Good Intentions Association.

"Mother, tell me a funny story, please."

"Wait, son, your father will be home by and by and he will tell us both one."

Father was the Chief Alibier!

APPLE PIE

The really valuable apple pie is to be found not so much in restaurants as in rural homes. There the pie is carefully compounded according to ancient and approved rules, and aftr having been baked a delicate operation lifts the upper crust in order that the steaming apple slices underneath may be made more enticing by the addition of butter and sugar, both being melted by the heat. An ancient practice, now often neglected, added nutmeg as well.

But, alas! Satan often contrives to mar perfection, and so it comes about that in due time pies made of dried appes appear, though this evil, thanks to the canneries, is diminishing. Evaporated apples form inadequate material for pies, but they are far superior to the farm-dried product, regarding which the less said the better The apples, let us hope, will reach the pie-crust in their natural state, in which event, Thanksgiving Day should be marked by more than the normal volume of thankfulness.—Hartford Currant.

Obituary

Elizabeth Ellen Provines, daughter of William and Lefler Prosser, was born in Ashland county, Ohio, Nov. 9, 1845. Her parents moved tn Indiana when Elizabeth was eight years old and settled on section ten in Jackson township, DeKalb county. She was one of twelve children, of whom only one, Mrs. Maria Coy of Auburn, survives.

On March 28, 1867 she was marrid to John A. Provines, who preceded her in death eleven yars ago. To them were born six children: Henry, deceased; Mrs. Minnie Tyndle of Spencerville; Mrs. Clauda Shutt, deceased; Mrs. Ella Fischer of Pleasant Lake; Mrs. Ethel Walter of Fort Wayne and John of Urbana, Ill.

Mr. and Mrs. Provines moved from the farm to Spencerville in 1872, where they became established in the drug business and served as Postmaster. In 1874 they erected the only brick building of that kind in Spencerville. Mr. Provines was a veteran of the Civil War.

Mother Provines has been the Sunday School teacher of a large number of those who are now men and women of the community. By her interest in and faithfulness to the church work, she endeared herself to her Pastors and was often inquired about at the Conferences.

She loved the aesthetic in life and the beauties of nature never passed her unnoticed.

Only God, Himself and the leaves of her Bible could ever tell of the hours of communion, fellowship and comfort, which she derived from her knowledge and practice of the spiritual realities. Her bibles are well-worn and efficiently marked. She was a member of the Methodist Episcopal church and when not in her accustomed place, her Pastor knew she was either out of town or sick

She was 80 years, 9 months and 24 days old.

Funeral services were held from the Spencerville M. E. Church, Friday afternoon, Rev. R. S. Brown, pastor, officiatng. with E. R. Kinsey of St. Joe s funeral director. Burial was made in Evergreen cemetery at Auburn.

CARD OF THANKS

We, the children, wish to express our appreciation to our Spencerville friends for their assistance and kindness shown our mother in her few weeks if illness, also for the consoling words and friendship shown, in our bereavement.

VITAL SEED CORN

A good way to dry ears of seed corn is to string them, suspending the strings of ears in an open shed or loft, the ears not being permitted to touch one another.

The vitality of seed corn often is reduced by leaving it in a sack or pile for even a day after gathering. With some moisture in the cobs and kernels, the ears begin to sour or mildew in a remarkably short time during warm weather. If left on the plant long after ripening, the kernels may sprout or mildew during warm, wet weather or be injured by freezing.

Seed ears should be picked, therefore, as soon as thoroughly ripe and placed where they will be safe. If they contain much moisture when picked they must be stored in such a way that there will be free circulation of air around each ear.

HORNS THAT NEVER HOOK

A simple method of dehorning young calves is to use a caustic on the undeveloped horns. Either caustic soda or caustic potash may be employed. Sticks of these about the size of a lead pencil may be bought at drug stores.

For best results, the operation should be performed when the calf is a week or ten days old, when the knob or bud is only loosely attached to the skull and appears more as a part of the skin. Before application of any chemicals of this kind the hair should be clipped off over and around the horns and vaseline applied around the edge of the hair to prevent the caustic from spreading and causing a sore on the skin adjacent to the horn. These caustic sticks should be handled with great care. One end should be wrapped with paper to protect the hands and the uncovered end be slightly moistened and rubbed on the horn buttons two or three times.

Sudan Grass Found Best Emergency Crop for Hay

At the Iowa experiment station sudan grass has proved to be the best nonleguminous emergency hay and pasture crop. It may be seeded after corn planting, as it is very drought resistant. About 15 to 20 pounds of seed per acre sowed broadcast or drilled is the general practice. The seedbed is prepared as for corn. If a seed crop is wanted, drill in rows wide enough to permit of cultivation and use 5 to 10 pounds of seed.

The crop is not available for pasture until about July 1 and ceases to be productive after the first frost. There is no advantage in seeding before the middle of May or later than July 20.

Two cuttings gave higher yields of hay of better quality but there was great difficulty experienced in drying it. The better way is to cut when the seed is in the soft, dough stage and pasture the aftermath. Cut with a mower and cure in the swath. A binder may be used successfully when only one hay crop is made. Sudan and soy beans grow successfully when mixed.

Scours in Lambs Caused Usually by Carelessness

Experience has caused many breeders to believe that scours in lambs, like the sore eye trouble, is generally the result of carelessness. Heavy feeding of grain, soon after lambing, may cause scours, but the main trouble is caused by failure to keep the ewe's udder milked clean while the lamb is small, too small to use all the milk. This old stale milk will poison the lamb and affect its digestive organs. It is easier to prevent than to cure. When a ewe brings a lamb, feed grain sparingly until the lamb can use all her milk, and keep the excess milk stripped from her udder, during this time, and you will seldom have scours in your lambs. In the first ten days of a lamb's life, it either gets a good start in life or a set-back. A lamb well started is about half made. About 90 per cent of the time a sheep is just what its master made it, but that covers a lot of ground and is another story.

SURPRISE PARTY AND REUNION

The home of J. C. Knisely, Edon, Ohio, was the scene of much enjoyment Sunday, Septembr 5, when 69 relatives and friends came to tell John that he would have a birthday September 10.

Since John didn't know that his relatives were coming, they looked like strangers to him and he was going to direct them on farther where there was a Home Coming, but when peope began to ask about dinner John looked at the crowd and shook his head.

In a short time a table was made and enough dinner put on to feed many more. Everything that heart could wish for was on the table even a large birthday cake.

This was the first meeting of this kind held in the Knisely family for several years and as everyone enjoyed themselves so well a unanimous vote decided that it be continued as a family reunion.

The following officers were elected to take charge another year: J. C. Knisely, Edon, O., President; S. S. Knisely, Sandusky O., Vice President; Nona B. Pearson, Antwerp, Ohio, Secretary.

Once a lion was telling a leopard why he roared in the jungle. "Doing business openly and with plenty of advertising," the lion said, "is the way I got my reputation. I earned the name of king of beasts by blowing my horn. Always let the other fellows know you are around and they will respect you and never bother you." A rabbit hiding nearby heard the advice and decided to try it. So he filled his lungs with a great breath and started out to terrorize all the other animals by roaring like a lion. A wolf, learning of the rabbit's whereabouts by his roar, hopped onto the rabbit and ate him up.

If you haven't got the goods there is no need in advertising. And if you don't advertise it's a pretty good sign that you haven't got the goods.

He flung himself into the work with feverish ambition and belief. Baxter he saw little of these days nor did he tell him of his plans or state that he had secured an office. Baxter had told Caleb that he was busy trying to find the right tract of land for his "Little Colony."

"They are inclined to be fussy," he said. "I've got one or two propositions, but I'm afraid they won't exactly suit. And I've got to swing this deal." By which Caleb inferred that he needed money badly for his affair with the stenographer.

"Not going to get married, are you?" inquired Baxter jestingly. "I suppose you were browsing over at El Nido when you acquired that tan. She must be some girl. I told you you'd fall hard. The mater's due at Del Monte tomorrow," he went on. "I thought I'd need her to help me out, but, if I pull off this stock deal, I'll be in clover. Good job I didn't write her. Something usually shows up if you're in luck. If you're not, why, that's all there is to it."

He frowned. Caleb saw him looking at his picture gallery on the bureau:

"How are things going in that direction?" he asked.

"Meaning Mary Morgan? That's her name." Baxter picked up the silver frame. His face was still clouded. "She's getting hard to handle. Still hanging on to her job. Wants me to marry her, but insists upon the child being born, anyway. Says she always wanted one. She's an enigma to me. I think I'll be able to transfer her to a gun-metal setting before long. Here's hoping! Tell me about your doings across the bay, for that's where you were, of course."

But Caleb did not care to discuss Betty, and the telephone broke their chat.

"It's the Morgan girl," said Baxter. "She's getting to be a pest, but she's got to be jollied. Be sorry for me, Caleb."

Caleb cocked his eyebrow. The reference to the stenographer as "the Morgan girl," after all that had happened and still lay between them, struck him as particularly callous. Still, Baxter often spoke with affected bravado. Caleb kept silent.

CHAPTER IX

Progress

The work went swiftly. His preliminary specifications ended and the drawings traced and blue-printed, Caleb started on his model. From the maps of the geodetic survey he pantographed a scale enlargement of the lower end of the Caliente plain and much of the surrounding district, including Gabilan mountain.

Baxter had run down to Del Monte to pay a duty call to his mother. Duty, in Baxter's case, Caleb surmised, as with his affection, was largely a matter of keeping his mother in good humor whereby the financial supplies might be more lavishly and easily forthcoming. Both were too selfish, after years of indulgence and spoiling, to have much genuine love for each other. In one of the gossiping weeklies at the club—not Vedder's Pioneer—Caleb noticed an item that caught his eye with the mention of the Baxter name.

"It is rumored by Dame Gossip," ran the paragraph, "that Ted Baxter, who, by the way, has been hanging up some creditable scores in the golf tournament on the Del Monte links, is not overjoyed at the insinuating chatter that persits in suggesting that he may shortly acquire a stepfather. Gossip has been rife in this direction before, but new intentions seem to be serious. It is hinted that young Baxter may emulate the example of his stepfather-to-be. A double wedding is not entirely out of prospect, according to those who claim to have watched Ted strolling on the fair-greens in the early mornings with a certain demoiselle who has inherited a fortune from interests closely connected with the lumber industry."

Caleb could not guess, and did not care to, the name of the girl referred to. And Caleb whistled under his breath.

"If Mary Morgan sees this item," he told himself, "she is likely to stir up things. I wonder how Ted's stock deal is prospering?"

Baxter had not told him the name of the shares with which he was speculating. But he noticed the girl the next morning as he passed through an outer office to Cox's private room by appointment. She was not in tailored clothes but in a lighter, fuller costume. Her face was startlingly pale save where she rouged her cheeks and reddened her full lips. The dark half-rings beneath her eyes emphasized their glance and, for a moment, Caleb felt it full upon him. He thought that it half besought, half challenged him not to speak of her to Cox. And then the mouth grew sullen and she turned away as Cox's secretary held the door open for Caleb.

"Come to accept the Beaver Lake proposition?" asked Cox, rising to meet him. His brows contracted and his look hardened a trifle when Caleb shook his head.

"I think not. I've come to make a proposition instead."

"Yes?" said Cox shortly, his tone as noncommittal as the tick of a clock, while he shoved the cigar box across his desk.

Caleb cut the tips of all ten of his fingers on the shining surface of Cox's desk and leaned forward a little.

"You said that the Crystal Springs company is in the business of buying, conveying and selling water. It is the first consideration that holds my proposition. What will you give me for two million daily gallons of pure water, with constant renewed supply, within a reasonable distance of Golden and capable of development at costs that will leave you ample profit?"

Cox lit his cigar slowly and, under cover of the smoke, closely surveyed Caleb's face.

"Two million gallons daily? You mean what will I give you for your information as to where I can secure this?"

"And my plans for development. Conservation, storage, filtration, collection, piping, pumping?"

"Ah! Pumping? It isn't on this side of the bay, then?"

The question came swiftly, backing a swifter glance.

"You told me yourself that the water development on the peninsula was practically developed to its limit," checked Caleb. "It is across the bay."

"We have many prospects there ourselves. Plans half developed. It is unlikely that you offer me anything new. Have you spoken to Mr. Hinckley about it?"

"Hardly. I wished to talk with you direct. I believe you have not looked into this particular method of exploitation or more than suspected the source of supply."

Found Baxter Changing His Clothes.

Cox smiled and pushed aside some papers carelessly.

"If that is so," he answered, "I will give you one-half a cent per gallon for your secret."

"Ten thousand dollars? You are not liberal, Mr. Cox. I am not visionary in this matter. I am prepared to show you and your engineers a complete project, without estimating exact costs. But, if my general plans are not approved by Mr. Hinckley and his associates, if my source is not authentic, if it is not sufficient, I do not figure that I have anything to sell. But I want to know where I stand before I submit facts and figures."

For a moment they remained silent, the elder seated, Caleb standing, Cox patently appraising him. The latter spoke first.

"How much do you want?"

"One hundred thousand dollars and recognition of myself as the originator of the plan. I do not expect to in any way displace Mr. Hinckley. I have not his experience. Quite probably I lack his ability. But I should want an appointment as consulting engineer on the work, and publicity as the projector."

Cox beat a little tattoo with his fingers on the desk top. He looked out of the window.

"I'm not the Crystal Springs company," he said finally. "I can't buy pigs in pokes. You'll have to show me more of your project. If it's all you say I have no doubt we can come to terms."

"I have stated my terms."

"You'll have to take a chance with us, Warner," Cox said with a smile. "We are not exactly highway robbers, we westerners. And we don't mind paying for information. But I can't deal in 'ifs.' Send up your model, bring in your papers tomorrow afternoon. I'll have Hinckley here. We'll talk further. If it promises well I'll get the directors together and you shall present your proposition at the meeting. That agreeable?"

They shook hands on it and Caleb left the office practically content. After dinner at the club, alone, he found a telegram awaiting him in his rooms. It was a notice from the local bank that the deal for his house had been completed and that the purchase price, eight thousand dollars, less certain fees, now lay to his order.

"Which," said Caleb, as he stuffed the message back in its yellow envelope, "rounds out the day very nicely."

Next morning Caleb got up late and leisurely, three hours after his usual time. He ordered breakfast sent up from the dining room and lingered over his bath and shaving before he settled down in the window, grapefruit before him, the daily paper to one side.

From the outer page a face looked at him that seemed familiar, though, for the moment, he could not place it. Even the flaring two-column head did not supply the link immediately.

"ROMANCE IN HIGH LIFE
"Popular Society Widow
"Weds Eastern Man
"and Millionaire."

Then he read the caption under the halftone picture: "Mrs. Ernestine Leroy Baxter, whose quiet wedding is the talk of Nob Hill."

It was the resemblance to Ted that Caleb had noticed. He read the article. The Del Monte correspondent referred to it as a romance. It appeared that the couple had been married quietly at Monterey and had left for a protracted honeymoon in the private car of the bridegroom.

It was not Caleb's affair and he had his own business to attend to. Baxter would show up in his own good time. Caleb finished his breakfast and went down to his office to superintend the packing of the model and its dispatch to Cox. Later he visited his bank. It was noon before he got back to the apartment house.

He found Baxter changing his clothes. His face was pasty, the whites of his eyes congested. To Caleb the signs were plain. Baxter had been making a night of it.

"Seen the paper, I suppose?" Baxter greeted Caleb. "There's the devil to pay all around. The mater's gone and so's my income. Look at that."

He picked up a slip of pink paper from his dressing table and handed it to Caleb. It was a check for one thousand dollars.

"Signed by papa-in-law," said Baxter sarcastically. "A present to a good boy. God bless you—and goodby!

"Do you know what she did?" he asked truculently. "Mortgaged every bean she had to catch this millionaire. Played her last card on the red heart and won. She had the right to do what she liked with my father's money under the will, but it was understood that she was to look out for me.

"Soon as I got down to Del Monte I saw what her game was. And I wasn't welcome. The bridegroom-on-the-hook looked at me as if he expected to see a little boy in knickerbockers. She's kidded him along properly.

"No use looking at me in that Methodistical way, Caleb. I'm bitter and I have a right to be. She was twenty-four when she married my father and she never intended to be a mother. Thought it 'ud spoil her figure. I've heard her say so. I was only a kid when I overheard that, but it illuminated things a lot. I knew then why I never had a mother like other kids. I was an unfortunate accident. A snake has more affection for its eggs than she ever had for me.

"I tell you, Cal', the way she acted round that old fool would make you sick. With the airs and graces of a young girl. Faugh! She wanted me to go back to Golden. I looked too much like an animated birth certificate to suit her play. No doubt she told him what a wayward youth I was. When I wouldn't stand up to the wedding—we had a sweet row about that and I boiled over a bit—she calmly told me she was broke. Said her trousseau had exhausted her bank account and her capital. Yesterday afternoon this check came to me in a letter from her. I tore the letter up. Hoped I'd settle down to something serious and inclosed a check from her husband. Said she didn't expect to see me for some time. They were going to travel extensively.

Scarcity of Material Makes "Briars" Costly

It is said that French soil no longer yields the precious briar bush. Spain has but little, Italy has about run dry, and that it is in Corsica that the finest specimens are found. It is the root of the shrub that matters. In North Africa the light and sandy soil renders the texture of the woody root rather porous, and this "briar" is used for cheaper grades of pipe.

In Corsica the roots have a tough fight to gain hold in the rocky soil. A Corsican briar root may weigh 15 or 25 pounds when it is brought rough to the factory, but when cut down this will give no more than a dozen blocks for use. From these emerge, perhaps, two really tip-top, flawless "best English briars." And as such a pipe beauty can be fashioned only from root which is in the region of a hundred years' growth, it is not to be wondered that a perfect briar pipe is costly.—Manchester Guardian.

Famous Mountain

Iron mountain is one of the isolated knobs of the St. Francois mountains, in St. Francois county, Mo. It is 81 miles south of St. Louis, on the Iron Mountain railroad, and is 1,078 feet in elevation above the sea and 200 feet above the adjoining valley. This mountain contains deposits of specular hematite iron ore.

FETCHING FROCKS FOR AUTUMN; COATS OF STRAIGHTLINE STYLING

THANKS to Madame Mode autumn days will not find us lacking in ideal frocks for wear in cool crispy weather. One has but to glimpse the new fashions which especially feature an array of fetching woolen frocks, to feel assured that not only are we to be most becomingly attired but also these simple, colorful gowns will be most timely for practical daytime occasion.

These naive dress types, for which a widespread vogue is already bespoken, are styled for the most part of soft flannel or fine jersey in colors so delectable they are enough to coax anyone into the buying. Nothing prettier than the new wine shades can be conceived of, and therefore, small wonder is it that these glorious red shades are decidedly in the lead for fall. The new leaf shades are fascinating, too, and they include every splendid tone of green and brown which foliage displays and then there are the varied blues to think of from navy to soft pastel shades and one should keep in mind also that rust colorings are very smart.

Interesting from a color standpoint plus extreme novelty are the handsomely bordered flannels, which perhaps are inspired by the remembrance of the fanciful bordered silks for which there has been such a craze.

As to the coats we will wear this fall and winter, the advance models bring promise of color, gay and handsome. Stylists are pleased to refer to the newer tones and tints as foliage shades. These wondrous reds, golden yellows, winsome greens and burnished browns measure up in beauty to the coloring which nature gives to the trees of the forest at autumn time.

Nor are the colors themselves more interesting than the cunning with which they are wrought into novel patternings of plaids, stripes, checks, and other diverse designs. An outstanding number on the new color program is that of the two-toned effects. For instance, a burgundy red soft fabric has checks in the same color but in lighter vein, while a bottle green presents a patterning in just a tint of green. Blendings of blue are particularly effective and are sure to find favor with most of us. Two shades of blue, one in royal tone, the other a softer hue, are blended on a white woolen rough-surfaced weave presenting a patterning of wavy lines.

Other items which foretell the mode's trend include the fact of straightline styling for practical coats, also the slenderizing influence of drooping shoulder effects attained by sleeves which come from the neckline.

Coat on Newer Style Lines.

Then, too, stylists are taking great delight in contrasting one color with a bordering of another. This idea works out beautifully in the new dress flannels and a goodly number of dresses reveal collars, cuffs, belts and facings of the same fabric in a different color.

The chic and charm of these flannel or jersey frocks, if you prefer, for jersey is considered equally as smart, is in adhering strictly to a policy of simplicity when it comes to the making thereof. Any detail which tends to give a youthful appearance is approved. In the matter of neckline, turn-back collars are often employed and most every dress has a cunning belt of some kind. Skirt fulness is achieved by a discreet use of plaits at front or sides. A touch of embroidery sometimes enlivens the model, somewhat after the manner of the insignia worked on the blouse of the two-piece dress in the picture.

Other interesting detailing of these destined-to-be-popular woolen frocks stresses the bolero theme, the wide armhole, also tiers and scallops for skirts.

Dog Hospital New Idea in England

Four young women who are studying the care and cure of sick dogs at an animal hospital at Totteridge, Herts, England, intend, when they have completed their training, to take up work in various parts of the country as "district nurses" for dogs.

In their course of practical studies at the institution, which contains 300 kennels, they have discovered there are many dog lovers who do not understand how to manage their pets in times of illness.

According to the pioneer of the new profession, dog lovers with pets of comparatively small monetary value will, for reasons of affection, gladly pay as much as $25 for their treatment; and many people who for various reasons may be unable or unwilling to send their sick animals to "hospital" will probably be glad to avail themselves of the services of these "district nurses."

Has Several Broods

There is no native bird which attempts to equal the mourning dove in domestic accomplishments, says Nature Magazine. Its breeding season extends from early May until late September, and, if fate is lenient with the frail establishment of the bird, three or four broods may be raised to maturity with scarcely a pause between each family.

POULTRY

TUBERCULOSIS IS SPREAD BY HENS

The transmission of fowl or avian tuberculosis through the egg is a negligible factor in spreading the disease, according to the results of extensive experiments conducted by Dr. C. P. Fitch, division chief, and R. E. Lubbehusen and Ruth N. Dikmans of the veterinary medicine staff at University farm, St. Paul, Minn. The experiments have been running about a year and the experimenters have so far examined nearly 800 eggs laid by about 40 known tuberculous hens affected with various forms of the disease. Many of the eggs were examined by inoculation into the bodies of chickens and many others have been cultured. None of the birds, or a few animals so inoculated, has as yet developed tuberculosis.

"These results would seem to indicate," say the authors, "that tubercle bacilli are not usually transmitted through the egg and that the danger in this manner is not great."

Tuberculosis among chickens is especially frequent in Iowa, Minnesota, North and South Dakota, and Wisconsin. Close housing necessary in winter months contributes to the spreading of infection. Tuberculosis in farm flocks becomes significant because of its relation to the tuberculosis of cattle and swine. In 21 out of 25 cases examined by a Nebraska station veterinarian it was found that tuberculosis of swine was contracted from barnyard fowls. Experiments have also shown that the skin form of tuberculosis of cattle may be produced by the fowl or avian type.

Late Built Houses Are Liable to Cause Ills

Many poultrymen are finding that poultry houses built too late in the fall are apt to result in colds and roup.

Before the birds, especially pullets, are put in a new poultry house the floor as well as the lumber used in construction must be thoroughly dry. A house built of seasoned lumber during the month of August has ample time for drying out before the birds are put into their winter quarters.

The essentials of a good poultry house are: Dryness, as this prevents colds and roup; fresh air, which keeps the birds in good health; sunlight, nature's best disinfectant, and floor space so that during confinement the birds will have room to exercise.

For the best results a poultry house should be built for units of 200 birds. This requires a house 20 by 40 feet. It should face southward and should be located on high, dry ground, and where it gets some shelter. Glass windows on the east and west sides with curtain windows in the front will allow all the sunlight and fresh air that the birds require.

Protection of the flock against daily and seasonal changes of weather and climate is the purpose of a poultry house. For New Jersey conditions, the New Jersey multiple unit laying house gives best results. The plans for this house are given in Circular 152 of the New Jersey Experiment station, New Brunswick, N. J., which can be obtained free on application.

Good Poultry Business to Cull Out Nonlayers

Just as a good business proposition, those hens that are not laying at this time of the year should be culled out of the flock and sold. They have probably finished their year's work and will eat expensive feed and use valuable house room the rest of the year. The poor-laying hen at this time of the year is lazy, overfat, probably beginning to molt, and has bright yellow coloring left in her legs and beak if she is of the yellow-skinned breeds. On the other hand, the good layer is always active, looks healthy, will not molt until late in the fall, and has put the yellow from her skin into the yolks of all the eggs she has laid.

Any flock owner can cull hens by these indications. If he does not have confidence in his ability to do a good job of culling he can shut his culls up for a few days and see if they lay any eggs.

Good House for Geese

In order to make a success of goose raising the house should be on the ground. A building up off the ground would be much too dry. The goose house does not need to be expensive, ordinary rough lumber which is battened on the outside would be quite suitable. Earth should be thrown into the house so as to make the floor at least six inches—or, better, one foot—above the level of the ground outside. The eggs should be collected as soon as laid.

Depluming Mites

Hens are sometimes troubled with scabies, or depluming mites, which bite the skin at the base of the feathers and finally cause a loss of plumage. Mix four parts lard with one part flowers of sulphur, and rub this ointment on the parts where feathers are lacking. A loss of feathers around the back is sometimes caused by activities of the male birds. Washing the bare parts with commercial disinfectant solution may prove useful in destroying depluming mites.

Under the excellent direction of John Woodcox, the Home Coming Pageant and Comic Opera, "Saw Dust Rings," was given Monday evening to a large and appreciative audience. A postponement from Saturday night was necessary because of the drizzling rain that set in just as the show was to begin.

A group of about forty people of St. Joe and community comprised the personnel, and each of them is to be complimented upon his and her ability and cohesive spirit to assimilate the direction and work that must have been so necessary

The mixed chorus, achieved a professional air in their songs and action.

The Irish Colleens, ten girls, presented a pleasing picture, possessing as they do, the charm and grace of youth and intelligence. Their costumes were in character and after one glance they could have ben labeled "Indiana Peaches."

The Hottentots, a fierce and savage tribe, lookedjust like "Hottentots." Wearing only grass breech clouts, a spear and shield, rings in their noses, they gave a convincing portrayal of the "side show."

The persons playing and singing the principal roles were xcellent. Each one acted without embarrassment and sang in good voice.

The accompanying music was good and rendered in faultless fashion.

The size of the crowd in attendance was surprising, in view of the weather and postponement. It was estimated at 900. Apparently everybody enjoyed the performance.

Judging from the general tenor of the comments St. Joe and the surrounding community would favor another production, from the same group of persons and their capable director, Mr. Woodcox.

Owing to the wet condition of the street, Walter Baker experienced some difficulty with his trick ponies. In one act the pony wouldn't stay put. He objected to taking his flop, a la tramp.

No doubt, there were many of your friends and relatives here over last Sunday, but unless they registered at Home Coming on Saturday, we are unable to mention their being here.

Bert Jackson and Nathan Grain Co., can always be depended upon to do whatever is for the help of the town. The lumber for the stage was furnished free, and we wish to commend such a public spirit.

Considerable credit is due Aunt Kate Leighty for her fidelity to the registration of visitors, at the Home Coming last Saturday. She was on the job all day, meeting old friends and extending them greetings in behalf of her town.

Mrs. Sidie Leighty-Wager, remembered as the daughter of Alex Leighty, visited in the home of Mrs. Mary Bowman until Sunday. She enjoyed her visit, seeing many whom she remembered as her chums in yonder days. As you remember the Leightys were the early settlers of St. Joe, consequently those remaining, and by the way, Mrs. Bowman is the only one of the original stock, and their older children were, in a way, connected with the happenings of those days, as recalled by many of the Home Coming visitors. Even Mrs. Wager recalled some of the nutting and watermelon parties of her childhood, and she remembered, too where she went and just what happened. Her visit here was a pleasure, not only from the point of renewing acquaintances, but she became acquainted with the younger Leightys, whom she had never seen.

Tattoo Marks on Hogs Tell Owner

Simple Method Devised to Identify Owners After Animals Are Killed.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A simple method for placing tattoo marks on hogs so that they may be readily identified after slaughter has been devised by Dr. F. E. Murray, veterinarian of the United States Department of Agriculture. The principal need for such identification is for detecting the origin of any diseased hogs found at the slaughtering places and to trace the channels through which infection spreads.

Uses for Instrument.

A description of the instrument, methods of using it, and various practical uses for such identification marks, are described in Miscellaneous Circular Number 57, just issued by the United States Department of Agriculture.

The form of the instrument considered most suitable for tattooing hogs consists essentially of a metal holder about eighteen inches long, slotted to receive five blocks of babbit metal in which phonograph needles are embedded with the points protruding about a quarter of an inch. The needles are arranged to form numbers and letters.

Ordinary black automobile enamel is used as a tattooing pigment. It is applied to the needle points with a brush. The mark is applied by merely striking the hog smartly with the instrument, usually on the fore part of the back. Tattooing causes no injury to the meat or inconvenience to the hogs.

Work Is Permanent.

A tattoo mark, properly applied, resists all attempts to remove it and, after death, is as permanent as the skin itself. It is a definite means of preserving the identity of hogs between farm and market. Extensive tests have demonstrated the practicability of the device in tracing the origin of animal diseases and in identifying the ownership of diseased animals in mixed shipments. Numerous other practical uses suggest themselves, such as tracing the source of animal parasites, experimental work involving the study of dressed carcasses and identifying ownership in co-operative marketing.

A copy of the circular may be secured as long as the supply lasts by writing to the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

Inspection of Butter Is Improving Its Quality

Federal-state shipping point inspection of butter is having a marked influence in improving the quality of the product, the United States department of Agriculture has announced, publishing figures on the expansion of the service.

Beginning with one inspection in July, 1924, the department says, the federal-state butter inspection service in Minnesota has increased until at present five inspectors are required. The quantity of butter inspected during the year ending January 31, 1926, reached 80,416,687 pounds. The service is available at Duluth, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Chicago.

At the end of the year more than 80 per cent of all butetr inspected in Minnesota was 92 score or higher, as compared with less than 56 per cent at the beginning of the year. A marked decrease is shown also in the percentage of butter scoring 90 or less, the quantity in this class at the end of the year being 8 per cent of all butter made, compared with 19 per cent at the beginning of the year.

Sire Is of Importance

It pays to breed a mare to a good stallion or jack. Good young horses and mules are scarce and consequently they are bringing better prices this spring than for several years past. Indications are that during the next few years prices for good horses and mules will continue to advance because not enough have been raised to supply the demand. This scarcity is being felt this spring and will be more evident in the years to follow.

FARM FACTS

As you exclude burglars from the home, keep weeds out of the growing crop.

• • •

Before the grass gets too high is the time to go over the hayfields for their annual crop of small stones.

• • •

It is highly advisable to give baby chicks fresh ground to grow on. Plowing and liming the ground will help.

• • •

Spring-time is nursery-time on the farm. Chicks, pigs and lambs all pay big returns for time spent on them while they are getting their start.

• • •

The Jersey Black Giants are considered very excellent for general farm flocks as they have the size which makes them excellent for the purpose of roasters and capons.

• • •

Soy beans are a good hay pasture, seed crop and soil improvement crop for most sections. The crop may be grown successfully on acid soil, but if the field has not grown this crop previously, it is necessary to inoculate for best results.

Paint Up and Look Up

YOU may clean up a tramp and put his rags back on him and he will still hang his head. But give him new clothes and he will look up, with pride and self-respect.

You have publicly committed him to cleanliness and respectability.

This philosophy will apply to many owners of faded and run-down homes. When they clean up the yard, and paint up the house, they look up with pride and satisfaction.

And the neighbors follow their example.

It's as poor reasoning to clean up and neglect the painting as it is to wear a clean shave, and a dirty collar. There's nothing in either to inspire self-respect or the respect of others

Consult us about your painting right now during this general cleaning. Let's work together and when the clean up and paint up is finished, this town will be something to crow about.

You may be questioning what to use, and let us say here that we have taken the agency for the famous Sherwin Williams Paint and you will find here a full and complete line of this well known brand of paint.

SUNBEAM CABINET HEATER

This winter, don't move into one or two stove-heated rooms. Don't wear a shawl or coat to keep your back warm, while you toast your feet. Install the Sunbeam Cabinet Heater and you can live comfortably in every room in your home in the coldest zero weather.

This wonderful heating plant circulates warm air like a furnace instead of radiating heat like a stove. It requires no basement, but fits into your living-room or dining-room like any other fine piece of furniture. It is easy to take care of and replaces two or three stoves, making possible substantial savings in fuel.

We'd like to have you look it over today.

STATE GETS RIGHT TO CONDEMN LAND

Residents East of Waterloo Will Appeal Change of Highway to Higher Court

The state highway commission Monday won a victory in the DeKalb circuit court in its suits against Mrs. Rosella Smurr and Ora E. Bohler to condemn land wanted for the proposed new state route between Wateroo and the Nodine crossing.

Judge Arthur F. Biggs of Ligonier, sitting as special judge, held that the state has a right to appropriate the land to he purposes of the road. He decided that the land owners cannot under the law challenge the necessity or expediency of the relocation of the highway and that the courts cannot interfere.

By agreement of the parties, Frank Baltz of Spencer township, Philip Habig of Jackson township and Frank E. Rhodes of Spencer township were named by the court as appraisers. They were directed to qualify September 18 and to file their report September 25.

Guy Colerick and Edgar W. Atkinson, of counsel for the defense, at once filed a motion for a new trial. The motion was overruled. Notice of an appeal to the Indiana supreme court then was filed and the defense was ordered to post $500 appeal bond in each case within thirty days.

In appealing to the higher court, the defense will challenge the state's authority under the law to relocate a road. The attorneys contend that the commission only can make slight changes in the route of a highway, such as modifying curves, but insist that it has no right to abandon a road and build in another location to serve the same purposes.

Regardless of the appeal, the state will gain possession of the land when the appraisements are made and approved and the amount is deposited in court for the benefit of the landowners. The state then can proceed with the construction work, and it is understood that the pendency of the appeal will not delay the paving of the road. At least part of it will be done this fall, it is said.

In case the appraisement made by those apponted by the court is not satisfactory, an exception may be filed by either party. Then a jury trial is necessary, the jury finally fixing the amount to be paid for the land.

Counsel for the highway commission are C. D. Ross, first assistant attorney general and Capt. H. C. Springer of Butler.—Star.

EDUCATIONAL OPPORTUNITY FOR OUR YOUNG

There never was a time when the local school offered so much inducement for boys and girls to complete their high school courses. The boy or girl who completes a 4-year course in high school, with good, honest effort and endeavor, will have a good foundaion for life which he or she can ill afford to pass by. Many a lad has been permitted to stop school to earn "ready money" who should have been kept in school, by his parents; and many who have been kept in school, when they wanted to stop and earn money, have lived to thank thoughtful fathers and mothers for their wise acts.

Parents should let nothing interfere with the education of their children. Let them have, and if need be, compel them to take, all that the local schools can give them. It will not be too much preparation for their lives.

BAND CONCERTS CLOSE SEPTEMBER 29

The band concerts for the summer have been quite well attended and Director Woodcox states that for the next two weeks special attractions will be added to their regular program.

The Saxaphone Sextette will appear on the last band concert program, Wednesday evening, September 29. This is an unusual feature and you will enjoy it immensely. Don't miss it.

MOTORCYCLE ACCIDENT TWO BOYS HURT

St. Joe is figuring in the accident world just a little too frequent of late. Saturday evening Henry Keesler was brought home by the Kinsey ambulance, following motorcycle accident on the Baker hill north-east of town.

Henry Keesler and his pal, Jerry Douglas had started to Hicksville and when they were going down the Baker hill, they came upon a wagon suddenly, in turning out, they struck the corner of the hay rack. Henry was driving and consequently got the first blow. His right arm was badly cut, chest bruised and in their fall he was cut about the face and rendered unconscious for a time. Jerry was badly jammed up and reports are, he has several ribs broken.

Medical aid was called from Butler for Henry and on Monday he was about while Jerry was in bed. The speedometer registered forty miles per hour.

YOUNG MAN TAKES HIS LIFE

William Roscoe Stafford of Auburn, a steam fitter, took his life at Jackson, Mich., sometime between Saturday forenoon and Sunday morning by hanging himself in the belfry of a school house.

The young man, in the employ of the Lige Heating & Ventilating company of Auburn, had charge of the work of installing a heating plant, one of four which the local company is placing in school buildings near Jackson. He was missed Saturday morning by his fellow workmen and a search was started but his body was not discovered until Sunday morning, hanging by a rope which he attached to a beam and evidently jumped into space in the belfry at the top of the roof.

The body was returned to Auburn and burial was made Tuesday afternoon.

FLANNEL OR JERSEY FOR TOTS; LARGE HAT NO LONGER BANNED

SIMPLE styling marks the colorful wool jersey and flannel frocks which little folks will wear this autumn and winter. Almost unadorned are some of the cunningest models, with just a subtle touch of embroidery here and there. However, whatever the wee dress may lack in fanciful creation it makes up for by flaunting the brightest, happiest colors one can imagine.

Robin redbreast himself boasts no more entrancing color than the new shade which is named in his honor and which is particularly attractive in the fine French flannels and jersey clothes now so much in demand for children's dresses.

Little Frock of Simple Styling.

The little gown in the picture is very practical and one which could be easily reproduced by the mother who aspires to do home sewing. It is of robin-red flannel and it is finished with the new narrow turnover collar. Because of the rosebud-embroidered ribbon necktie this little dress does not look so plain after all, so it behooves mother to take a few extra stitches and fashion several of these ribbon ties to "perky up" daughter's neat flannel play-hour dress.

It sure does require many frocks for little girls who play and play and romp and romp. Why not, in making them, apply the principle, "Variety is the spice of life" and alternate the one-piece frocks with a two-piece model or so? Bright and gay are the jersey dresses consisting of skirt and blouse in contrasting colors and they are a very smart item in the season's new showings.

Solid colored flannel or jersey bordered with a contrasting shade also works out effectively in the making of children's dresses. Two-tone effects are quite the newest idea. That is, a rose-colored jersey is trimmed with a lighter rose, navy blue with royal or Alice blue, brown with a tan and so on.

The ban has been lifted. After so long time a banishment, enter the hat wide of brim into the enchanted circle of fashionable millinery. The summer styles witnessed this innovation, but the vital point of interest rests in the fact that the fall modes also include the very large hat as well as the snug-fitting typ. Which means that all will have a ch..ce to be becomingly hatted this season without transgressing the hitherto stern rule of Dame Fashion, who until recently insisted on little shapes and no other.

When brims are wide they are very, very wide and vice versa for the small hat. Indeed, no brim at all seems quite in order for unique and distinctive turbans are the favorites when it comes to the snug-fitting sort.

The millinery group here pictured tells an interesting story of the wide brim versus the small hat. Velvet is bespoken as of great importance as a millinery fabric for the coming season, likewise moire silk. The first hat shown in this collection features both. The soft top crown and wide brim are formed of velvet, the wide band and facing are of moire silk. The color is a very deep wine, one of the most popular shades of the season.

Contrasting this large shape is the tiny chapeau of velvet shown in the upper right corner. Expressing the vogue for much color are the many little ribbons which are rolled at the ends to form a clever trimming.

Colorful underfacings enhance the charm of many a large brim. Flesh tint crepe lines the wide brim of the black velvet hat centered in this group.

Fashionable Hats for Fall.

Two trimming items of interest are maline and rhinestones. These add a dainty touch to the little cap-like hat in the lower left corner. There are tiers of the maline with the ever-favorite rhinestone ornament.

The last hat is a smart "Frenchy" velours, exploiting the softly manipulated high crown and stressing the vogue for beige colored millinery.

Lesson for September 19

(Temperance Lesson.)

OBEDIENCE TO LAW

LESSON TEXT—Leviticus 26:1-46.

GOLDEN TEXT—Do not drink wine nor strong drink, thou, nor thy sons with thee.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Daniel Chooses the Right.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Self-Control of Daniel.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Why Obey the Law.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Enforcing the Law.

I. Some Fundamental Laws Stated (vv. 1, 2).

1. God alone to be worshiped (v. 1).

God is a jealous God, therefore He cannot tolerate a rival. There must be no idolatry. God is to have full place in our lives or no place at all.

2. The Sabbath must be observed (v. 2).

The one who has enthroned God in his heart will reverence His Sabbath. The Sabbath was ordained that man might better cherish God in his heart.

3. Reverence for God's sanctuary (v. 2).

The believer needs to frequent the sanctuary of God in order to have his soul refreshed. Respect for God's holy day and the frequency of the sanctuary are inseparably united in those who fear and reverence God.

II. Blessings for Obedience to God's Laws (vv. 3-13).

1. Fruitful seasons (vv. 3-5).

Temporal well-being is secured through obedience to God's government. Godliness is profitable unto all having the promise of the life that now is and that which is to come.

2. Internal security (vv. 6-8).

In addition to the fullness of temporal blessings, God assured them that for obedience to His Word He would grant peace and safety. No robbers were to invade the land to disturb their tranquillity by day or night. No wild beasts would be allowed to devour them.

3. Numerical increase (vv. 9, 10).

Their number would be multiplied according to God's covenant to Abraham and the produce of the land increased to support them.

4. God's abiding presence (vv. 11-13).

The greatest of all God's blessings is His abiding presence. Happy is that nation and people in whose presence God chooses to dwell.

III. Calamities for Disobedience (vv. 14-39).

1. Judgments in general (vv. 14-17).

For disobedience and rejection of God's laws, general calamities would be permitted to come upon them. They include:

(1) Physical diseases. Their health would be taken away and they were to be afflicted with diseases.

(2) Bereavement. Physical disease would take away kindred and friends, thereby causing sorrow of heart, and mourning.

(3) Famine. God would withhold the rain, therefore food supply would be lacking.

(4) Conquest. They would be slain before their enemies.

(5) Oppression and dispersion. God would allow the enemy to overcome and oppress them and ultimately take them out of their own land and scatter them.

2. The specific judgments (vv. 18-19).

Mercies rejected and warnings unheeded must be followed by more severe strokes of wrath. Four series of warnings are pointed out by Kellogg, each conditioned on the supposition that they did not repent as the result of the preceding experiences. Each series is prefaced by the formula, "I will punish you seven times more for your sins" (vv. 18, 21, 24, 28). The thought is that each new display of impenitence on Israel's part shall be marked by increasing severity.

(1) The rains will be withheld (vv. 19, 20).

(2) Their children and cattle will be destroyed by wild beasts (v. 22).

(3) This to be followed by war, pestilence and famine (vv. 25, 26).

(4) Increasing terror (vv. 29-32).

If the previous judgments were not heeded then severer ones would follow so that in their distress they would eat the flesh of their sons and daughters and their seed should become waste and their land so desolate that even their enemies would be astonished at it.

5. Scattered among the Gentiles (v. 33).

God would scatter them among the heathen and pursue them with a sword. How awfully this has been fulfilled in the history of that people

LASSIE AND HER LADDIE

By MYRTLE B. WEBSTER

(© by W. G. Chapman.)

PETER LOWDEN was a disappointed man. He had been six months in the United States and half that time in Chicago, and it seemed as though that period had been set aside by some cruel destiny as a special purgatorial test for his stanch spirit.

"I'm wearin' awa for a sight of auld Scotia's heather bloom," he sighed as from a deep dark pit of penury and discouragement. "And Jessie—"

That was where honest loyal Peter's heart pinched hardest. He could philosophize calmly over high hopes quickly blasted as to sudden wealth and position in "the new far countrie." He was content with a dish of weak brose and an occasional finnan haddie—but Jessie, light of his heart! How he had hopes to wed his pretty modest fiancee and "busk her fine i' silken gown and siller ha' to spare," and now "the braw moon" glistened o'er a weary city street, Peter penniless and hopeless, and Jessie—lost!

It had come about strangely. She, an orphan, had left the little town where both had been born a few months in advance of Peter. She had written him as agreed only once, to furnish him with the pencilled address of the home in Chicago where she had found employment as a lady's maid. Armed with this, Peter started to try his own fortunes in America and to be near his future bride.

For three months in New York Peter wore out shoes and patience looking for work. Finally he saved up enough to pay his fare to Chicago. He was crossing the ferry to take the train at Jersey City, when an unfortunate outcast, a woman passenger, jumped overboard in a desperate attempt at suicide. Peter bravely leaped after and rescued her. He was damp and uncomfortable the first stage of his train journey. Then came the appalling discovery that his soaking in the river had blurred out the precious pencilled address that was his only clue to Jessie.

Then came a month in Chicago where the inexperienced lad patroled the city streets, seeking the lady of his love, to meet with bitter, utter disappointment. He spent his last dollar advertising for her without result. He finally gave up the disheartening quest. Peter shuddered when he recalled the wretched woman on the ferry boat. Then again, Jessie might be dead, or—wedded to another! All Peter could do now was to try and keep body and soul together through odd jobs. At home he had mastered the baker's trade, but his specialty lay in Scotch edibles only, and nobody seemed to want such fare at American restaurants.

Now, this especial bleak evening Peter was at the last extremity. He was cold, sleepy, hungry. As he was passing a large dark building, however, his eye brightened. It had two bulletin boards at its front. Each of these held a placard of some kind, in the center of which, plainly visible even at a distance, was the counterfeit presentment of a huge Scotch thistle.

"Certes, the sight warms the cockles o' my heart!" breathed Peter raptly, and as he came nearer he discovered that the placards announced a Robert Burns birthday concert the following evening.

"It's like a whiff o' hame," continued Peter. "Braw Bobby! I'm oot o' sich festivities at the present time, but a man's a man for a' that,' an' I'll take heart o' cheer," and seating himself on the cold stone steps Peter began to warble out cheerily, "Ye Banks and Braes o' Bonny Doon."

"Hech, mon! but ye're frae Dumbarton, I ken?"

Peter jumped up to observe a frowsy ancient head stuck out past a half-open door.

"Ye has the burr o' the same!" cried Peter.

"Coom in," invited the other, with a commiserating glance over Peter, and he admitted him, closed and locked the door after him and led him into the basement of the hall which seemed given over to kitchen uses. It contained great ranges, pots, pans, crockery, barrels of flour, bags of sugar, in fact a culinary outfit that astonished the inexperienced Peter. Then, as he was regarding the layout open-mouthed, his host shot the shrewd inquiry at him:

"What else are ye but a fine whistler?"

"A fine baker!" proclaimed Peter with proud confidence—"but Scotch, mind ye. The trade's no good in this country."

It took David McPherson, club cook, a very few minutes to turn his fellow countryman "inside out," as he expressed it.

"And what for all this prodigious food?" questioned Peter.

"The banquet, mon," returned David. "It's the spread after the concert and the speechifying—the real enjoyment, with mountain dew seddendum," and the old fellow went on to tell how, as the chef de'cuisine in all the functions of St. Andrews' society he held a lucrative and busy place.

"I can use ye, lad, maybe permanently, if ye fill the bill," he said, and he shared his supper and his bed with Peter, to wake up at sunrise to find his guest standing patiently beside him in a manifest state of suppressed excitement.

"I've an idea," spoke Peter. "It waked me hours since," and then with enthusiastic vim he developed a wondrous scheme that had come into his mind. Scotsmen all, those at the banquet might hail the novelty of real Scotch cooking with ardor.

"Ther's mutton pies, ye mind," explained Peter. "Their mouths will water for the real home-made cookery. And brose—no great quantity, but a suggestion of the heathesy moor and the childhood cot. And scones, and oat cakes, and short bread, and whole wheat Farrels, and Melton Mowbray pork pies!"

Peter had set the imagination of old David on fire. He was heart and soul in harmony with the plan of surprising the banqueters with Scotch fare purely. And so it came about. It was a marvelous success. Upon the eventful night men who saw before them the unadulterated products of their home soil, grew tender and loyal, and the hall rang with unrestrained enthusiasm that marked the occasion as glowing and grand.

Now at the banquet was one Peter Wilbur. And it so happened that at the home of this stalwart son of Scotia, now a prosperous business man, Jessie had secured employment. Peter had taken home one of the mutton pies to remind his wife of old times, as he had been reminded, and Mrs. Wilbur had given it to Jessie.

"I've noticed yo're longing all the time," she said to her favorite maid. "Maybe for home. Here's a touch of it, lassie, that may solace your poor homesick heart."

Jessie took the pie and began to partake of it with eyes retrospective and tearful. A taste made her sob.

"There was one, and one only in old Scotia who made the like," she wailed—"my best laddie, and—oh!"

She burst into a scream, staring at a criss-cross mark upon the top layer of crust.

"Peter's mark! I know it well," she tremored. "Ah! only he used that mark. Oh, tell me, tell me whence came the pie!"

Mr. Wilbur was called and he explained. On with her bonnet, and Jessie was flying in the direction of the hall where old David had engaged Peter as his permanent assistant.

She burst in upon them unceremoniously. She fell into his outstretched arms. There were only two words spoken, but so fervently uttered that old David thrilled at their simple eloquence—

"Lassie!"

"Laddie!"

Mixed Metaphors That Make Amusing Reading

The late Henry Holt, the New York publisher, was a learned man and a great reader. He said one day in an interview:

"I can't read our new school of novelists—the school that attacks everything American. These young men's thoughts are too illogical and confused for me. They're worse than the old Red Hoss editor.

"The editor of the Red Hoss Gazette was always writing sentences such as: 'Chickens, like two-edged swords, ofttimes come home to roost.'

"Once, praising up the domestic fireside, the old editor got off this gem:

"'The good wife stands, a faithful watch-dog, to welcome the home-coming master with honest bark.'

"In the 'personal' column the old editor printed one day:

"'Our cow has been milked in the pasture for three mornings running before we got around to it. We know who the miscreant is, and if he does it again we shall print his name, let the chips fall where they may.'

"After he was dead the beginnings of a last editorial were found on the old editor's desk.

"'We feel,' he wrote, 'that our race is almost fought, and, like a tired runner, we shall soon swim the harbor bar, and casting aside the harness, lie down upon that bourne whose maw barks furiously, 'All hope abandon, ye who enter here.'"

Modernist Music

The work of George Anthiel, the young American composer, was being discussed at a musicale in Lenox.

"Anthiel lives in Paris," said a critic. "He is only twenty-two, and at a concert that he gave at the Theater des Champs Elysees last month he used in the orchestra typewriters, hammers, an airplane propeller, two sewing machines, a lathe and several pianolas. He says he is going to produce in New York an opera about machinery. James Joyce will write the book.

"Anthiel's music, of course, is very difficult. A man who attended his Champs Elysees concert said afterwards:

"'Anthiel! Yes, yes. Wonderful stuff. Four bangs on the drum, seven sneezes, a munition plant explosion and a cyclone.'"

The Commonest Metal

Iron is the metal most used by man, yet the metal which is by far the commonest in the earth's crust is not iron, but calcium. Forty per cent of limestone is calcium.

Calcium is a very light metal, easily hammered, easily drawn out into wire, and almost as pretty in color as gold. Why then, you may ask, do we not make more use of it?

There are two reasons: the first that it is very difficult to isolate from its ores, but the second is worse. When isolated, let the merest drop of moisture touch calcium and it fumes away into slack lime. The present price of calcium is about 20 times that of gold.

First "Musical Saw"

The idea of extracting music from such an unlikely medium as an ordinary steel saw is said to have originated more than thirty years ago in Argentina. A drunken violinist in a lumber camp is credited with the discovery. In recent years the "musical saw" has become a popular fancy of jazz orchestras in both America and Europe.

The WATER BEARER

—13—

"I kept the check. It was coming to me. And I'm going to have a good time on it. It won't pay up what I owe, or begin to. Square me with the club, though, for one thing."

He left and Caleb in turn changed his clothes and spent a couple of hours reviewing his plans. At the water company he noticed Mary Morgan driving away at her typewriter. Her expression was sullen and she did not look up, though she heard his name mentioned. Caleb wondered what she thought of the wedding.

He found his model set up on a long table in the directors' room that opened off Cox's private office. Cox and Hinckley were examining it. They greeted him cordially, Hinckley in particular giving him a cordial grip of the hand.

"Suppose you go over the general plan, Warner," suggested Cox. "Then we'll talk. We want to know how you arrive at your premises."

Caleb described simply his belief that the whole of Caliente plain formed a great bowl of gravel with bottom and sides of clay, with a roof of clay at the upper end that caused artesian wells. He went over his operations and displayed his maps. He had felt a certain diffidence about the water-divining, doubting whether his hearers might not scoff at proof built up of such means. But Hinckley accepted it and Cox nodded his agreement.

Hinckley spoke first after Caleb's final summing up. And he spoke with a sincerity that held no trace of jealousy.

"I congratulate you. I should have liked to have made that discovery myself. But there is one big obstacle that exists. It is the flaw, if there is a flaw, in your plan."

"I mean the powerful action of the tides upon any pipes which may be laid upon the bay bottom. It shallows at the south end and the six-foot rise and fall has great swing there. There is your weak point. It may be overcome, but it will need a special invention, I am convinced."

"I had thought of that and I have a suggestion," said Caleb. "It is not perfected. I have not had time. But I am sure the idea is a sound one."

"Well," summed up Cox, "so far, I think we may say that your project interests us, Warner. I must add my congratulations to those of Hinckley. It looks as if your visit to the coast was going to be fortunate to all concerned. I am going to call a directors' meeting. I cannot set a date now. They are all busy men, with other interests than this company.

"I should say a fortnight should prove sufficient. I'll let you know at the earliest moment. Perhaps that two weeks will enable you to work out your idea about the pipes. Keep in touch with us through Mr. Hinckley. You can rely upon his co-operation."

They both accompanied him from the big room. Hinckley gave him his private address and invited him to come there any evening for consultation.

Caleb had some other business to attend to down town and he got back to the apartment house in fine feather.

He found Baxter there. He had just come from the club, he said moodily. Caleb saw that he had been drinking. His face was flushed and he was in bad humor.

"I'm wiped out," he said. "The bottom dropped out of the market. Some of Cox's d—d manipulation! The tip was that they were driving down the stock to buy cheap and we were prepared for that. But they were unloading. My thousand went for margins. I'm clean. And I'm up against it."

He went to his bureau and took up the silver frame with Mary Morgan's picture in it. He took out the photograph and tore it into small pieces, which he tossed into a waste-paper basket.

"D—n her!" he said savagely. "She's the last straw. Getting ugly—in more ways than one!"

"You owe her something," said Caleb.

It was a slip that he realized immediately by the deepening scowl on Baxter's forehead.

"Owe her something?" he exploded. "A lot you know about it! You are like most preachers, you prate without experience. I may be a sinner, but she's no saint. She wasn't when I met her. The things we did were done mutually in full knowledge of the risks, because we wanted to do them. Now she's pinned this thing on me, with some cause, perhaps, but I'm not feeling paternal about it, I can tell you. And I don't intend to marry her. That's flat and final. Owe her something? Maybe I do, but it can only be paid with money and where's that coming from?"

"I didn't mean to preach, Ted. As for money, if she'll accept it, there's your land deal. It's easy for you to make money, Ted, if you buckle down to it and cut out the drinking."

"Preaching again," cried Baxter. The liquor he had been taking had a stronger, a more malevolent hold on him than ever before in Caleb's knowledge of him. The veins were swollen in face and hands and his eyes were slightly glazed, though his speech was fluent and clear enough. "I've taken more man-sized drinks this afternoon than you have in your whole life," he went on. "The stuff I swallowed out on the boulevard this afternoon would drive a man crazy in time, but that's all we can get."

"Look here, Ted, you're talking nonsense," said Caleb. He was beginning to feel nettled, the blood ran hot under the skin of his forehead. The day had gone too well to wind up in such fashion. He went into his own room to escape the threatened tirade. Baxter followed him, bent on argument, his mind set in one groove. He seated himself in a wicker armchair.

"I suppose you think I ought to marry the girl? Tie myself up with a whining wife and a kid?"

"Yours?"

"Maybe. I'm not even sure of that. No, I'm not. I can handle her if I do it right away," said Baxter with ever thickening speech. "But by the time my deal goes through it may be too late. Those things hang fire sometimes. Lend me the money, Cal'. Twenty-five hundred 'll do it. She's ready to cut loose and go east. If I tell her it's fallen through she'll turn nasty again. Will you do it?"

"I can't Ted, I haven't the money."

"You mean you won't. Why don't you come through and say what you mean?"

"I have. If I had the money, or could get it, I would lend it to you."

"Ah! That's what they all say, when it comes to a showdown. If you think you're going to force me to marry the girl, you're wrong. You seem d—d eager to take her side in the matter. If you're so anxious to save her good name, why don't you marry her yourself?"

Baxter got up, swaying a little. His eyes were now bleared. The poison he had been assimilating was forcing its venom to the surface. Caleb stepped forward to put his hands on the other's shoulders, partly to steady him, with the idea of coaxing him to lie down. Half blind with crudely doctored alcohol, Baxter mistook Caleb's intention and swung his fist viciously. Caleb's own temper had been mounting despite his efforts for control. He was tired and his nerves had been strained more than he suspected. He parried the blow and thrust Baxter back, meaning to pinion him in the chair while he talked some sense into his sodden brain.

There Were Some Thirty People in the Room and They All Seemed to Be Laughing and Talking at Once.

But Baxter twisted. His weight went all upon one arm and the light chair overturned. Clutching at the rickety little desk, Baxter scrambled on the floor in a shower of papers as the desk toppled. The fall seemed to temporarily sober him. He scrambled to his knees and began picking up the papers as Caleb righted desk and chair, ashamed of the brawling termination of the affair.

"Look here, Ted," he said, catching Baxter by the elbow. "This has gone far enough. We are both acting like a couple of chumps. If I've . . ."

But Baxter stood staring at one of the papers he had picked up. His face was contorted by a malevolent sneer.

"You haven't got the money, eh?" he said. "A fine friend you are. You rotten liar. I'm through with you!"

He flung the paper down on the top of the desk and flung through the door, his face livid. Caleb heard his own door slam as he picked up the slip. It was the telegram from his attorney announcing the closing of the deal and the forwarding of the money.

For a second he stood irresolute. He did not want to explain to Baxter why he could not lend him any of this amount, or, to what use he had already put it. Finally he made up his mind. His friendship with Baxter had been largely protective. He did not want to abandon that friendship now when Baxter most needed him.

He knocked on the door, then tried it. The key had been turned on the inside. He called.

"Ted! let me in for a minute."

"You go to h—l." A moment after, the door to the corridor slammed. Caleb went to his own and saw Baxter entering the elevator. He rang the bell, hoping that he might catch the other before he got too far down the street.

The colored boy grinned at him as the elevator came to rest at his floor.

"Want to catch Misteh Baxter, suh! I reckon you's too late. His cyah's bin waitin' fo' him fo' nigh ha'f an hour. He's gone a kitin'."

CHAPTER X

The Party

If Baxter came back that night Caleb never knew. Baxter kept the door of his room locked. Caleb heard him casually mentioned at the club as being on "a tear." Doctor Fields inquired for him once directly of Caleb.

"He'll get cirrhosis of the liver, if he keeps on," said the physician. "And he'll snuff out like a match in the wind. We must get him on the wagon. I'll try and scare him into it. Though there's real cause for the scare. He'll stay off the stuff for several months sometimes. There's just one thing he can't resist and that starts him off. Worst thing he could take. Champagne. Fortunately it's scarce and expensive. You'll understand my talking to you this way. They say you and Ted have been friends for a long time."

But Caleb doubted very much if Baxter would listen to him until his mood changed. And he was busy with his own problem of the pipes and the tides.

He had an idea of what was needed. If the bottom sloped evenly the big tug at his submarine pipeline would come in midchannel, looping it backwards and forwards. But, wherever there was a depression or a channel, his pipes would sag and great strain come on the joints. A flexible line—that was what he wanted. He worked over it daytimes and dreamed of it nights without coming to a practical solution. He wanted to complete his plan, to come before the meeting with all difficulties solved.

Then one day he received an invitation from the Vedders to a radio party.

"It will be quite informal," wrote Mrs. Vedder, "but I think you will enjoy it and we hope you can come. Some friends of yours will be with us, Betty Clinton and Carmen Wilson among them. Don't dress. Come any time after eight o'clock."

Caleb accepted. He found himself eager to do so at the mention of Betty Clinton's name. The afternoon of the appointed day the solution of the pipe problem came to him. It seemed to him that thoughts of the girl had blent with his tinkerings and drawings and quickened his invention.

He sketched out his idea and made some specifications that he took down to a working machinist with whom he had got in touch. A model was to be made. The thing was simple enough though an entire novelty in such work. Caleb intended to make his pipe junctions flexible by designing a ball and socket joint so that the curving ends of one pipe should be clasped in coinciding curves of another, working in soft babbitt metal, giving a play of almost ninety degrees. This would make the pipeline as limber as a sprocket chain Caleb believed.

• • • • • • •

The Vedders lived on Semaphore hill in a house that consisted of one great room on the ground floor together with a kitchen at one end and a conservatory porch at the other. An open staircase led to the upper floor and the bedrooms. A Japanese servant met him at the door, which was screened off from the main room, and relieved Caleb of hat and coat. There were some thirty people in the room and they all seemed to be laughing and talking at once, split up in little groups, on divans, standing by the fireplace, by the grand piano, about a table where the Japanese was now serving punch out of a great bowl of mandarin ware. Smoke trailed everywhere, from pipes, cigarettes, cigars and from sticks of Chinese punk.

Buttons Made Change in World's Fashions

It is remarkable what small things have revolutionized the habits of the world. The change from the loose, flowing robes of the ancients to the fitted garments of these days is entirely due to the invention of the button.

Once the new fashion was established, many substances were pressed into service as materials for button making. Birmingham, England, has held its own as the most important center of the industry; and though Birmingham has a magnificent town hall, old inhabitants say that it would pay to pull it down and dig up the foundations, for it is built on a refuse heap of mother of pearl.

About the middle of the Nineteenth century the manufacture of pearl buttons was one of Birmingham's chief industries, and shells were brought in such quantities from the Pearl islands off the coast of Panama that manufacturers punched one or two buttons out of the best part of the shell and threw the rest away.

Useless Treasure

A father, worn out with age and infirmities and deprived, by his weakness and want of health, of the common society of men, wrongs himself and his, to rake together a great mass of useless treasure. He has lived long enough, if he be wise, to have a mind to strip himself to go to bed; not to his very shirt, I confess, but to that and a good warm nightgown. The remaining pomps, of which he has no further use, he ought voluntarily to surrender to those to whom by the order of nature they belong.—Montaigne.

POULTRY

CARE OF PULLETS VERY IMPORTANT

Poultrymen are coming more and more to the conclusion that summer care of the young stock cannot be overemphasized. Observation throughout the state has shown that the success of a poultryman with a flock of laying birds is usually the reflection of his success in rearing the pullets.

It is generally acknowledged by the leading poultrymen that one does not have to raise poultry for very many years before the importance of clean, steadily, and well-grown pullets is recognized. In nine cases out of ten the flocks which experience trouble during the winter months are the flocks in which trouble was prevalent while they were on the range, according to L. M. Black, extension specialist in poultry at Rutgers university.

Growing a clean profitable pullet includes a great number of small steps which when put together assure success, says Mr. Black. As with the mature birds, the houses must be comfortable and clean. Overcrowding and overheating have their effect in stunting the growth of the birds, and so a square foot of floor space should be allowed to each growing pullet and, in addition, sufficient roosting space. On hot days the houses should be cool and comfortable.

Frequent house cleaning is practiced by the most successful poultrymen to help prevent a rapid spread of disease during warm, moist weather. This, says Mr. Black, is particularly effective against coccidiosis.

Alternate ranges which supply an abundance of green feed and some shade are the rule on the best farms in the state. The birds are never without a daily supply of green feed. Shade is considered essential during the hot days. The ground, now believed to be the source of many of our most troublesome diseases, is frequently cropped and cultivated so that the direct rays of the sun may act as a germicide.

Culled Poultry Flocks Are Earmark of Success

Exceptionally successful poultrymen who do not cull their flocks periodically are in the minority in New Jersey, according to the state poultry specialist. The practice is becoming universally recognized as essential for greatest profits.

Several advantages of culling, or slacker elimination, are mentioned by the specialist and first among them is simplicity and ease. Not a cent of outlay is necessary and the benefits are almost immediately received. Some hens are poor layers but great feeders. To wait for them to lay is to wait for something that will amount to little even if it does finally occur, for these birds soon quit.

Various characteristics distinguishing the slacker from the layer are used by poultrymen in clearing from their flocks all of the boarders. Appearance of the tail feathers, color of the comb and wattles, and shape of the body both to visual and manual examination, are among the signs read by poultrymen. Newcomers in the business are supplied, on request, with helpful bulletins by the New Jersey College of Agriculture, New Brunswick.

In addition to requiring no outlay, culling causes no loss. The eliminated birds are sold at good prices on the poultry meat market.

Because of the influence of heredity, the general laying average of a flock is materially raised over a period of years by persistent culling and the use of good cockerels. This factor is considered particularly important by leading poultrymen.

Fix Flavor of Eggs

In investigations made some years ago, by feeding nitrogenous and carbonaceous feeds, it was found that hens fed a ration of wheat, middlings, cottonseed meal and skim milk, produced eggs with a disagreeable flavor and odor, small yolks, and poor keeping qualities. On the other hand, hens fed largely on cracked corn and corn dough laid larger eggs with richer yolks and better flavor. When there was a proper blending of both nitrogenous and carbonaceous materials, there was improved flavor.

Poultry Facts

The well-fed, well-housed hen certainly knows her eggs.

• • •

Whitewash looks good on the outside of poultry houses, but on the inside it does good.

• • •

In ancient times capon meat was highly prised by epicures. It is growing in popularity in this country.

• • •

Deep cultivation of corn is not desirable and usually is detrimental, especially at the time of the last cultivation.

• • •

Disease usually gets into a flock through the weak fowls, which it attacks first. Keep these culled out and you'll have a healthier flock.

• • •

Roup may be caused by dampness or drafts in roosting quarters, or poorly ventilated roosting quarters. Underlying causes may be poor nutrition, lice, mites or other parasites.

HIS ARDOR CHECKED

Two friends were talking about a young man who had just passed them in the street.

"Yes," said one, "he fell in love with a girl at a glove counter. He bought gloves every day for a week, so to discourage his attentions she became a manicurist."

Relics of the Stone Age

Different finds in Finmarken have proved that Norway was inhabitated as far as seventy degrees north, even during the Stone age. Among the finds are ten living places of that period in the Altafjord. From what archeologists know the same people lived in Denmark, Sweden and all Norway 3,000 years ago. The utensils unearthed show that there must have existed a sort of common culture and that frequent visits were made by the inhabitants of each land to the other two. The theory that the Stone age had a milder climate than the present seems to be proved by the fact that the earliest Norwegian history does not mention that man lived in Finmarken. The people living there at the time of the sagas were Finns and Lapps, who still exist in the inland. They are of mongol extraction.

Concession to Dignity

Although automobiles are used throughout Japan, the imperial household is determined that the stately and aristocratic horses and carriages must be preserved. Consequently it will construct 17 beautifully decorated carriages this year. Estimates have been invited from Japanese firms and the cost, it is expected, will be about 300,000 yen. No imperial carriages have been used since the great earthquake of 1923, when most of them were damaged by fire.

SPANISH AMERICAN WOMEN ORGANIZE

A new organization, including in its territorial scope all of DeKalb and Steuben counties, with adjoining sections of Allen, Noble and LaGrange counties, and the borderlands of Michigan and Ohio, was inaugurated Sunday, at Circle Park near Hamilton.

The ostensible occasion was the picnic of the Spanish War Veterans, whose organizaton has its headquarters in the court house in Auburn, but it developed into a "muster" of a Ladies Auxiliary of the local camp.

Mrs. Martha Brower, State President of the Ladies Auxiliary of the United Spanish War Veterans, with headquarters in Logansport, was present, and mustered in the local Auxiliary and installed its officers in the pavilion at Circle Park.

Forty names were on the application for a charter, and Mrs. Brower expressed herself as very much pleased with thee splendid beginning and the enthusiasm displayed in thee new organization, which is the fourth she has installed in the tsate, since she assumed thee presidency in June of this year.

As is customary, the Ladies Auxiliary is designated in conformity with the Camp of Spanish War Veterans with which it is connected, and Mrs. Brower, the State President, accordingly fixed the official designation of the new organization as "Colonel Kuhlman Auxiliary," No. 41, Department of Indiana, United Spanish War Veterans.

The followng officers were elected and installed for the first year:

President, Mrs. Blanche Moore, Auburn; Senior Vice President, Mrs. Mable Batéman, Waterloo; Junior Vice President, Mrs. Meda Bennett, Pleasant Lake; Secretary, Mrs. Pearl Edwards, Auburn; Treasurer, Mrs. Mable Holman, Auburn; Chaplain, Mrs. Eda Willener, Hamilton; Historian, Mrs. Ethel Elson, Garrett; Patriotic Instructor, Mrs. Pearl Brand, Pleasant Lake; Conductor, Mrs. Estella Clement, Auburn; Assistant Conductor, Mrs. Pearl Funk, Butler; Guard, Mrs. Minnie Bennett, Pleasant Lake; Assistant Guard, Mrs. Pearl Noel, Butler Township; Musician. Mrs. Ollie DeLong, Corunna; Color Bearers, Mrs. Lillian Griffith, Fremont, Mrs. Jennie Wolfe, Auburn, Mrs. Edith Maxwell, Auburn and Mrs. Mettie Varner, Auburn.

It was decided to hold the meetings at the same time as the camp of Spanish War Veterans, so the next meeting of both the camp and thee new ladies auxiliary will be held on Wednesday evening, October 20.

The meetings will be held in adjoining rooms, and after the business sessions, the organizatons will join in luncheon and with a program of entertainment after each meting.

HOME, DAD AND THE BOY

By FRANK H. CHELEY

(© F. H. Cheley, Denver, Colo.)

Success vs. Failure

SOME men are successful fathers—

Because They Believe that every boy has a right to expect his Dad to be a thoroughbred.

Because They Believe that being a father is the greatest privilege given to any man and take their fatherhood seriously.

Because They Believe that all boys are mostly good, and realize that they often get bad handling.

Because They Believe that constant repression means ultimate explosion, so give their boys a chance to have a say.

Because They Are Convinced that it is worth while to study boy-behavior, as well as the stock market, the baseball score, or the trend of politics. Understanding a lad makes the Dad Business a joy.

Because, in Addition to Providing their sons well with the creature comforts, they give them also generously of themselves—often at great personal inconvenience and cost.

Because They Strive Always to make the right thing pleasant and the wrong thing costly, and thereby teach their boys that character is not only desirable, but that it also pays.

TWO WOMEN PRAISE SAME MEDICINE

Both Helped by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

"After the birth of my little daughter I was very badly run-down. I could not think of going to a hospital, but grew steadily worse, being compelled to stay in bed two or three days each week. A friend of my sister's told of the good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had done her, and my sister bought me two bottles of it. I had not taken all of one bottle when I was up and able to do some work. I am truly a booster for Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and you may use my testimonial."—Mrs. Mayme Lynch, 1119 Island Ave., Ext., McKee's Rocks, Pa.

Mrs. Hope L. Smith, a farmer's wife of Route 3, Floyd, Va., says she was ill for ten years with a good deal of pain in her side and so weak she could hardly work. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has helped her so much she is telling her friends about it.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a dependable medicine.

Bobbed Hair Traced

Bobbed hair has been traced to Revolutionary war times by Capt. L. C. Baird, army officer, who found in old records of the Continental army, stored for years in the Schuylkill arsenal at Philadelphia, that bobbing of the hair was made a matter of general orders for the soldier of 1776.

One of the decrees issued at West Point, however, directed that noncommissioned officers and privates of the first regiment have their hair queued behind not to exceed seven inches long and close to the head.

DR. W. B. CALDWELL AT THE AGE OF 83

Mother! It's Cruel to "Physic" Your Child

To Dr. W. B. Caldwell, of Monticello, Ill., a practicing physician for 47 years, it seemed cruel that so many constipated infants and children had to be kept constantly "stirred up" and half sick by taking cathartic pills, tablets, salts, calomel and nasty oils.

While he knew that constipation was the cause of nearly all children's little ills, he did not believe that a sickening "purge" or "physic" was necessary.

In Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin he discovered a laxative which helps to establish natural bowel "regularity" even if the child is chronically constipated. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin not only causes gentle, easy bowel movement but, best of all, it never gripes, sickens or upsets the most delicate system. Besides, it is absolutely harmless, and so pleasant that even a cross, feverish, bilious, sick child gladly takes it.

CO-OPERATIVES FACTOR IN MARKETING

Even the Farm Women Have Their Extension Agents Who Meet With Them to Demonstrate Better Farm Practices.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Thirty per cent more eggs were marketed co-operatively in the United States in 1925 than in 1924, it is estimated by the United States Department of Agriculture. A number of recently formed co-operative organizations reached their full stride as marketing agencies during the year and many of the older associations received larger quantities of eggs from their members.

Gains in Marketing.

Gains in the co-operative marketing of eggs were particularly large in Missouri, where county exchanges and centrally established assembling and packing plants have been developed. In Minnesota a substantial increase in the co-operative marketing of eggs was largely due to expansion in the business of the Minnesota Egg and Poultry Exchange, a federation of 17 local units with 22,000 members. This organization did not begin operations until the latter part of 1924. Yet in 1925 it handled a larger number of cases of Minnesota eggs than had ever before gone through co-operative channels in that state.

New Organizations.

New co-operative associations organized to handle eggs began operations last year at Hannibal, Mo., Portland, Maine, and Wauseon, Ohio. Fifty-eight co-operative elevators, creameries and stores began in 1925 to handle eggs as an additional service to their members. Large quantities of eggs were marketed for co-operative associations through co-operative sales agencies in New York, Detroit, Chicago, St. Louis, Los Angeles, and San Francisco. One association that handled New Hampshire eggs on the Boston market in 1924 went out of business before the close of 1925.

VEGETABLE PLATE FOR HOME DINNER

From Three to Five Vegetables Are Served.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Perhaps you've eaten the combination known in restaurants as a "vegetable plate." Many a homemaker has found this kind of a meal on the home table very popular. The special plates divided by little ridges into separate compartments, one for each vegetable, are not needed. These plates add novelty, but a vegetable dinner tastes just as good when served in the usual way.

The markets at this time of year are most tempting, with a variety of fresh vegetables, such as peas, string beans, slicing tomatoes, asparagus, summer squash, egg plant, and lima beans. Also the good things in cans need not be overlooked. As the summer advances your choices for a dinner of this kind will increase and you can then have one often with so many different combinations that they will never need be twice alike. That is one of the great things about using a variety of vegetables. Hardly any two look, or smell, or taste just the same. With all the different colors and textures and flavors of vegetables the meals can be kept varied and appetizing and well balanced, too, from the standpoint of food value.

From three to five vegetables are usually served in a vegetable dinner. There should be at least one hearty kind, that is one that contains a rather high proportion of protein and starch, either in the vegetable itself or in the other foods combined with it. There should also be variety in texture and flavor—something crisp, something soft, something mild flavored, something acid, and at least one pronounced flavor to give zest to the entire combination. And there should be enough richness in the seasoning of the vegetables or the way they are cooked to make them substantial enough for the main course at dinner. Some people complain that a vegetable dinner does not "stick to the ribs" and that it just fills up the stomach with "bulk." It is, of course, true that vegetables contain a high proportion of cellulose and water and that they do not stay in the stomach so long as meats and other foods rich in fat. The vegetables, however, can be easily enriched with enough butter, cream, or other fats to make them satisfy the appetite. And what is more they contain an abundant supply of the much-needed vitamines and minerals.

Three hot cooked vegetables and one raw one are suggested for today's menu: Potatoes delicately browned in butter or other fat, shredded carrots in milk, asparagus or new peas, spring onions or radishes. Contrasts in texture, color, and flavor are all given in this simple combination. The browned potatoes are starchy, rich, and crusty; the orange-colored carrots cooked in milk are soft and slightly sweet; the asparagus or new peas are fresh green, tender and juicy, and the spring onions or radishes are so crisp and succulent that they give the teeth good exercise.

This is only one of a great many equally good vegetable combinations that might be chosen.

VALUE OF SALAD IN GREEN LEAVES

Of Peculiar Value Because of Vitamine Supplied.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Literally the word "salad" means something salted. If this definition is accepted, a stalk of celery or a radish is really a salad. Common usage, however, applies the term salad to any dish that consists chiefly of or includes a certain amount of some fresh crisp vegetable. Some salads contain also meat; others fish, cheese, eggs, fruit, or nuts. In the opinion of experts on nutrition, it is the green leaf that gives to salads their peculiar value, for it supplies a kind of vitamine that is found in few other foods. Busy housekeepers will do well to remember this fact. The elaborate salads may taste good but their special value lies in the green leaves which they contain.

Lettuce, Tomatoes, Peppers, Radishes, Onions and Celery for Raw Vegetable Salad.

Nutritive Value of Any of Home-Cooked Cereals

It is almost impossible to compare the nutritive value of ready-to-eat with home-cooked cereals, says the United States Department of Agriculture. The nutritive value of any cereal food depends on the kind and on the proportion of bran, germ, and endosperm (white inner portion of the kernel) included. If outer coatings and germ are included, it contains far more minerals and vitamines than if these parts are rejected. Judged on the basis of average servings the food value of the lightweight ready-to-eat cereals is lower than that of the home-cooked kinds. In the case of all cereal foods, however, it should be remembered that comparison of the nutritive value should be not on the basis of the form in which they are sold, but on that of the parts of the kernel they include.

WHY DENY YOURSELF
THE BEST IN MOTOR CAR BODIES

The finest of the new cars in all price classes have now been announced—Cadillac, Buick, Chevrolet, Oakland, Oldsmobile and Pontiac.

All offer vastly greater values than ever before in motor car history.

All register amazing advantages in performance and ease and economy of operation.

But the greatest factor of their new glory is described in a single phrase—Body by Fisher.

Here is their supreme beauty—setting absolutely new standards in charm of design and interior fitting.

Here are unequalled factors of safety which add so much to your comfort and confidence.

Here are exclusive conveniences and niceties which do, indeed, make the car with Body by Fisher superior in its class.

No matter what mechanical developments may allure you, it is the body of your car with which you live most intimately—that is why the General Motors units, makers of the best of the new cars in all price classes, point so proudly to the emblem—Body by Fisher.

How many times can a man sit down without wearing out the seat of his trousers? A definite answer to this really important question now can be obtained in round numbers from a novel textile testing machine devised to measure the durability of cloth used in making army uniforms. When applied to a new quality of cloth for army trousers it was found that the wearer could sit down 97,000 times before the cloth showed any sign of wearing through. This question could have been answered by Joe Sechler and just as authentic, had he been asked.

Tattoo Marks on Hogs Tell Owner

Simple Method Devised to Identify Owners After Animals Are Killed.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A simple method for placing tattoo marks on hogs so that they may be readily identified after slaughter has been devised by Dr. F. E. Murray, veterinarian of the United States Department of Agriculture. The principal need for such identification is for detecting the origin of any diseased hogs found at the slaughtering places and to trace the channels through which infection spreads.

Uses for Instrument.

A description of the instrument, methods of using it, and various practical uses for such identification marks, are described in Miscellaneous Circular Number 57, just issued by the United States Department of Agriculture.

The form of the instrument considered most suitable for tattooing hogs consists essentially of a metal holder about eighteen inches long, slotted to receive five blocks of babbit metal in which phonograph needles are embedded with the points protruding about a quarter of an inch. The needles are arranged to form numbers and letters.

Ordinary black automobile enamel is used as a tattooing pigment. It is applied to the needle points with a brush. The mark is applied by merely striking the hog smartly with the instrument, usually on the fore part of the back. Tattooing causes no injury to the meat or inconvenience to the hogs.

Work Is Permanent.

A tattoo mark, properly applied, resists all attempts to remove it and, after death, is as permanent as the skin itself. It is a definite means of preserving the identity of hogs between farm and market. Extensive tests have demonstrated the practicability of the device in tracing the origin of animal diseases and in identifying the ownership of diseased animals in mixed shipments. Numerous other practical uses suggest themselves, such as tracing the source of animal parasites, experimental work involving the study of dressed carcasses and identifying ownership in co-operative marketing.

A copy of the circular may be secured as long as the suply lasts by writing to the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

Inspection of Butter Is Improving Its Quality

Federal-state shipping point inspection of butter is having a marked influence in improving the quality of the product, the United States department of Agriculture has announced, publishing figures on the expansion of the service.

Beginning with one inspection in July, 1924, the department says, the federal-state butter inspection service in Minnesota has increased until at present five inspectors are required. The quantity of butter inspected during the year ending January 31, 1926, reached 30,416,667 pounds. The service is available at Duluth, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Chicago.

At the end of the year more than 80 per cent of all butter inspected in Minnesota was 92 score or higher, as compared with less than 58 per cent at the beginning of the year. A marked decrease is shown also in the percentage of butter scoring 90 or less, the quantity in this class at the end of the year being 8 per cent of all butter made, compared with 19 per cent at the beginning of the year.

Sire Is of Importance

It pays to breed a mare to a good stallion or jack. Good young horses and mules are scarce and consequently they are bringing better prices this spring than for several years past. Indications are that during the next few years prices for good horses and mules will continue to advance because not enough have been raised to supply the demand. This scarcity is being felt this spring and will be more evident in the years to follow.

It is highly advisable to give baby chicks fresh ground to grow on. Plowing and liming the ground will help.

Spring-time is nursery-time on the farm. Chicks, pigs and lambs all pay big returns for time spent on them while they are getting their start.

The Jersey Black Giants are considered very excellent for general farm flocks as they have the size which makes them excellent for the purpose of roasters and capons.

Soy beans are a good hay pasture, seed crop and soil improvement crop for most sections. The crop may be grown successfully on acid soil, but if the field has not grown this crop previously, it is necessary to inoculate for best results.

Paint Up and Look Up

YOU may clean up a tramp and put his rags back on him and he will still hang his head. But give him new clothes and he will look up, with pride and self-respect.

You have publicly committed him to cleanliness and respectability.

This philosophy will apply to many owners of faded and run-down homes. When they clean up the yard, and paint up the house, they look up with pride and satisfaction.

And the neighbors follow their example.

It's as poor reasoning to clean up and neglect the painting as it is to wear a clean shave, and a dirty collar. There's nothing in either to inspire self-respect or the respect of others.

Consult us about your painting right now during this general cleaning. Let's work together and when the clean up and paint up is finished, this town will be something to crow about.

You may be questioning what to use, and let us say here that we have taken the agency for the famous Sherwin Williams Paint and you will find here a full and complete line of this well known brand of paint.

YOU CAN'T DO BETTER THAN TO ALLOW US TO SUPPLY ALL YOUR WANTS IN THE LINE OF BUILDING MATERIALS—OUR PRICES WILL MAKE IT WORTH WHILE AND BESIDES OUR SERVICE IS WORTH CONSIDERING. JUST CALL AND SEE US OR PHONE FOR PRICES AND INFORMATION.

RECORD FAIR IS PREDICTED

With every stall of the cattle barn occupied, other barns nearly full and exhibitors continuing to arrive, officials of the Defiance County Agriculture society today declared that this year's Defiance County Fair which opened Tuesday, will be the biggest in history.

So numerous became the entries in the harness races that the officials had to shut down on this division. Seventy harness horses are in the field and fourten running horses. Three races will be run off Wednesday and four each on Thursday and Friday.

A REAL SERVICE FOR OUR TEACHERS

With our schools now well under way for another term we want to take just a few lines to ask teachers around St. Joe and Spencerville if they won't go a little farther than their regular courses of study in the interest of the young people under their care. If they will do so we feel sure they will earn their reward in the heartfelt thanks tendered them in return by the parents of our school children.

Why not take a few minutes during each week to tell them of the great need for carefulness, now that the automobile is collecting such a heavy death toll all over the country. Deliver a little safety talk; get the pupils interested in writing essays on safety. Then go a little farther and teach them the value to both themselves and the community of respect for law. Take the newspaper now and then and read to them the fate of young people who lost respect for law, and the penalty they have to pay. You can find good examples in almost every paper you pick up. Teach them that the laws of the land are made to protect them, but that they cannot expect protection if they do not themselves obey the law. They will also find much interest in writing essays on obedience to law. Then take the best and have published in the St. Joe News.

These subjects can be discussed briefly in the schoolroom without detracting from the regular studies, and there is no means of measuring the good effect such discussions will have on our boys and girls in after years. Could there be anything more important than teaching the children of this community the value of safety and of obedience to the laws of their land?

CELEBRATE SILVER WEDDING

A large number of relatives and friends, mostly members of their Sunday School class, gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. William Hamilton last Sunday to celebrate the twenty-fifth anniversary of their marriage.

It was a beautiful day and filled with pleasure for all present.

Mrs. Hamilton's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Howard Northrup, are still living and were there to participate in this second wedding of their devoted children.

A wonderful dinner including a fine wedding cake was served to all at the dinner hour.

This was also the fifteenth anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Thayer Northrup, who with their son, Curtis Argyl, were present.

Mrs. Northrup presented her daughter with a silver tea set which had been a wedding gift to her many years ago. Several other silver gifts were presented by the class and others.

FARMERS TO VISIT CANADA THIS WEEK

The seriousness of the corn borer situation is not realized by the farmers of DeKalb county as yet, because they are not numerous enough to complete their work of destroying the present crop. But unless the proper precaution is taken there is a probability of an increase in the number of borers next year.' In order to emphasize and show what is really the result of their work, a delegation of farmers from this county and also from the state, are leaving Thursday to inspect the devastated corn fields.

From a careful field study of the corn borer condition in DeKalb county, it will be necessary to cut all corn within three inches of the ground as the borers are working down toward the ground. Putting the corn through the silo is the best way of destroying them. Shredding is about as effective. Where the corn is husked off the standing stalk it will be necessary that the stalks be broken off with a rake while the ground is frozen and all stocks raked and burned before May 1st. It is important that all the little short stalks that are missed by the rake be gathered up by hand and burned as they may be infested with corn borers.

MRS. EMMA WOODCOX IN HOSPITAL

Quite a few relatives and friends have called on Mrs. Emma Woodcox of Garrett, now in the Fort Wayne Lutheran hospital, and on Sunday Ye Editor and wife made her a call.

Last March Emma took what the family thought to be a cold and an irritation of the nostril was the result. Trying home remedies but no relief came, they went to their physician and he thought it was nothing serious. Relief was not in sight and they called on nose specialists and found that the infection had developed into tuberculosis of the nostrils. The left side of her face is swollen very badly and her nose is in such condition that her breathing is done through her mouth entirely.

Sunday she seemed in good spirits and practically free from pain, being able to sit up a little, although she realizes her serious condition.

Her disease is a very rare one. She would be pleased to hear from her friends here.

COUNTY CLERK ADVISED OF PROPOSED AMENDMENTS

Will be Voted on at General Election to be Held in DeKalb County November 2

County Clerk, J. Harvey Knauer Monday received official notice from Frederick E. Shortemier, secretary of state, that four proposed amendments to the constitution of Indiana will be voted upon at the general election to be held November 2.

The first proposed amendment would give the general assembly power to pass a law providing that the election of all judges of general or appellate jurisdiction be elected at special elections held for that purpose. The proposed amendment provides that no other officer should be elected at the same time that judges are chosen.

The second would provide for the passage of a law to reapportion, every six years, the number of members of the legislature among the various counties according to the vote cast by each county in the preceding election for all candidates for secretary of state.

The third provides that "when the duration of any office is not provided for by this constitution it may be declared by law, and if not so declared such office shall be held during the pleasure of the authority making the appointment. But the general assembly shall not create any office, the tenure of which shall be longeqr than four years, nor shall the term of any officer or the salary of any officer fixed by this constitution or by law be increased during the term for which such officer was elected or appointed."

The fourth woud give the general assembly power to pass a law providing for the levying and collection of a tax upon incomes.

CHANGE OF MEN RESULT OF SIGNALS

The Signal Gang that has been located here for the past two months on the B. & O., moved out Monday evening, having completed the installation of the electric block signals west as far as Garrett, the juice being turned on Monday. With this new service in operation, it has depleted the number of operators and a number of towers have been discontinued on this division. Fred Read, being the last man at H. K. tower has been transferred to Ripley, Ind., because of the seniority of W. S. Wheaton of Sherwood, O., who relieved Mr. Read a short time ago.

Within the next two or three weeks there will be two more towers put out of commission and the men who claim seniority will then bump others along the line of less years service. This is one of the results of installation of modern appliances in all kinds of work.

No lovr of music should miss the band concert next Wednesday night. The Saxophone Quartette with piano and trap drums will furnish a worth while program that you will surely appreciate. AWARDED GOLD MEDAL FOR TON LITTER SUCCESS

Merritt Sechler holds highest honors of any farmer in the state in the ton litter class, was determined by Mr. Schwalb of Purdue, when the meeting was held at the Sechler farm Tuesday and as a result of his success, a gold medal was awarded Mr. Sechler. given by the Indiana Live Stock Breeders Association, in recognition of his ability to raise and feed hogs successfully in the required time.

The requirements to enter this competitive class are:

The sows must be entered before they farrow, thus you will see the farmer cannot change his mind if the sow does not have a good litter. One hundred and eighty days from the birth of the pigs is given to reach the requirements of the litter to weigh out 2,000 pounds or more.

In order to de successful one must first understand how to breed, how to care for the sow and her pigs, sanitation and feeding.

There are farmers who have raised litters of a ton, but few under the terms of the club.

Here is the remarkable thing in Mr. Sechler's case. He entered four sows in this class, three of which had nine pigs each and one eight. All made the required weight in the required time and the last litter of eight weighed out 2,008 pounds.

Quite a delegation of boys and Vocational teachers of the county were present Tuesday to witness the judging by Mr. Schwalb.

ENLARGEMENT OF PLANT

The Economy Cleaning Co., of Auburn, owned by John George, former resident of St. Joe, is expanding to the extent of erecting a 30x40 addition to their present pant, and when completed will have one of the best plants in the northern part of the state. The new addition will be two stories and arranged for living quarters. Seven employes are engaged to care for the growing business. With ten agencies in Indiana and Ohio and orders being filled from many different states and with an ertensive business having been built as far distant as Detroit and Cleveland, the company finds that it requires more room.

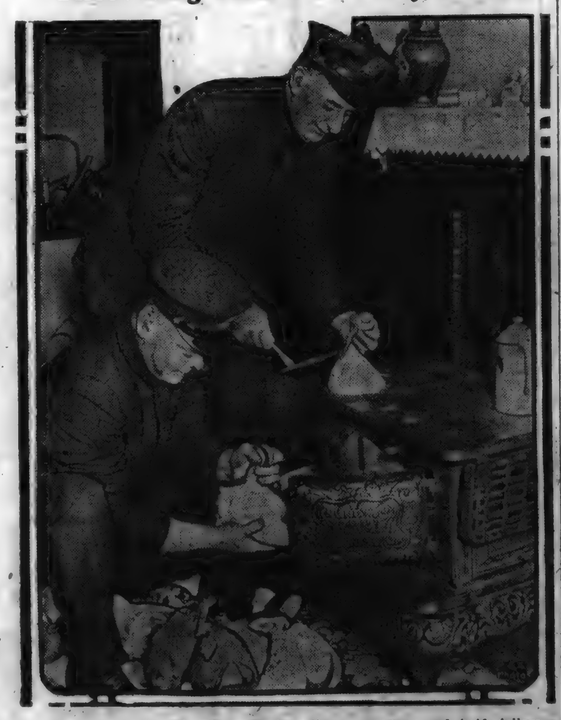
Uncovering Hoard of Crazy Miser



Forty-one sacks of coins—pennies, dimes, quarters and half dollars—were found by policemen in the filthy New York city hut of Matilda Ries, pencil vendor. When arrested Matilda had bills of every denomination from $1 to $100 sewed in her clothing. Patches in her dress revealed $10 bills. There was $1,800 in all. She was committed to an asylum when doctors pronounced her insane. Photograph shows searchers taking coin bags from the store.

Col. Harold E. Hartney, vice president of the Argonauts, who are backing the transatlantic flight to be attempted by Capt. Colonel Hartney said that if three men went in the plane Captain Berry would be the third man, although Fonck has said that he would take a radio man or mechanician and that Berry would not go.

Lesson for September 19

(Temperance Lesson.)

OBEDIENCE TO LAW

LESSON TEXT—Leviticus 26:1-46.

GOLDEN TEXT—Do not drink wine nor strong drink, thou, nor thy sons with thee.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Daniel Chooses the Right.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Self-Control of Daniel.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Why Obey the Law.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Enforcing the Law.

I. Some Fundamental Laws Stated (vv. 1, 2).

1. God alone to be worshiped (v. 1).

God is a jealous God, therefore He cannot tolerate a rival. There must be no idolatry. God is to have full place in our lives or no place at all.

2. The Sabbath must be observed (v. 2).

The one who has enthroned God in his heart will reverence His Sabbath. The Sabbath was ordained that man might better cherish God in his heart.

3. Reverence for God's sanctuary (v. 2).

The believer needs to frequent the sanctuary of God in order to have his soul refreshed. Respect for God's holy day and the frequency of the sanctuary are inseparably united in those who fear and reverence God.

II. Blessings for Obedience to God's Laws (vv. 3-13).

1. Fruitful seasons (vv. 3-5).

Temporal well-being is secured through obedience to God's government. Godliness is profitable unto all having the promise of the life that now is and that which is to come.

2. Internal security (vv. 6-8).

In addition to the fullness of temporal blessings, God assured them that for obedience to His Word He would grant peace and safety. No robbers were to invade the land to disturb their tranquillity by day or night. No wild beasts would be allowed to devour them.

3. Numerical increase (vv. 9, 10).

Their number would be multiplied according to God's covenant to Abraham and the produce of the land increased to support them.

4. God's abiding presence (vv. 11-13).

The greatest of all God's blessings is His abiding presence. Happy is that nation and people in whose presence God chooses to dwell.

III. Calamities for Disobedience (vv. 14-39).

1. Judgments in general (vv. 14-17).

For disobedience and rejection of God's laws, general calamities would be permitted to come upon them. They include:

(1) Physical diseases. Their health would be taken away and they were to be afflicted with diseases.

(2) Bereavement. Physical disease would take away kindred and friends, thereby causing sorrow of heart, and mourning.

(3) Famine. God would withhold the rain, therefore food supply would be lacking.

(4) Conquest. They would be slain before their enemies.

(5) Oppression and dispersion. God would allow the enemy to overcome and oppress them and ultimately take them out of their own land and scatter them.

2. The specific judgments (vv. 18-19).

Mercies rejected and warnings unheeded must be followed by more severe strokes of wrath. Four series of warnings are pointed out by Kellogg, each conditioned on the supposition that they did not repent as the result of the preceding experiences. Each series is prefaced by the formula, "I will punish you seven times more for your sins" (vv. 18, 21, 24, 28). The thought is that each new display of impenitence on Israel's part shall be marked by increasing severity.

(1) The rains will be withheld (vv. 19, 20).

(2) Their children and cattle will be destroyed by wild beasts (v. 22).

(3) This to be followed by war, pestilence and famine (vv. 25, 26).

(4) Increasing terror (vv. 29-32).

If the previous judgments were not heeded then severer ones would follow so that in their distress they would eat the flesh of their sons and daughters and their seed should become waste and their land so desolate that even their enemies would be astonished at it.

3. Scattered among the Gentiles (v. 33).

God would scatter them among the heathen and pursue them with a sword. How awfully this has been fulfilled in the history of that people.

ROUTE 2, CHARLESTON, ILLINOIS

From the days of the polonaise to the days of the radio, mothers have given this dependable medicine to their daughters. School girls are often careless. They get wet feet. They overstudy or they tire themselves with too many dances and parties. They get run down.

Many an active girl of today, like the demure maiden of the 1870's, has found that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is helping her to find better health and energy.

"I gave my fifteen-year-old girl Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and it did her a wonderful lot of good. She had been out of school for four months. "I have always been sickly, and until I was fourteen my father was very strict about my perfect attendance at grammar school. I have gone to school through hard storms and often taken cold. When I was fourteen I took to my bed and did not get up for eighteen months. Everyone thought I could not live. Just four months ago I began taking your wonderful medicine, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I could notice a great change almost at once. Now I feel like a new person. I wish all girls would try Lydia E. Pinkham's wonderful medicine."—Mrs. C. M. CHAPTER X—Continued

—14—

Caleb distinguished Carmen at the piano, her olive skin and rich coloring resplendent in the glow, gay as a California poppy in a daring gown of burnt orange, a red flower in her black hair.

She saw him standing there and called out a welcome across the room.

"There is my toreador," she cried and crashed into the first act prelude from Carmen. Caleb felt himself the focus of stares that were friendly enough, but embarrassing. A light laugh went round, though he sensed that it was not at his expense, and hands applauded. Mrs. Vedder saved a stage wait by coming swiftly to him.

"You see, you are known already," she said. "Now I must make them known to you."

She led him round the room, introducing him. Everyone seemed to be a writer, a musician, an artist. Vedder greeted him at the punch table.

"Better fortify yourself while it lasts," he said. "This is an anniversary, mine and Mrs. Vedder's, and we celebrate, but we are limited. Meet Carquines."

A short man with an enormous shock of straight black hair, a roughly modeled face in which black eyes twinkled genially, dark-skinned almost as an Indian, shook hands with Caleb. He spoke with a Spanish accent. To Caleb he seemed to have stepped directly across from the Quartier Latin.

His wife was in absolute contrast. She was an ashen blond, with great masses of hair braided above and partly about an oval face that had a perfect complexion, untouced by applied aid.

She looked like a madonna, Caleb thought, until he noticed her eyes. They were Oriental in their piquant slant and they were the color of jade. He mentally docketed her as a woman of personality and unusual brains. Carquines, it appeared, was an artist.

Caleb and his hostess wound up at the piano. Brompton was with Carmen. He had a stranded air, an appearance of having been left there by the tide of his own feelings, wishful to stay but conscious that he cut a figure out of pose, out of harmony. Carmen flashed eyes and teeth at Caleb as Mrs. Vedder fluttered away with a:

"And these, you know."

"That wasn't quite fair," said Caleb.

"Your bringing me into a strange company with an orchestral accompaniment. You mustn't expect me to live up to the role of Escamillo."

"I don't think you leave much to be desired as a matador. In so far as I have seen you in action."

"You forget the inspiration. Of such a Carmen."

"Why, you are a true caballero. I thought you must be like all the New Englanders. I never understood that they possessed any gallantry. If you keep that up all evening, you will do very nicely," she said. And began to sing very softly. Brompton was ignored. Caleb felt sorry for him, so evidently in love with the girl who made a mock of him, but he saw no way of altering matters. He stood by the lamp and the girl sang up at him, her face full in glow, her lips shaping the syllables of Carmen's song witchingly.

Mais, si je t'aime, prenes vous garde.

"It was the toreador whom Carmen warned," said Caleb.

"Perhaps he didn't need it. Bromny—get us some punch before it's all gone."

Brompton departed obediently. Carmen made room for Caleb beside her on the piano bench.

"She hasn't come yet," she said as Caleb looked about the room.

"She is expected, I understand," he countered coolly.

Carmen gave him a queer little smile, of approbation perhaps—or of challenge.

"Has she ever thanked you properly for saving her from the bull? I haven't. But I intend to."

Brompton came back with the punch and they sipped at it, listening to the talk.

But Caleb found his enjoyment marred by a creeping doubt of Betty Clinton's appearance. Carmen perhaps perceived it. At any rate she seemed to have definitely attached Caleb as her cavalier.

"Come on up into the conservatory," she said. "The room is getting hot. There is a wonderful view of the strait."

They mounted three steps together and went in among the palms and vines, leaving the door open behind them.

"This is better, isn't it?" she asked. She stood close beside him and Caleb was tangibly aware of the appeal of her. She spoke softly. The light subdued her vivid coloring, the flaring hue of her gown, but something emanated from her that made his pulses quicken. She put a hand on his arm, soft and clinging. Caleb could feel the warmth of her palm penetrating the light cloth of his sleeve.

"Now I can thank you for saving me," she said. "You should be rewarded, toreador. What do you want? You can have—anything."

She spoke so softly that he stooped to listen. Her breath was on his face, her eyes held little flames, her lips were parted. Her whole face was a challenge to desire.

Caleb was human. Yet he could not tell himself later who had given the kiss—or taken it. Her fragrance surrounded him, for a second her arm was about his neck, her body supple to his own, with their lips together. The passion of her clinging mouth burned, soft, yet fiery. They were one, welded with something more than merely physical contact.

Then she stepped back with a little laugh, straightening the flower in her hair. Caleb saw that her eyes were looking beyond him. And she laughed again, an odd little murmur of content.

He wheeled. Standing on the threshold of the conservatory was Betty Clinton, at the head of the steps. Behind her was Baxter. Caleb stood as if suddenly frosen, while she passed as if she did not see him.

"It is a perfectly glorious night," she said to Baxter as she moved on. Carmen had vanished. Baxter gave him a malicious smile as he followed Betty to the end of the conservatory. Caleb stood irresolute and then went slowly down the steps into the big room.

The evening was utterly spoiled for him. Carmen rejoined him but he would not reaccept her challenge. He wanted to leave but he stuck it out, conscious that he had deliberately offended Carmen, hardly daring to imagine how Betty had construed the scene she had happened upon with Baxter as her partner. How had Baxter happened to be there on that of all evenings? Caleb remembered that he had said he was a friend of the Vedders but he fancied that, if he had been actually invited, Vedder would have said something about it. Yet Vedder did not necessarily know that Caleb Warner and Fred Baxter were intimates. And it was not a formal affair. Baxter might merely have exercised his right of dropping in.

He found the jade eyes of Mrs. Carquines regarding him with a sidelong glance of humor, of understanding, not lacking in sympathy. He became suddenly conscious that he had stopped listening to her, or talking to her, whichever it might have been, and that he was watching intently the group of which Betty was the hub. Even as he flushed under the scrutiny of his vis-a-vis, Betty nodded to him, pleasantly, as she might to an acquaintance. Not—Caleb decided—as she would have acted if the incident she had chosen to ignore had never occurred.

"You have met Miss Clinton?" asked the artist's wife. "She is a charming girl. She is different—and indifferent—so say the men. She and I are close friends."

"Yes?" Caleb could muster nothing better than the inane syllable.

He was grateful to Mrs. Carquines. Did she mean him to be, he wondered. Had she seen what the rest had missed with those oblique green eyes of hers? And had she tried to help him?

The rest of the affair went on to Caleb as if he looked at it through a screen. Champagne was opened and he saw Baxter lift his brimming glass and rise in a clever speech to his host and hostess. Caleb recollected the doctor's mention of champagne and its action on Baxter. He wondered if the latter would make an ass of himself.

As soon as the first couple gave an excuse Caleb found the Japanese and asked for his hat and coat. His hostess came up.

"You're not going? We're going to have some music. Don't say you have to get up in the morning? You do? Then good-by. You must come again. Don't wait for an invitation. There are some who always drop in, like Ted Baxter. We hadn't seen him for months and now he's been the life of the party. I do hope you've had a good time."

As he reviewed the affair at breakfast the next morning Caleb found no cause for gratulations.

"What did Betty Clinton think of him?" he asked himself, conscious of the fact that he desired nothing more than to stand in her eyes better than any other man. The thing was at an awkward pass. He could not go to her and say—"I want to explain to you the reason why you saw me kissing another girl." She had chosen to ignore the incident once, she surely would continue to do so. But his silence—to which he was committed—left the inference that he was either flirting outrageously with Carmen or serious in his intentions toward her. His annoyance wheeled on Baxter. His enmity toward Caleb appeared as more than a transient streak of bad temper.

With an effort he dismissed the matter, since he could not mend it, resolving to move his quarters at the end of the month and leave Baxter to his own devices.

Mail rattled through the slit in his door. There was a letter from the Crystal Springs company. The directors' meeting was scheduled for the next afternoon. The note was a bare mention of the fact from Cox's secretary. It did not leave him much time. He would have to hurry along the model and his notes for the improvements.

He plunged hard and deeply into it all. He bribed the machinist to work double-time and got a promise that the model would positively be ready. By three he had managed to complete his notes, to secure the pipeline model—not quite finished but sufficiently so—while a special price had secured him prints of his photographs. Thus armed he arrived on time, filled with the invigorating tingle that prefaced the interview, cool enough on the surface, determined to win over any opposition.

He had to wait for a few moments. And, while he waited, he saw the stenographer, Miss Morgan, sending guarded glances in his direction. Once he thought he caught an appeal in her eyes, even a suggestion that she wanted to talk with him. She looked ill, tired, walking without spring, all her spruceness vanished. A bell buzzed, the secretary went into Cox's room and came out again with:

"They're ready for you now, Mr. Warner."

Cox was in his own office to usher him into the directors' room where the big model was on the long table.

"You've met some of us," said Cox genially as he introduced him.

Caleb recognized Morse, of the Lumber ring, Lawler, the oil magnate, Winton of the Light and Power company and Marlin, Thurston's uncle. Hinckley was there. The atmosphere seemed friendly but charged with business. The faces were serious, thoughtful.

"Suppose," said Cox, "that you give us all the same talk you made to Hinckley and myself. We have gone over the matter already, but we should like to hear from you."

Caleb got up and began at the beginning. He spoke fluently. His talk came naturally as he opened up the filing cabinet of his mind. He commenced with Cox's dinner and the first prompting that came from the statement of Golden's lack of water. And he wound up crisply with the production of his pipe-joint model, and the notes and photographs connected with it.

Hinckley's eyes kindled.

"This should solve that problem," he declared. "You have hit upon a bully idea, and the right one, Mr. Warner."

The directors began to sit at ease, to produce cigars or select from a box that circulated to Caleb.

"You're thorough, young man," said Marlin. "Shall we go into conference, Cox?" He looked at his watch.

"We'll ask you to excuse us for fifteen minutes, Mr. Warner," said Cox. "We'll send out for you."

Caleb did not stay in the offices. He paced the corridor outside, smoking, pondering his chances. He had Oakville to fall back upon, but there was always the chance—always the chance in Big Business—that, having given up his knowledge, he might be shuffled out of the game. They knew his plan. They had the money and the influence. They might think themselves able to get along without him. He was a stranger.

He stood at the end of the passage, looking into the street but seeing little. And he smiled grimly. "I'm not a Yankee for nothing," he told himself. "They haven't got all the trumps."

Shakespeare Built Up Language in Writings

When Shakespeare was at the height of his powers, he almost made his language, as the Americans say they do today, as he went along. Dr. George Gordon of Oxford pointed out in a lecture on Shakespeare English before the Royal Institution of London.

Referring to the state of the English language in the Sixteenth century, Professor Gordon said there was no fixed pronunciation or accent and there was neither a standard grammar nor a standard dictionary. The first quality of Elizabethan and therefore of Shakespearean English was its hospitality and its passion for experiment, its willingness to use every form of verbal wealth, to try everything "once, at least."

So far did it go, this movement of linguistic anarchy, declared Professor Gordon, that prudent, word-fearing men grew alarmed, and later new words were blacklisted.

Diogenes and Alexander

The interview between Diogenes and Alexander the Great is supposed to have occurred at Corinth. The monarch asked the cynic philosopher whether there was anything he could do for him. Diogenes replied that the only favor he had to ask of the prince was that he would not stand between him and the sun. In reply Alexander exclaimed: "If I were not Alexander, I would be Diogenes!"

POULTRY

SELECTING FEEDS FOR LAYING HENS

In choosing a feed for the hen flock four things should be considered: First, the digestibility; that is, how much of it may be used to suit the purposes for which it is intended, or how much of it will actually be of value in supplying body needs and building eggs. Second, the composition; that is, the amount of protein, carbohydrates, fats, ash and water which are the real food materials used by the body. Of these, protein is the most valuable, and protein feeds are usually more expensive. Carbohydrates and fats rank second in food value. Third, the palatability; whether or not the bird likes the feed and will eat readily. Fourth, the wholesomeness or cleanliness of the feed; moldy, musty or dirty feed should not be fed. Hence good feed for the hen is easily digested, contains protein, carbohydrates, fat, ash and some water and is palatable.

The ration which is to be used should depend largely upon the material which you have at hand, but you should see that the hen has what feed she needs for the manufacture of eggs. Unless your hens have all the milk they can drink do not leave out the meat scraps in your dry mash and expect them to lay well. A good ration for many flocks is:

Dry Mash.

One part corn meal by weight, 1 part ground oats, 1 part bran, 1 part shorts, 1 part meat scrap or tankage, 1 pound fine table salt to 100 pounds mash.

Scratch Feed.

Two parts cracked corn by weight, 1 part wheat, 1 part oats, barley, cane or kafir corn or a mixture of these feeds.

Aside from the dry mash and scratch feed, the hen should always have access to green feed and minerals, if expected to do her best. Sprouted oats, mangels, cabbage or beets make exceptionally good green feeds. Oyster shells mixed with charcoal are very good to keep before the hens at all times. This mixture should be kept in a small hopper where litter will not be scratched into it. Always see that your dry mash is well mixed, and that it is before the hens at all times in a self-feeder or container which is high enough to prevent litter getting into the container. The scratch feed for chickens that are confined should always be placed in litter so they will have to work to get it.

Fight Poultry Diseases by Timely Prevention

The best way to combat poultry diseases is to prevent them. Insanitary conditions about the poultry house, poor living conditions damp floors, cold drafts and other faults that easily may be corrected are predisposing factors toward disease. One of the first things to do after these things are looked after properly is to isolate any sick bird that may appear in the flock.

"The poultry industry is rapidly growing," says Prof. R. S. Dearstyne of the poultry department at North Carolina State college. "This increase is noticed not only in the larger number of poultrymen but also in the intensity of production. With an increase of birds on the farm comes an increased disease hasard and the most successful method of combating these diseases is to prevent them from occurring."

Professor Dearstyne states that autumn weather usually marks outbreaks of seasonal diseases such as pox, roup, poultry typhoid, contagious bronchitis and pneumonia. The yearly mortality among domesticated birds from these diseases is very large and is usually caused by the owner allowing such diseases to become well established before taking steps to combat them.

Save Early Cockerels

Now is the time to find the fathers for your next year's chicks, say Pennsylvania State college poultry specialists. These potential parents should be selected from fairly early hatches. Do not disgrace the poultry yard by saving weak, late-hatched males. Pick out twice as many "early birds" as you think you will need, so that a heavy culling can be made late in the fall.

Poultry Notes

In poultry production, the breed is not so important as the breeding.

• • •

Feather picking among hens is associated with over-crowding and lack of sufficient range, sunshine and air.

• • •

To have the laying nests full of broody hens is a fine way to reduce the labor of carrying a full egg basket.

• • •

Getting rid of the hens now that are through laying will save labor and feed, and the others will do better because of being less crowded.

• • •

Bone meal, preferably from 2 to 4 per cent of the mash, is one of the "big three" minerals for chickens, the Ohio experiment station has found.

• • •

Well-drained land—sandy, if possible—but in any case, a sloping location, should be selected for the poultry houses and yard. Damp, wet ground breeds disease.

A Good Listener

It has often been said that a woman (or a man either, for that matter) does not need to be a good talker if she or he is a good listener. A woman frequently gains the reputation of being charming solely because she knows how to listen sympathetically and with interest to what others are telling her.

This isn't hard to do when one is out among persons whom one knows more or less well. Courtesy compels a certain amount of real or apparent attention to the remarks of one's dinner companion, and many a discerning woman has discovered that the way to attract a man is not to impress him with cleverness but to let him impress her with his! The better one knows a friend, however, the harder it becomes to listen patiently and attentively, if one is not specially interested.

Hardest of all is it to be a good listener in one's own family. When the man of the house starts on a long harangue about the office and the men working in it, with details about a business deal and an arraignment of his opponents in the field of competition, it takes every ounce of concentration his wife can muster to keep her mind on what he is saying, not to let her thoughts meander off to her own affairs, and to put in an occasional interested question.

Yet these very matters are the foremost things in his life and reviewing them for her sympathetic ear often helps him to think out the way of solving a difficulty, or aids in getting resentment out of his system. If she will stop and think how equally difficult it must be for him to listen patiently to her tales of inefficient servants, the doings of neighbors, or the details of household management, it will help her to be the good listener that every homemaker must learn to become.

To listen attentively to the long winded stories the children bring in, to follow their development by listening to their confidences and encouraging them, is not only to be a good mother but to be as courteous and thoughtful as she expects the children to be in turn.

Our Comfortable Clothes

We women ought to be very grateful, it seems to me, for the increased comfort of our clothes as compared with the fashions of the past. The March magazines of a generation or two ago bristled with illustrations of pretty girls being driven along before a brisk wind like a boat under full sail, their wide skirts blown over their heads and their petticoats, many in number, resembling the myriad petals of a huge rose! Nowadays the snug young woman in her straight, narrow sport coat or fur jacquet and slim skirt, cleaves the stiffest gale without so much as the flutter of a hem.

It has interested me to see how persistently woman has rejected attempted styles that made her uncomfortable or hampered her movements. Probably our growing love of athletics, outdoor life, and greater physical activity have been the cause of this demand for freedom in dress. Long trains that swept the ground, corsets that bound the waist, layers upon layers of underclothes, are not to the taste of the woman who likes to take a brisk walk, play tennis or golf, and dance with the abandon of a young nymph.

When, early this last winter, long skirts made their appearance, with panniers that dipped to the very dust (and accumulated it), and the era of street-sweeping seemed about to return, some women friends and I made a prediction that this fashion would never see the season out. And it hasn't! Skirts are a little longer than last year, to be sure, but the ultra-long ones have been barred, and they have now settled upon that stage of comfort and grace combined that was not found in either the extremely short or the excessively long ones.

Small, close-fitting hats for winter are another of the comforts which women have made popular. Hatpins? Never! Broad-brimmed picture hats to catch the vagrant gusts—not at all! In summer the wide shade hat may be comfortable, to shut out the sun, but don't try to force them on us in winter.

The manufacturers are growing wise. They know that when an uncomfortable style is introduced, only a few silly young girls will adopt it.

Keep in Trim!

Good Elimination Is Essential to Good Health.

THE kidneys are the blood filters. If they fail to function properly there is apt to be a retention of toxic poisons in the blood. A dull, languid feeling and, sometimes, toxic backaches, headaches, and dizziness are symptoms of this condition. Further evidence of improper kidney function is often found in burning or scanty passage of secretions. Each year more and more people are learning the value of Doan's Pills, a stimulant diuretic, in this condition. Scarcely a nook or hamlet anywhere but has many enthusiastic users. Ask your neighbor.

Cholera is getting quite a start in Jackson township in the vicinity of Rehoboth, as reported by farmers there. "It ain't gonna rain no more, so the big party is on tonight, court house lawn, Elks Temple if rain." The above appeared in the Defiance Crescent News of last Saturday. This puts Ye editor in mind of the faith we mortals have, when a congregation met to pray for rain in response to a call of the pastor and official board. Out of the vast number one little girl came with her umbrella and she astonished the older ones by answering her inquisitive friends as to why the umbrella, by saying, she had faith that it woud rain.

A stranger was walking along a country road and happened to pass an orchard. Th farmer had pastured his hogs in the orchard, and the stranger was attracted by their peculiar actions. They were running crasily about and looking up in the trees. The stranger thought the farmer should know about it, so he stopped at the house and told him. The farmer laughed, and said: "Well, sir, there is something funny about that. Last spring I broke my leg, and when I was able to get about I had to use a crutch, and when I fed the pigs I used to rap on the trough with the crutch to call them, and now those woodpeckers nearly drive them mad."

OWNERSHIP OF DOG INVOLVED IN SUIT

Expert Testimony and Much Legal Oratory in Case Tried in Auburn Justice Court

This is a true story about a dog and a big lawsuit to determine its ownership. The suit was tried in Auburn Friday night before Justice of the Peace, E. A. McClintock and it brought out expert testimony, technical points, legal oratary and as large an audience as a suit involving a line fence.

The court room of Justice McClintock was crowded. Eighteen witnesses were sworn, the witnesses living south across the Allen county line and all the way north as far as Waterloo in DeKalb county. There were two plaintiffs and one defendant. The legal ramifications of the unique case even brought in Sheriff W. G. Morr and his deputy, Arden Morr. E. W. Atkinson of the firm of Atkinson & Husselman represented the plaintiffs and Howard S. Grimm, the defendant.

In order to untangle the legal skein about this dog, Justice McClintock was called upon to hear testimony from one side that the dog was a "Red bone coon dog" and from the other side that it was a "Bench walker." Men who know dogs were equally positive in their testimony that the dog was one or the other breed. There was no question about the dog's name It was "Red."

"Red" was claimed by Ray Zimmerman and John Webb of Spencerville. Charles Keester, living west of Auburn, was in possession of the dog when it was taken by Sheriff Morr and placed in the basement of the DeKalb county jail until the controversy as to the ownership could be decided.

Zimmerman and Webb were equal owners of Red. The value of this dog was $50. In the first place Webb was the sole owner of Red. He bought it in the winter of 1921 from Floyd Higgins and afterwards sold a half interest to Zimmerman. Edward Beemer of Woodburn sold the dog to Higgins. Higgins claimd he bought the dog from an Illinois kennel, paying $45 for it. All declared that the dog was a Red bone and that it had a defective right eye. Other witnesses, seven of them, made the same claims.

Keester declared he got the dog from Frank Purdy of Forrst Park addition, Auburn, in December, 1925. He paid the taxes on Red and also paid his mother $2 a month for its keep. Purdy testified that the dog is a ful blooded Bench walker; that he got it some time during the holidays of 1925, kept it a couple of weeks and sold it to Keester. Clyde Husselman, living north of Auburn, had the dog before Purdy got it. Fred Getts, he said, brought the dog to his home. Getts got it from a man by the name of Ruffner.

Sheriff Takes Possession

The testimony went on to show that Zimmerman and Webb went one day to Keester's home for the purpose of buying a dog. Keester had two dogs and both were shown to the prospective customers. They claimed that as soon as they saw the dog they recognized it and told Keester's son, Raymond that they woud return later. They did—with Sheriff Morr and his deputy.

The upshot of the matter was that Sheriff Morr took the dog and put it in the county jail. Sheriff Morr testified that Keester said that he did not want the dog if he had not gotten possession of it properly; that if it was not his, he did not want it. The sheriff said that Zimmerman and Webb said that if the dog was not theirs they did not want it. The agreement was that the dog be kept by the sheriff until it was proven who the owner really was, Mr. Morr declared. All of Keester's witnesses declared the dog is a Bench walker and not a Red bone and that the dog's right eye appeared normal and that the dog has a scar on it's breast where a tumor had been removed.

Attorney Atkinson argued that the possession of the dog was established through a successive line of ownerships back to the kennels from which it first came. Attorney Grimm argued that the dog came into Keester's possession through various changes of ownership back to a man in Ohio. Mr. Grimm declared Sheriff Morr had no right to go on Keester's land and take the dog without papers and that the sheriff trespassed; that Keester came by the dog in good faith, had paid the taxes on it and paid for its keep and was therefore entitled to its possession, and if not, he was entitled to damages.

The court held that the plaintiffs Zimmerman and Webb, are entitled to the dog. After the decision, the dog experts on one side, however, still maintained that the dog is a Red bone while those on the other side maintain that it is a Bench walker. What's more, the argument never will be settled. Legally, the end is not yet. Attorney Grimm declares some one is going to pay the taxes on Red before the time it came in the possession of Mr. Keester.—Star.

CHAPTER 2 IN LEGAL FIGHT FOR POSSESSION

Chapter number two of the famous dog story. Ray Zimmerman and John Webb who won the first skirmish in the legal controversy over the possession of a Red bone coon dog last Friday night in Justice of the Peace E. A. McClintock's court in Auburn were arrester Saturday night on a warrant charging them with harboring a dog without paying the taxes on it. Each plead not guilty when arraigned and each posted a bond of $200. Zimmerman has a surety, Floyd Higgins of Spencerville and Webb's bondsman is John Shilling of Spencerville. Trial for Zimmerman was set for next Friday night at 7 o'clock and for Webb the following Tuesday night at the same hour.

COMPLAINT IN DOG TAX CASE HAS BEEN DISMISSED

The thrid episode of the famous dog case was written Tuesday when H. C. Springer of Butler, DeKalb county prosecuting attorney directed Justice of the Peace E. A. McClintock of Auburn to dismiss the charges filed against Ray Zimmerman and William Webb of Spencerville who were arrested for harboring a dog without paying the taxes. The prosecuting attorney decreed that the cases filed through his office were of a criminal nature only and that cognizance should not be taken in civil actions.

VARIOUS METHODS FOR MAKING BREAD

Satisfactory Article Made From Recipe Given.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

About three and a half pounds of very satisfactory homemade bread can be made from the proportions given below. Hard-wheat or bread flour is called for. If soft-wheat flour is used a larger quantity is needed; also more yeast and sugar than the recipe provides for, says the United States Department of Agriculture in Farmers' Bulletin 1450-F, "Home Baking." For the same amount of liquid about 2½ pounds or 2¾ quarts of sifted soft-wheat flour will be required, and about double the amount of yeast and sugar. The liquid in either case may be milk, water, potato water, or any combination of these. All measurements are level.

About 2¼ pounds, or 2¼ quarts, sifted hard-wheat flour.	2 tablespoonfuls sugar
1⅝ cupfuls liquid	2 tablespoonfuls fat
1 teaspoonfuls salt	1 ounce (2 cakes) yeast

From these ingredients bread may be made by various methods. Only the straight dough method is discussed here. With the ingredients in these proportions and with the temperature about 82 degrees Fahrenheit bread can be made by this method in about four hours from the time the dough is mixed until the loaves are put in the oven. If the time must be shortened, twice or even three times as much yeast may be used and the sugar increased in about the same proportion. The dough must then, of course, be watched very closely, as there is more danger of letting the fermentation go too far. A small quantity of the liquid, about one-half cupful, must be set aside for softening the yeast. If milk is used, it must be scalded first to check the growth of bacteria, and then cooled. In this case the part reserved for soaking the yeast should be cooled quickly, and the rest may be poured while still hot over the sugar, salt and fat.

The Experienced Bread Maker Tells by the Feel of the Dough When Enough Flour Has Been Added.

Other liquids than milk usually do not require heating, but often this is done for convenience in dissolving and melting the sugar, salt and fat. In any case the liquid mixture should be brought to a temperature below 100 degrees Fahrenheit before mixing with the yeast. This exact temperature depends on that of the room and of the flour, and should be so adjusted to these as to bring the temperature of the dough to about 82 degrees Fahrenheit.

The flour, except one cupful, should be added to the liquid and mixed thoroughly with a spoon, the hands or a mechanical bread mixer. All the flour may be added at once if experience has shown the amount necessary. It is impossible, however, to tell beforehand exactly how much flour will be required unless flour from this lot has been used. The experienced bread maker tells by the "feel" of the dough when enough flour has been added.

Allow the bread to rise twice to about its bulk, in a place where the temperature is from 80 to 85 degrees Fahrenheit. Divide the loaves, mold, grease the top surface lightly, and place in pans to rise, regulating the temperature carefully as before. Start to bake in a fairly hot oven, 400 degrees to 415 degrees Fahrenheit, depending on the size of the loaf. A pound loaf should be baked at a higher temperature and more quickly than a pound and a half loaf. Turn the loaves around after 20 minutes and lower the temperature of the oven. Bake from 45 minutes to 1 hour.

COTTAGE CHEESE MADE FROM SKIM MILK

Cottage Cheese Pie, One of the Good Dishes That Can Be Made From This Valuable Food.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Cottage cheese made from skim milk furnishes all the food principles found in milk except the butterfat. If desired, cream may be added to make up for this deficiency. There are many ways in which cottage cheese may be served cooked, as well as in its original form.

Peaches or Apricots May Be Peeled by Use of Lye

In case a bushel or more of peaches or apricots is to be canned at one time, they may be peeled with the use of lye, but this method is not justified with a smaller quantity, says the United States Department of Agriculture. It is necessary to be careful in using the lye, especially if there are children around, for it is a powerful caustic and serious accidents have happened.

To peel peaches or apricots with lye, prepare in an agateware or iron kettle, a solution of one-fourth pound of granulated lye of a standard brand, in two gallons of water. This quantity is equal to four ounces or four level tablespoonfuls of lye. Never use an aluminum kettle for this purpose. Heat the mixture to boiling, and while actively boiling immerse the peaches or apricots in a wire basket until the skin is loosened and partially dissolved. This will usually require 30 to 60 seconds. Remove the fruit, wash it at once in running water, if possible, until the skin and lye are removed, and thoroughly rinse the fruit. If still water is used, rinse the fruit in a fresh supply after washing off the skin and lye.

Hominy Grits Left Over Always Find Much Favor

Left-overs of hominy grits, browned in butter or other fat, are unusually good, and can be served at any meal. The hominy is boiled first and often part at least is served as a mush, either for breakfast or to accompany sausage or other meat. What is left is poured while warm into a bread tin to mold it so that attractive slices can be cut when it is cold. The slices should be at least half an inch thick. They are dipped in flour and fried to a delicate brown on all sides. The United States Department of Agriculture points out that care should be taken to have the fat sufficiently hot so that a crust is quickly formed, while the inside of the slice remains soft. Time the cooking of the fried hominy grits so as to have them hot and ready at the moment they are to be eaten.

For dinner, fried grits may take the place of other starchy foods, such as potatoes, rice, or macaroni, or they may be used for dessert with a favorite sirup, honey, preserves, or sugar and cinnamon. Served in either way, fried hominy grits may be the main dish at lunch or breakfast, much as waffles or pancakes are used.

Spanish Sauce Depends Much on a Combination

Spanish or creole sauce depends for its characteristic flavor on a combination of pimento or green pepper, tomato, celery, and onion, according to the United States Department of Agriculture. Minced ham or bacon is often added as in the following recipe, but for a Lenten menu may be omitted. The ingredients are:

1 pint canned tomatoes	1 chopped green pepper or equal quantity of chopped canned pimentoes
½ cupful finely chopped raw celery	2 tablespoonfuls butter
2 tablespoonfuls of chopped onion	½ tablespoonful minced parsley
1 tablespoonful of sugar (if liked)	1 bay leaf
4 tablespoonfuls of minced ham or bacon	Salt and pepper to taste

The onion is minced and cooked in the butter until it is tender and yellow; then the peppers, celery, tomatoes and seasonings are added and simmered together for half an hour. Remove the bay leaf before serving. This sauce will be somewhat thickened as the moisture cooks out of the various vegetables, but it will need at least a tablespoonful of flour blended with a little melted butter stirred in toward the end of the cooking period. Pour it over the omelet and serve.

Housekeepers Often Ask What Is Essential Food

It is impossible to make a list of the essential foods, says the United States Department of Agriculture. There are essential nutrients, or nourishing substances, in foods, however, and we may list foods that contain these essential nutrients. Such a list for a child one and a half years or older would contain for a day at least a pint of milk; an egg or helping of meat; a whole-grain cereal breakfast food, or whole-grain bread, or a baked or boiled potato. At one meal at least one cooked vegetable other than potato; at one meal fruit, fresh, canned, or dried; and at another fresh fruit or a raw green vegetable such as lettuce, or a little canned tomato. Added to these there should be butter at every meal.

SCHOOLGIRL'S AUTUMN FROCK; ANENT DAINTY UNDERTHINGS

JUST about now by the calendar, coed and schoolgirl are deeply engrossed in a pursuit of knowledge other than higher mathematics, a study far more complex and surely more fascinating. This particular course of learning has to do with "clothes" and the most engrossing chapters treat especially on good-dressing in school-room and on campus. This delving into fashion literature is an annual prologue to the "first day of school."

The general rule as set down by Madame Mode insists that schoolgirl apparel, while actually abounding in subtle intriguing details, must nevertheless at all times give the impression of sweet simplicity. For autumn, 1926, materials sprightly in color are given highest mention, specifying as leading in favor the following: jersey weaves, fine flannel, covert, rep, a new basket-woven worsted, and wool crepe for solid colored fabrics while plaids and checks feature among novelties.

Tailored of Gay Cloth.

In regard to the styling of school dresses certain outstanding details are given, such as sleeves must be long, girlish turnover collars fit close up to the throat, fulness in skirts is attained by plaits most frequently, although many models call for shirring or smocking. Indeed the subject of shirring is a very new and important one in the latest fashion curriculum. Bolero treatments are various and numerous and a belt and buckle with every dress bids fair to be the rule.

Speaking of belts, they are as often of the material of the dress as of leather. In either event the buckle must not be omitted. Illustrative of a very proper and pleasing schoolgirl frock is the one shown in the picture. It is of wine-colored wool crepe and it has the inevitable buckled belt. also please observe that there is a bit of shirring at each shoulder, for shirring is taking place with tucks or plaits in matter of importance.

Such a wilderness of beauty! We are speaking of the oh-so-lovely underthings which make up fashion's collection for the forthcoming months. Here is a word of advice to maiden and matron planning the buying of new lingerie—put not off the shopping tour until the wee sma' hours of the afternoon. Better order James to bring the limousine to the door prompt and early in the morning, for it is going to prove an all-day tour you will be wanting to make, once you glimpse fashion's fairyland as staged this season in the lingerie specialty shops and departments.

Or perhaps you are of the number who take pleasure and pride in making your prettiest lingerie in preference to buying. If so the recipe according to which Dame Fashion is styling the daintiest, choicest undergarments which go to make up the new season's showing is as follows: Mix yards and yards and "then some" of filmy lace or footing, if preferred, with adorable ribbons galore. Apply these deftly to deliciously colorful crepe, crepe-back satin, georgette or voile in connection with profuse fine tucking, shirring, hand-embroidery, applique and the like. The lacier the garment the better.

Here are some general notes on the subject of beautiful lingerie "as now is," according to fashion's report. Pajamas are all but usurping the place of the gown. Here and there the waistline is taking a higher position on chemise. Necklines on gowns are apparently favoring the round version.

In some instances the short bloomer holds sway in autumn lingerie sets, at least it is competing with the costume slip. Step-in drawers are also favored such as the picture shows. It has lacy insets with footing for edging. The fabric for this garment may be of crepe satin or crepe de chine or colorful cotton crepe. Peach and flesh tints remain first in favor, though all pastel shades are well thought of while black lingerie is the very latest.

Lacy and Colorful.

ST. JOE, INDIANA

TIME IS PASSING SEPTEMBER WARNING

It seems but a few weeks since everyone around St. Joe were sending up prayers of thanks that one of the longest winters on record had passed, and here we are right on the edge of another one. Frost and cold weather are not, as a rule, very far away when September rolls around, and in fact we have already had a light frost in this vicinity. And September still serves as a warning month of the year. September warns us of the need of making repairs to the house and outbuildings, to the sidewalks and streets, and especially to the outlying country roads. It warns us of the necessity for laying in the winter's supply of fuel, and also that the clothing merchant must be reckoned with as a little heavier clothing will very soon be necessary.

September is too good a month to let slip by without a lot of work being accomplished. Our town officials should be among the first to realize this and they should see that the fine weather usually afforded us in September is taken advantage of, and that streets and alleys are cleaned, repaired and put in shape for fall and winter. And we might say here that this year was the first for a long time, that our town officials failed to observe Clean-Up Day and by appearances their attention ought to be turned in that direction. The farmer does not have to be told what to do in September—he knows it is the "repair and prepare" month, and he doesn,t lose a minute of it. But town folks usually need to have their memory jogged a little—and that is the purpose of this article not that we wish to find fault with anyone in particular, but simply because of the negligence of some. This occasion is being used to warn them not to let September slip by without preparing for the cold months on ahead, when it will be difficult and uncomfortable to do outside work.

INSURANCE INCREASED ON INDIANA FARM PROPERTY

A ten per cent increase in insurance rates on farm property was approved by Thomas S. McMurray, Jr., state insurance commissioner, after objections by representatives of farmers of the state had been withdrawn.

According to Mr McMurray, the increase has been delayed since last April, when insurance companis writing farm property insurance in this state petitioned for the increase. Under the law, Mr. McMurray said, an increase of 25 per cent could have been requested, based on experince tables of this state, which show that over a period 0f the last five years losses of 70 per cent have been suffered by the companies.

The new rate will go into effect Oct. 1. In commenting on the increase, Mr. McMurray said. "If the insurance public is going to continue to expect the insurance companies to keep their property in repair, increased rates are bound to follow."

PITCHFORK USED DURING QUARREL

While county authorities were interviewing George Hahn, 70-year-old Highland township man Friday afternoon preliminary stp filing charges as the result of an assault at 5 a. m. with a pitchfork that resuted in Mr. Hahn being in a serious condition, George Boggs, 35, is in the Defiance county jail held in connection with the quarrel over the tenancy of Hahn's farm.

Mr. Hahn was struck several times with the handle of the fork and his hands were pierced with the tines. Boggs said Hahn menaced him with a .32 calibre revolver. The old gentleman is in a serious condition and action is being delayed awaiting developments.

WINTER STORES FOR BEES

When honey in the hive is not of the best quality, it is unsafe for winter stores in any place where the bees do not have frequent flights during the winter, viz, almost every week. In the North, about 10 or 12 pounds of sirup made from two parts granulated sugar to one part water should be fed as soon as the bees have ceased brood rearing, as an insurance against the danger of poor honey. It is wiser, however, to have an upper story or "food chamber" already filled with the finest honey of the season, ready to place just above the brood chamber when the section supers or other surplus arrangements are removed. This will do away with the need of fall or spring feeding.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to acknowledge to our friends and neighbors with sincere thanks the kind expressions of sympathy shown to us in our recent bereavement.

Mrs. Pauline Jordan
Mr. and Mrs. G. M. Barney.

A woman has a hard time deciding whether to keep her china set unbroken or to let her husband help with the dishes.

Peace, Goodwill

Columbia, Peace and the Spirit of Brotherly love have been joined in one person, a beautiful woman. This young lady was one of the central figures in a pageant staged at the Sesqui-Centennial International Exposition in Philadelphia, celebrating 150 years of American Independence. The Exposition continues until December 1.

LOCAL PITCHERS SEE PROFESSIONALS

Earl Smith, Frank Walker, D. D. Burley and George Swineford were at Garrett Saturday night, taking in the horse shoe contest. They report some of the best pitching they ever witnessed. Putt Mossman of Eldora, Iowa, for two years world champion played with Jimmy Risk, state champion of Montpelier, Ind., and Jimmy carried off all honors.

Risk, who is only eighteen, also has an enviable record. He has never been able financially to attend the contest for world's championship title. He has, however, during official contests made the following records: 69 ringers in a 50-point game; 95 per cent ringers in a 50-point game, which is 5 per cent more than the official world's record; 14 straight doubels in one game, which is two more than the official world's record.

'TAINT ENOUGH T' FOOL WITH!

Th biggest mistake a business man can make is to think that he cannot afford to advertise because he has only a small amount to invest in advertising.

Even the mighty oaks have grown from acorns. Here's a tip. The public believes in advertising, and the public generally has the last word—and the pocketbook as well.

Advertising is printed salesmanship. It may deal with an institution, a store, an idea, or a product—but it must sell!

AMONG OUR SICK

Mrs. Lillian Buckingham is ill, taking suddenly last week. Today she is reportd some better.

Frank Scholes is not able to work although about, due to a breaking down of the nervous system.

Mrs. Florence Buchanan, who has been on the sick list for the past few weeks, is slowly improving.

Mrs. Leora Thayer of Hicksville and Mrs. Bertha Haney of Kendallville, are here assisting in the care of Mrs. Dr. Sheffer, who remains about the same at the time of going to press.

School supplies, tablets, pencils, and paper, erasers, rulers, paste, note books, and in fact most everything you need at the News office.

You can get transfer paper at News office in large or small sheets.

THE REAL QUESTION OF TAXATION

What does it cost to build a school building? This seems to be one of the most important questions before the people of unconsolidated townships today. It is easy to answer this question in such a way as to relieve the mind of the most timid taxpayer in the state.

Of course the number of students who are to be cared for will determine to a great extent the size of the building, and the size of the building will have a great deal to do with the cost. Also the question of materials will have to be considered i. e., whether it is to be constructed of first grade material throughout or not.

Let us suppose that the township expects to go to the limit and use every available dollar and build a large building of first class material. How much will it cost each individual?

There is a law on the statute books of the state of Indiana which says that no school corporation shall be bonded for school purposes for more than 2 per cent of the assessed valuation according to the last recorded assessment. Most school bonds are drawn for fifteen years. The interest on the bonds must be paid of course but the interest decreases each year as the bonds are retired. Thus the interest for the entire fifteen years will be about one third of the principal. So if the township spent all the law would permit, the principal and interest would only be about 4 per cent of the assessed valuation.

The taxpayer is given fifteen years in which to pay his 4 per cent. Let us illustrate. If the taxpayer has $10,000 worth of property, 4 per cent of it would be $400. This is the total amount of his payment for principal and interest on the building. That is about $26.66 per year. Or, in other words, if the township spends all the law will permit, it will cost the taxpayer who has $10,000 worth of property a little less than the cost of one San Felice cigar per day.

Of course people are taxed for other things but we doubt if many of the other causes are so worthy of our money as our children or the other fellow's children.

RALLY DAY SEASON IS APPROACHING

The Rally Day season is here for the Sunday Schools of the county, a time when each school is endeavoring to enlist her constituency in the work, and besides they are asking for those not affiliated with any church school, to enlist for active service in their particular school. Programs of an entertaining and denominational appeal will be given, so that people may be enlightened as to what the church is doing. The first service in this community will be next Sunday morning at the M. P. Church and a welcome is extended to you.

Shortly other announcements will be made from the other churches of this community, informing the non-church goer of their service and extending a welcome.

GOOD SPEAKER AT REHOBETH SUNDAY

John Good, a representative of the Bowery Mission and Boys' Home of New York City, will speak at Rehoboth church in Jackson township, next Sunday, Octoerb. 3. He will speak immediately following Sunday School and again in the aftrnoon at 2,o'clock. Mr. Good is a nationally known speaker and the county is indeed fortunate in securing him for this occasion. An invitation is extended to every one to attend. No admission will be charged.

SPENCERVILLE AND LEO PLAY TIE GAME

Rain and Darkness Ends Game in Sixth Inning

The Spencerville and Leo high school base ball teams played a 1 to 1 tie here today. Both teams were playing good ball when the game was called at the first half of the sixth inning on account of the darkness and rain. Furnish pitched good ball for the local team although he was a little wild in the beginning, hitting Trimbile in the first inning. Leo used two pitchers, Gerig and VanZile.

Virgil Laux stepped into the catcher's position, left vacant by Beams's injury, and made a good start. Score:

Spencerville	0	0	0	1	0	—	1	2	2

Batteries: Gerig and V. VanZile and Nuenshwander; Furnish and V. Laux.

FRED HART TAKES FIRST PRIZE FOR SECOND TIME

Fred E. Hart, of St. Joe, who won first prize in the farm display of the Defiance County Fair, used the same plan again this year and was given the leading award of $85. This was the seventh year either Mr. or Mrs. Hart have entered a farm display and the second consecutive year they have cashed checks on the agricultural soceity.

Approximately 400 pieces, including many varieties of farm produce, composed the display, the center piece of which was a large cornu-copia covered with crepe paper. Fruits of almost every description were artistically arranged about the bell of the horn, and then on each side of it extended a vast array of melons, fruits, vegetables and grains.

For the last few years, a group of exhibitors have sought this award until a spirit of friendly rivalry has sprung up among them. Mrs. Chas. McCollough of Hicksville took the second prize of $60; Clyde Hart of Spencerville, Ind., third award of $50; Lavon McCullough of Hicksville, fourth of $35 and Glen Hart of St. Joe, Ind., fifth, $20.

COOLIDGE TOLD NATION BEHIND DRY DRIVE

President Coolidge has been told that the nation has swung behind the administration's drive for "more and better enforcement of prohibition."

At a White House visit, Wayne B. Wheeler, general counsel of the Anti-Saloon League, and foremost dry spokesman, declared the next Congress will remain "bone dry."

The prohibition enforcement problem, in spite of the clamor of "modificationists" and "nullificationists" on the whole is satisfactory, the President was told.

Wheeler pointed out that, with nominations over except in Rhode Island, where conventions will be held next month, only 99 out of 394 old members of Congress renamed are "wet."

Out of the forty-one new members, the best the wet forces can hope to win is eighteen, unless the drys go to sleep at the election, the President was informd.

A RECORD RAIN PERIOD IN 1891

The rain, it continues without effort, and is therefore the one thing uppermost in conversation, because, too, it is becoming alarming in more ways than one. Wheat and oats are still in the field and the probabilities are never will be threshed. Wheat sowing time is here and no fields are prepared and should it continue in this fashion, no wheat will be sown. This extreme dampness has brot forth many recollections of former wet years and Rev. J. N. Scholes remarked that in May of 1891, it rained some each day for thirty-one days. Evidently that is a record that has never been beaten.

IN BRIBERY CASE

Richard Merton, chief witness in the trial of Harry Daugherty and T. W. Miller, accused of conspiracy to defraud the government in the "metals case," has testified to paying a large sum to the late John T. King as a fee for his services but denied that he had any intention of bribing the defendants.

BOLERO STYLING IS FEATURED; PAJAMAS ARE MUCH IN FAVOR

MORE and more as the new styles come in one realizes that the bolero is being accorded a flattering amount of attention in the realm of dress design. A very charming styling does the bolero impart. One of the distinguishing points about the bolero is, it can be interpreted in an exceedingly conventional tailored way or it can be made to look too utterly cunning and dressy for words. And is it youthful in appearance? For answer in the affirmative, don a bolero frock, then look at your reflection in the mirror.

It has become an established fact in regard to the near-future modes that they are to be extremely ornate and dressy. The bolero handling is right in harmony with this trend to elaboration, for it calls for more than one fabric and gracefully yields to any amount of ornamentation. The beautiful frock in the picture is an excellent example of how artfully a bolero costume may be contrived. This suit-dress is made of navy charmeen, the bolero posed over a waist of black crepe satin, the same heavily embroidered with silver applique. Silver ribbon with a narrow edging of seal outlines the bolero. The sleeves disclose an elaborate treatment about the wrist and the gypsy sash is gayly fringed in multicolor and silver. The skirt follows the very short narrow youthful silhouette

Very practical and wearable are the neat cloth, crepe or satin bolero dresses which are usually in navy or black, with waists of flesh-colored silk styled in a strictly tailored way. There is usually a turnover round collar and wide turnback cuffs of the waist material. Just a bit dressier becomes the effect if allover lace be used instead of the tailored satin.

Sometimes the bolero idea is combined with that of the multi-tiered skirt and there is a convincing presence of utmost modishness in a costume thus designed.

For the schoolgirl the contrasting waist is very effective and youthful when of plaid taffeta. The vogue for navy blue continues and wool crepe in this always genteel and pleasing color makes up handsomely in the bolero styling. Clever narrow belts give a smart and indeed, a very pleasing touch of the tailored bolero dress.

Now that the fair sex has made up its mind that pajamas are quite to its liking, nothing short of amazing are the style developments which have followed in the wake of this vogue. One may be ever so conservative in most matters pertaining to dress, but when it comes to the subject of pajamas one is expected, yea encouraged, to give full play to all those secret longings for gay color and bizarre effect which every woman more or less must cherish and desire to gratify.

So it is, that no material is too elegant, no color too extreme, no decorative feature too elaborate for the styling of the modern pajama. Recently the mode has taken a turn for long straight trousers of tailored aspect surmounted by a long coat of flamboyant coloring and styling. The very handsome pajama version here pictured is illustrative of the new trend. It has a three-quarter-length coat of gay print crepe de chine offsetting chartreuse green satin trousers. There is a graceful bordering of the satin about the coat with broad cuffs of the same finishing the sleeves and reflecting the cuffs about the trousers.

Conspicuously handsome is a jacket of gorgeously printed satin, topping trousers of black satin, which are cuffed with the print. By the way, unusual cuff treatments are an outstanding feature among recent pajama creations.

Handsome Pajamas Show New Trend.

Contrasting the pajama of regal splendor, which flaunts rare oriental embroideries and magnificent weaves with much gold and silver adornment, are the daintier lacy types so alluring in delicate tint, fluttering ribbons and adorable bouquets achieved by exquisite handwork. Often the edges of coat and trousers are finished with fine net footing instead of lace. Quite likely the pocket on the blouse will be an applique of a cunning flower basket.

Dyed all-over lace makes a filmy sheer flowing coat, to wear over a crepe or satin pajama of some delectable shade. Of more formal beauty is the coatee of metal lace, topping trousers of some rich toned hue.

The WATER BEARER

By J. ALLAN DUNN

Author of "A MAN TO HIS MATE" "RIMROCK TRAIL"

By Dodd, Mead & Co. WNU Service

His name was called. Cox's secretary had come after him.

"Your proposition, as we understand it," said Cox, "is that you should be paid one hundred thousand dollars for your project—after it has been approved by our engineers and declared practical—and that you are given due acknowledgment of yourself as originator of the project, with a position as consulting engineer during the completion of the work?"

Caleb nodded.

"That is it."

"It's a lot of money," said Marlin, apparently addressing the smoke of his cigar.

"It's a lot of water," replied Caleb good-humoredly.

"You'll turn over your invention to the company?" This was Marlin again.

"You mean the pipe junction? I'll give the company free use of it. I am applying for patents. I shall hold those. I will allow the Crystal Springs corporation free use of it anywhere on the Pacific coast."

Marlin grunted.

"We'll agree to your terms, Warner," said Cox. "The engineer's salary will be ten thousand dollars per annum. We'll make contract with you for five years at that sum, if you wish?"

Caleb shook his head.

"For the duration of this work," he said. "I appreciate the honor but I should prefer to be foot-loose after that. Will you put the rest of your agreement in writing?"

A pair of steely eyes bored into him. They belonged to Morse of the Lumber interests.

"We are going to make it a motion, young man. That should satisfy you."

"If I can have a copy of the minutes."

Cox laughed.

"Are you a lawyer as well as a civil engineer, Warner? You shall have a copy of the minutes—certified—if you wish. You Yankees!" he ended humorously.

Marlin walked over toward Caleb who had moved to the door. He nipped Warner's elbow familiarly. "We're glad you came out here, Mr. Warner. You're the kind of man we want. We'll make a Westerner out of you in no time. Don't let the climate get you. It sometimes affects our second generations. Good-by."

Caleb went out warm in his feeling toward these men. He had won. He was the Water-Bearer, on no small scale.

He left the elevator elated, his head up, turning to the entrance, when he felt a touch on his arm. It was the stenographer, Mary Morgan.

"Mr. Warner," she said hurriedly. "I want to see you alone. It is important. And it is your business, not mine. Though I am connected with it. Will you meet me at Haight's at a quarter after five, that will be as soon as I shall have time to get there after work this afternoon. In one of the upstairs compartments. The captain will tell you which one."

He looked at her uncertainly. Haight's was the fashionable restaurant. There was nothing disreputable about the place. Still the compartments—in the afternoon especially—were generally reserved for couples that had reason for seclusion, that were accepted as intimate and not always conventional.

"You will be sorry if you don't come," she said. "It is the best place."

Her eyes challenged his seriously. They held a portent that communicated itself.

"All right, I'll be there," he said. And half regretted the determination before he reached the street.

He turned up Grant avenue towards his office. A landaulet braked at the curb. The door opened and Betty Clinton stepped out directly in front of him. Caleb took off his hat. His pulses had jumped. Then they stopped for an instant. She had cut him, deliberately, cruelly, looking at him as if he had been a stranger who had halted to let her, his superior, pass.

CHAPTER XI

At Haight's

Once again with Caleb the question of Betty Clinton became paramount. He had come out of the offices of the Water company a deserving conqueror, pardonably elated, a bright road stretching ahead of him. Now the vistas of his life were drab. Inspiration, the desire for success, seemed to have flowed out of him like water out of a drain. The reason was plain enough, the fact one that he could not overcome nor set aside. Betty Clinton had gone out of his life and, without her, life hardly seemed worth bothering about.

She had given him less attention than she would have bestowed upon a street beggar. There at least some charity would have shown in her gaze. But for Caleb her eyes had held nothing—as if he had never existed.

Something had happened within the last forty odd hours. It was inconceivable that the affair at the Vedders was responsible for the deliberate slight she had put upon him. She had heard something, a slander, that had turned her utterly against him.

And that meant Baxter. No one else. The pointer of Circumstance infallibly swung toward him. He might still imagine that Caleb could have loaned him the money, had deliberately deceived him at the time when he most needed help. In revenge he had carried a tale to Betty Clinton. But what sort of tale was it that she had listened to upon so short acquaintance? She was not the type to listen readily, to pass a hasty judgment.

He paced up and down his little office, the sweets of victory turned bitter, trying to bring logic to bear upon the situation, without avail. At five o'clock he started for the cafe to meet the stenographer, holding a vague idea that she might be able to throw some light upon the matter.

He entered the foyer of the restaurant, filled with people coming from the matinee, and mounted the stairs to meet the deferential captain of the waiters. Caleb gave him his card.

"A lady should be waiting for me," he said.

The man glanced at the card and returned it, receiving in exchange a crinkly bill that was deftly palmed and vanished. Then he led the way, catfooted, down a soft-carpeted corridor, stopping before a certain pair of drawn curtains and touching a bell in the partition frame.

"It is monsieur," he announced, withdrew and glided down the passage. Caleb entered the alcove.

It had an arched opening that looked out over the main floor of the cafe. The opening was partially blocked with artificial orange trees, the fruit represented by small electric bulbs. By the side of the opening, unseen from below, angled in the corner behind the curtains, sat the stenographer. The glow from the mock oranges gave the oval of her face a weird quality.

It robbed her of all benefit from rouge and powder and turned her features to a tragic mask of weariness and strain. She was only a shadow of the blooming picture that had once held the "place of present honors" on Baxter's bureau.

"You will have to order something," said the girl. Her voice was toneless. She had made no motion since he entered.

It Was the Stenographer, Mary Morgan.

He touched a bell and a sleek waiter almost instantly tapped and appeared.

"A sandwich," said the girl languidly. "Chicken sandwich, Emile—Some tea—strong—in a cup. Kiros cigarettes, straw tips."

"Just tea for me," said Caleb.

"Yes sir, in a cup, sir?"

"Of course."

It was plain that the girl had been in the balcony alcoves at Haight's before. The fact was more evident when the tea—"strong, in a cup," arrived. It was Scotch whisky. After she had sipped it down a little sparkle came to her eyes. She took a cigarette, tapped its end and lit it.

"If you don't mind I'll smoke before we talk?" she said and inhaled avidly. It seemed to restore her animation somewhat. She folded her long-fingered hands on the cloth and looked directly at Caleb.

"Ted Baxter is a great friend of yours, I suppose?"

There was a sneering quality to her voice that made it harsh. The sparkle in her eyes had changed to a steady glitter.

"We have been friends for a great many years," Caleb answered.

She gave a low, short laugh. Evidently she knew about the quarrel.

"I have come here to sell you something," she said. "As I told you, it is to your interest to listen to me. I want money enough to leave Golden, to go East for a while. You can imagine why. It'll take fifteen hundred dollars. My information should be worth many times that."

"Knowing I am a friend of Baxter's, why do you apply to me for the money? Isn't he the one to supply it for that purpose? Doesn't he intend to?"

"I don't know whether he does or not. You know all about his mother and the stock deal? He's broke. Even if he puts over his land deal he'll need it all to square his debts—of honor."

Her voice was acid with satire. "Suppose we leave him out of this for a bit," she said almost fiercely. "This affair is between you and me."

"What is it?"

She eyed him narrowly, lighting another cigarette. With the curious cadmium tint of the mock orange globes on her face, the spark of the cigarette as she inhaled it, the glitter in her eyes, her attitude, she appeared jaded, over worldly, cynical, rapacious.

"If I should tell you that there are parties who plan to block your plans with the Water company, if I should tell you who they are, what knowledge they possess, how they expect to use it, will you give me the money?"

"It depends upon whether the information is valuable enough. Whether their plans are really dangerous to my interests—and to those of the company."

"I am dealing with you, Mr. Warner. I've made carbons of the minutes of the meetings. I want your word that you'll give me the money before I give away my information. I'll go further," she went on as she saw hesitancy in Caleb's eyes. "You have other interests than just with the Crystal Springs crowd. This affects those as well."

"What do you mean?"

She lowered her voice. "You are interested in Miss Clinton."

Caleb hardened. But the girl was staring at him and he felt that somehow he had betrayed himself, for she gave a little satisfied smile.

"We'll leave her out of it," he said. She shook her head.

"We can't. I'm another woman. Not a man. I'm not saying anything detrimental to her. But this touches her as well as you. Now will you give me your promise and listen?"

Caleb reflected rapidly. He could manage the fifteen hundred. It was a big sum. Even with his attained hundred thousand, with his promised salary, it still seemed large. He could not undo in a moment the instincts due to heredity and training. But the girl had struck the right note. He felt that she held the key to Betty Clinton's conduct towards him. And, as he realized that, the money lost all value.

"All right," he said. "I promise."

"You propose to dam Hermanos valley. That is a main point in your plan. To hold back the storm waters. It shows on the model and in your specifications. Well, you can't get Hermanos valley."

"Why not? Public utility can command condemnation proceedings."

"It can't supersede a previous contract to sell."

Caleb stared. The girl was no ordinary employee. She was clever enough to have a good grasp of the affair. He saw immediately that, in her semi-confidential position of assistant to Cox's secretary, she had had access to details. She had seen the model. And she had been the one to supply the parties she spoke of with their information. Baxter was in it, of course.

"What is this contract? Who holds it?"

"It is a year's option of sale. Baxter holds it."

For a moment Caleb saw red but he controlled himself under the girl's watchful eyes.

"I'll tell you how he got it. He has been looking for an acreage to suit certain clients who want to locate near here. You told him about Hermanos. He thinks he was clever to get it out of you. Though I don't think you two had quarreled then. But you did. And he wanted to get even. He met Miss Clinton and her father. He learned that Mr. Clinton had been thinking of selling, but with reservations, holding back the home ranch and the place where all the Clintons were buried. That gave him his idea. Oh, he's smart enough. At first I think he just wanted to tie up the valley to spite you and ruin your plans by selling it to his clients. But this opened something more. A chance to put you in absolutely wrong with the Clintons, with Betty Clinton. He knows you are in love with her. And so is he!"

Newspaper Gets New Ideas About Culture

Most of us have been a bit hazy as to just what culture is. We have perhaps generally taken our cue from Matthew Arnold, who had a notion that culture involved knowing the best that had been thought and known, that it was the pursuit of sweetness and light, and that its motto should be to make the reason and will of God prevail. But the address of Mr. John Cowper Powys on the subject expands our ideas, the Kansas City Times comments. We are informed that the cultured person is detached and sophisticated, that he defends himself from bounders by saying, "Really! Indeed! How interesting!" That he is capable of renouncing friends, family, church, business. That he escapes from the world by reading the classic authors. Finally, we infer that a touch of indigestion is desirable in order to keep the cultured one at the proper pitch of dissatisfaction with the world. Otherwise he might get to enjoying life as Robert Browning did. Well, we always are glad to enlarge our experience and whittle down the edges of our ignorance. Especially are we consoled to learn that when we feel most like the human crab, when we are unusually disagreeable, and full of spleen, then are we most cultured.

Evil of Prejudice

It is no exaggeration to say that the greatest obstacle to human progress along every line is to be found in human prejudices. It is our prejudices that blind us to the truth, and it is truth alone that can ever make men free.—John Herman Randall.

It is a fantastic notion that going to bed late makes life interesting.

REVIEW—EARLY LEADERS OF ISRAEL

GOLDEN TEXT—Let us run with patience the race set before us, looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith.—Heb. 12:1, 2.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Favorite Stories of the Quarter.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Stories of the Leaders of Israel.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Striking Incidents of the Quarter.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Main Teachings of the Quarter.

It is strange that the lesson committee should have selected the title "Early Leaders of Israel" when only Moses appears. A better title would have been "Moses, the Leader of Israel." In such a case consideration should be given to Moses' life, character and teaching. Indeed, a good method of review would be to use this plan for the quarter's lessons. Another method of review would be to give a synthetic view of the book of Exodus, since all the lessons of the quarter are taken from that book. However, for the senior and adult classes the best method will be to recall the principal fact and then state the leading lesson of each Sunday's lesson of the quarter. To aid in this, the following suggestions are given:

Lesson for July 4.

When the time drew nigh for God to deliver His chosen people He caused them to multiply greatly. Envy and alarm incited the new king to institute measures to check Israel's increase. The attempt to carry these measures out not only displayed their futility but brought to be sheltered and nurtured in the king's palace the very one who later upset Pharaoh's throne.

Lesson for July 11.

When Moses was born, his mother perceived that he was a child of destiny. The king's edict was that every male child should be destroyed, but the faith of his mother moved her to hide him. When no longer able to hide him he was preserved in an ark of bulrushes and taken in charge by Pharaoh's daughter. At the suggestion of Miriam, his mother was called as a nurse. He was educated both at his mother's knee and in the Egyptian court.

Lesson for July 18.

While Moses was keeping Jethro's sheep, God appeared to him in a burning bush and commissioned him a deliverer of His people. Moses faltered but God patiently heard and met his difficulties.

Lesson for July 25.

In memory of the great deliverance of Israel from bondage, the passover was instituted. All who were under the blood were saved from the destroying angel.

Lesson for August 1.

God permitted the Israelites to get into straitened circumstances after leaving Egypt, in order to teach them to trust Him and also to lay a snare for the enemy.

Lesson for August 8.

Before going far into the wilderness the people lusted for the fleshpots of Egypt. God answered their murmurings by giving them quails and manna to eat. Christ is the true manna sent down from God to man. Those who eat of his bread shall never die.

Lesson for August 15.

Jethro, seeing Moses completely occupied with the judging of Israel, advised that Moses should be to the people Godward and that all the weightier matters should be cared for by him and that suitable men should be appointed to judge the smaller matters. God's work should be carefully organized so as to relieve his ministers of unnecessary burdens.

Lesson for August 22.

To love God with all the heart, soul, strength and mind is the fulfillment of the first four commandments of the Decalogue.

Lesson for August 29.

Loving our neighbor as we love ourselves is the fulfillment of the last six commandments of the Decalogue. Supreme love to God and love to our fellowman as we love ourselves is the sum total of human duty.

Lesson for September 6.

God through Christ dwells in the midst of His people—just as He did in the midst of Israel in the tabernacle.

Lesson for September 12.

In carrying on of God's work all should offer willingly such gifts as they have.

Lesson for September 19.

Disobedience to God's laws always brings calamities, while obedience to God's law is always accompanied with blessings.

Hatched by Light Bulb

An electric light bulb as a substitute for the mother bird is a success in hatching quail, according to Game Warden A. C. Wagner of Tiffin, Ohio. Seven quail were hatched from eight eggs in a cotton nest heated with an electric lamp. The eggs were taken to the game warden after the mother bird had been killed by an automobile.

Lost His False Teeth

When Burlington passenger train No. 43 arrived at Alliance, Neb., several minutes late recently, William Zollinger, conductor, handed in the following report of the delay at divisional headquarters. "Ten minutes delay looking for false teeth." Zollinger's teeth fell out of a window when he sneezed. Stopping the train by a sudden jerk of the air cord, he searched ten minutes in vain for them.

FIRST to adopt DUCO

THE General Motors Research Laboratories cooperated with E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Company, Inc., in the development of Duco—an achievement ranking in importance with the invention of the self-starter.

DUCO is not only far more lasting than paint and varnish; it is finer, more beautiful and more economical to apply in factory production.

DUCO was first adopted by Oakland, and immediately thereafter by the rest of the General Motors cars.

BUYERS of General Motors cars have profited by the development of this finer, more enduring finish. Their cars wear well longer.

The folks who stay right along in one place are apt to come out about as well on the average as those who are shifting around. For every one who makes gains as the result of his alert changes from one scene to some new one, there are several who never get a start because they are constantly throwing away the advantages they had and beginning new. The old adage about the "rolling stone" is still an apt illustration.

SAMUEL JOHNSON DIES OF APPOPLEXY

Appoplexy caused the sudden death of Samuel Johnson, of Auburn, janitor of th Riley school building at the corner of Van Buren and First streets, about 10 o'clock Thursday morning.

Mr. Johnson was discovered dead by his wife, who had taken his lunch to him at the school building. She found him on the floor of the school house basement where he evidently had fallen from a chair. He died probably a half hour before.

Mr. Johnson will be remembered by our older citizens, having been born in Concord township, June 15, 1861.

His mother will be remembered as Mrs. Elizabeth Steel, who resided east of the James Hamilton farm, later moving to New Paris, Ind., where she died in 1923.

His funeral was held Saturday.

NO WORLD COURT ENTRY FOR U. S.

American entrance into the world court has almost faded entirely out of the international picture.

The official announcement at the White House that President Coolidge does not approve the evasive manner in which the powers have dealt with the Senate reservations, and that he is disinclined to submit a new protocol to the Senate, thereby inviting a new and more acrimonious party struggle,is taken as shoving the whole project into a more of less permanent pigeon-hole.

The President's attitude is that the Senate reservations are clear and explicit, that they are necessary to protect American sovereignty, and that the powers can "take it or leave it."

This the powers have not done. They have supplied their own interpretation totally at variance with the Senate's purpose and the administration's conception of the meaning of the reservations.

On April 3, 1895 he was united in marriage to Harriett Snyder. To this union was born one child, a daughter. He leaves to mourn their loss his wife, daughter and her companion, Merwin J. Place, three sisters, two brothers and a host of relatives and friends.

THE FIGHT IS OVER

Well the fight is over, although many of the St. Joe sports are still adding rounds to the contest. Some say Dempsey is the best man while others do not agree. Jack himself says:—"Whether I retire or fight again is something I've not decided upon as yet. I'll make up my mind in a few days—perhaps after I talk it all over with my wife. When the last blow was struck Thursday night and Gene was the winner, I went to him and said: "You fought a great fight, Gene. I'd like to fight you again. Will you fight me again?"

Gene said, "Oh yes," and when I said "When?" he said, "Well, some time." I'd like to get another shot at Tunney. I'm not saying that I surely could win in that next fight. But I don't think I'd even show up as slow in any new fight with him. I couldn't get going—couldn't do my stuff. If I get another shot I could upset the old order of things that says a champion of the heavyweight division can't come back."

Predictions are made that should Tunney fight next summer, it will be a return match with Dempsey or Tommy Loughran, pride of Philadelphia.

Improved Snow Plow Keeps Railroad Open

The snow problem on the world's northernmost electric railroad, which crosses the Swedish peninsula almost entirely north of the Arctic circle, has now been solved by the introduction of two rotating electric snowplows, whose whirling steel knives cut through any drift that may pile up on the tracks overnight. Built chiefly to carry the Lapland ores to the sea coasts of either Sweden or Norway, the line runs most of the way through a semi-arctic desert, where not only snowstorms are violent, but where shoveling crews are hard to recruit, the region being practically uninhabited, except by Lapps and their reindeer herds. Last year the winter was particularly hard and freight trains loaded with iron ore got stuck in snowdrifts near the Swedish-Norwegian border as early as October. Since the arrival of the special snow plows, however, the route has been kept clean.

HOW I IMPROVED MY HEALTH

Did It in Less Than One Month

As Mrs. Weaver herself says, "I was never very strong." This is a mild statement describing her condition, for, according to her letters, she was subjected to no small amount of ill health. Fortunately, her sister was familiar with Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and begged Mrs. Weaver to try it. "After three or four weeks," writes Mrs. Weaver, "I felt a great difference in myself. I would go to bed and sleep sound, and although I could not do very much work, I seemed stronger. I kept on taking it and now I am well and strong, do my work and take care of three children. I sure do tell my friends about your wonderful medicine, and I will answer any letters from women asking about the Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. Lawrence Weaver, East Smithfield St., Mt. Pleasant, Pa.

If you knew that thousands of women suffering from troubles similar to those you are enduring had improved their health by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, wouldn't you think it was worth a trial?

Too Much "Acid?"

Excess Uric Acid Gives Rise to Many Unpleasant Troubles.

AUTHORITIES agree that an excess of uric acid is primarily due to faulty kidney action. Retention of this toxic material often makes its presence felt by sore, painful joints, a tired, languid feeling and, sometimes, toxic backache and headache. That the kidneys are not functioning right is often shown by scanty or burning passage of secretions. Thousands assist their kidneys at such times by the use of Doan's Pills — a stimulant diuretic. Doan's are recommended by many local people. Ask your neighbor!

Sees Bowlegs at Advantage in Life

Last spring a Kansas City boy, then aged two years, was observed by his parents and aunts to be quite obviously bowlegged. Great excitement was shared in by everybody except the child's father, who rather envies bowlegged people, being rather of an opposite persuasion himself. The child was taken to a specialist, who prescribed shoes with the outer soles built up. The shoes were obtained and lasted quite awhile, with the result that the boy is now knock-kneed.

A rehearing was granted by the specialist, who now recommends some more shoes built up on the inside soles. The shoes have been obtained, at cost of $9, and the father hopes for the best. He paid the $9 cheerfully, still in the hope that the boy may emerge bowlegged rather than otherwise.

"If he's knock-kneed," explains the father, "the best he can ever be is a pitcher. But bowlegs are suitable either for infield or outfield."—Kansas City News.

Close Study of Moon Soon to Be Possible

Suppose the moon started coming closer and closer to the earth until it were only ten miles away—what would it look like? We shall be able to answer this question exactly, for reports from Paris say that Prof. George Willis Ritchey is now completing a telescope which will show the moon as if it were only ten miles distant.

The telescope will increase the observable universe millions of times, it is estimated, says Popular Mechanics Magazine, for it will make visible stars that are now 15,000 times further away than any that can be seen at present through the best telescope. The reflector of this new instrument will be 19 feet 8 inches in diameter. It required two years to build the special furnace in which the glass is being prepared.

Sixty-seven years ago the great Blondin walked a rope stretched between the falls and the whirlpool rapids, across the gorge at Niagara, carrying a balancing pole 40 feet long and weighing 45 pounds. Later on he trundled a barrow across, and later on a man, H. Colcord, his manager. In 1860 Blondin walked across on stilts, this performance being witnessed by the prince of Wales, afterward King Edward VII.

MAKING DILL PICKLES IS NOT DIFFICULT

Placing Pickles in Salt Solution.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Dill pickles are prepared by putting them in a mild salt solution. In such a salt solution fermentation takes place within the cucumber, developing acid. Dill herb is also added, which gives a distinctive flavor to the pickles, though they may be made without the addition of the dill.

Use Jars or Kegs.

Dill pickles may be made in either stone jars or clean water-tight kegs or barrels. For a four-gallon jar proceed as follows: Place in the bottom of the jar a layer of dill and half an ounce of mixed spice, then fill the jar to within two or three inches of the top with washed cucumbers, which are as uniform in size as possible. Add another half ounce of spice and a layer of dill. Pour over the pickles a brine made up as follows: Salt, one pound; vinegar, three-fourths quart; water, 10 quarts. Cover with a board or plate, with sufficient weight on top to hold the cucumbers well below the brine.

Vinegar Is Desirable.

The vinegar is not always added, but it is desirable, since the cucumbers are less likely to soften if the vinegar is used. If the temperature is high enough (80 degrees Fahrenheit) the cucumbers will be cured in about two weeks. Any scum which comes to the surface should be skimmed off. When the fermentation is complete the pickles should be protected in some way against spoilage. They may be covered with a layer of paraffin, or they may be sealed in glass jars or tin cans. In transferring them to glass jars, fill with fresh brine made as directed above, adding a small amount of dill and spice. The brine should be boiled, then cooled slightly before pouring over the pickles.

WAY TO PRESERVE GREEN TOMATOES

Fruit Responds Readily to Action of Brine.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Tomatoes which develop late in the season are often prevented by frost from maturing. It is not necessary, however, to lose them entirely as they can be utilized in a number of ways. Where a large crop must be handled hurriedly, it is sometimes convenient to brine them. Green tomatoes, when put in a weak brine for a few weeks have a very agreeable flavor, and can be eaten when taken directly from the brine. It is believed by the United States Department of Agriculture that this offers a very satisfactory method of preparation for immediate use. A weak brine is made by adding one-half pound of salt to nine pints of water.

A strong brine is desirable for preserving green tomatoes when it is necessary to keep them for any length of time.

It has been found these fruits respond very readily to the action of brine. A 40 per cent brine, made by dissolving one pound of salt in nine pints of water, is the most satisfactory strength to use for green tomatoes. As the brine must be maintained at the same strength throughout the entire process of curing, and as juices which dilute the brine are drawn out of all products, it is necessary to add salt from time to time. A salinometer, which is a simple inexpensive piece of apparatus, is the best means of determining when the brine is of the required strength. Its use is recommended wherever possible, especially if any quantity is being handled. Lacking a salinometer, a simple household test for a 40 per cent brine is to drop a fresh egg in it. The egg should barely float, being almost submerged.

A keg or a stone jar is satisfactory for brining. Kegs must be well washed with hot water, and soaked overnight with fresh water to be sure they are watertight. Round boards covers coated with hot paraffin are used to keep the vegetable submerged in the brine. Clean bricks are used as weights. Another large round wood cover over the top of each keg is necessary to keep out the dust.

At frequent intervals it is necessary to remove, with a large wooden spoon, the scum which forms on the surface. This contains wild yeast, molds and various organisms. Covers and weights should be washed and the strength of the brine tested whenever the scum is being cared for.

The salt is removed from the brined tomatoes by soaking them in fresh water. They can then be made into sweet, sour or mixed pickles.

Inspection Mark Harmless

People often wonder whether the purple meat-inspection mark is harmful. The purple dye and all other ingredients of the marking fluid as applied to meats by the federal meat inspection service are entirely harmless and may be eaten with impunity.

Sugar Supplies Energy in a Concentrated Form

It is natural that thoughtful mothers should wonder why, if sugar is a good food, it is unwise to allow a child to eat many sweets. The United States Department of Agriculture explains that sugar supplies energy to the body in a very concentrated form. Refined sugar, however, furnishes only energy. It contains none of the protein, minerals, or vitamins which the growing body of a child must have in order to develop normally. If a child is allowed to eat many sweet foods his appetite is spoiled for the other foods that he needs. This is the reason that it is better for a child to eat cereal and fruit without sugar, and that any candy or sweet foods be given him at the end of the meal rather than at the beginning or between meals. Continued eating of large amounts of sweets by a child may also cause fermentation in the digestive tract.

Eating Sweets Unwisely Lessens the Appetite for Needed Foods Such as a Bowl of Milk and Mush.

Cooking Soft Custard

A soft custard should be cooked slowly in a double boiler and stirred almost constantly. If a custard is cooked in this way at a temperature lower than boiling a longer time is required but the custard is smooth and velvety. When it coats the spoon the custard is done and should be removed at once from the heat and cooled rapidly. Setting it in a pan of cold water will stop the cooking and prevent the custard from curdling. An overcooked soft custard that has curdled can be made smooth by beating with a dover egg beater.

Sodium Fluoride Poisons

Sodium fluoride and preparations containing sodium fluoride, while not as dangerous as arsenic, are poisonous to human beings when taken internally and should be handled with care. Such preparations should be kept out of the reach of children and when put out to kill insects should be distributed in such a way as to avoid all chance of contamination of food products with the material.

Not as Yet

This week's medal for optimism goes to the tiny black boy who, selling figs on the uptown section and told that the broiling sun would spoil his stock before he had sold it all, replied: "No, ma'am, I ain't never had a fig sp'il yet; I eats 'em befo' they sp'il."—New Orleans Times-Picayune.

DR. W. B. CALDWELL AT THE AGE OF 89

Old Folks Need a Mild Laxative —Not a "Physic"

Most men and women past fifty must give to the bowels some occasional help, else they suffer from constipation. One might as well refuse to aid weak eyes with glasses as to neglect a gentle aid to weak bowels.

Is your present laxative, in whatever form, promoting natural bowel "regularity"—or must you purge and "physic" every day or two to avoid sick headache, dizziness, biliousness, colds, or sour, gassy stomach?

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin helps to establish natural, regular bowel movement even for those chronically constipated. It never gripes, sickens or upsets the system. Besides, it is absolutely harmless and pleasant to take.

Buy a large 60-cent bottle at any store that sells medicine or write "Syrup Pepsin," Monticello, Illinois, for a FREE SAMPLE BOTTLE and just see for yourself.

A good deal depends on who is doing a thing and on what is being done. . .For instance:

Longfellow could take a piece of paper and write a poem on it and make it worth $5,000—that's genius. . .Ford can sign his name to a check and make it worth a million dollars—that's capital. . .A skilled worker can convert three cents worth of steel into watch springs worth hundreds of dollars—that's skill. . .Any man can spend his money as fast as he makes it—that's foolishness. . .Save, and keep your account at our Bank—that's business.

STATE REFUSES TO PAY LANDOWNERS

Appeals from the reports of the appraisers in the land condemnation suits of the state highway commission against Mrs. Rosella Smurr and Ora E. Bohler have been filed by the commission in the DeKalb circuit court.

The appraisers, Philip Habig of Jackson township and Frank E. Rhodes and Frank Baltz of Spencer township, Saturday reported that Mrs. Smurr was entitled to $166.75 for 1.96 acres of land, and that Mr. Bohler should get $175 for 1.60 acres of land and $1,300 dameges. The state wants the land for use in the construction of the new pavement between Waterloo and Butler.

Arthur L. Gillom attorney general, and his assistant, C. D. Ross, Tuesday filed the appeals. They claim the strip of land in each case is valued too high by the appraisers and that such an item as an element of damages is excessive. They also contend that the benefits resulting to the remainder of the land owned by the parties is assesseed too low. They say road No. 17 is an important road and that it connects with other state highways. Therefore, they contend, the land is specially benefited and that the appraisers failed to set off the full amount of such benefits.

The court will now set the cases for trial before a jury, which will reappraise the land. It is probable that the state will take a change of venue from DeKalb county.

IS IN HOSPITAL AWAITING DECISION

Mrs. Lillian Buckingham is in the St. Joseph hospital at Fort Wayne, awaiting decision of the doctors as to what relief can be offered her. She has been quite poorly for some time and her sudden attacks have become serious, on Tuesday she went for an examination. The decision of th doctors was made on Wednesday afternoon, but we were not able to get the information before going to press. It is thought that gall stones are the arttibuting causes of her illness. Let us hope that relief is in sight other than through an operation.

TELL YOUR WIFE SOME FIBS, INDIANA JUDGE ADVISES

Flatter Her Looks—That's Insurance Against Matrimonial Wrecks

Husbands who sneer at the screen shiek, and scoff at his drawing room attentions, could do well to follow his amorous example in their own homes, thinks Clinton H. Givan, judge of the Marion county superior court. Indifference of the husband has brought about more divorces than all other agencies, says Judge Givan, who has umpired in many marital clashes.

Although most divorces are filed by women, the most of them are inspired by the husband's lack of attention, the judge has found.

Judge Givan has several rules which he says will nearly always make for successful marriages. He says to the husband:

"Flatter her. Don't hesitate to lie to her about her looks. Women seek flattery. A woman will go with a bootlegger or a murderer if he is kind to her.

"Make enough money to support a wife or don't get married. A lot of young husbands and wives had too much money before they were married, they can't adjust themselves to a smaller income. Consider that before going to the alter.

"Let the wives control the children and run the house. Act as an advisor if called upon. The home is a wife's business and she doesn't like any minority stockholders attempting to overthrow her operations."

To the wives Judge Givan has this to say:

"If you can't cook, learn to. The stomach may not be the only road to a man's heart, but it is one of the most popular routes. Young men shouldn't get married until their sweethearts learn to cook.

"Wear your hair bobbed, your skirts short and your gowns low. It's your own business. Don't do it if you hope to attract other men. Your husband may have homicidal instincts.

"Don't pry into your husband's business affairs, but let him know you are interested and would like to discuss his problems with him.

"Have children. If there are no children in the home it is not a home—it's only a boarding house.

FORMER COUNTY TREASURER DIES

Charles H. Baber, former county treasurer, and life long resident of DeKalb county, died Thursday morning at his home in Auburn, from a complication of kidney and heart trouble.

Mr. Baber has been in poor health since leaving the office of county treasurer. During his last year in office he commenced to fail but he continued to discharge his duties with the exception of such times as he was compelled to be absent because of sickness, until his term expired four years ago. For the past four weeks he has been bedfast and in a critical condition.

Mr. Baber was elected treasurer in November, 1918, the first republican in forty years to be elected to that office. Previous to that he had ben active in local politics, especially in Butler township. For twelve years he served as road supervisor of Butler township. Mr. Baber took office as treasurer the first of January, 1919.

He was born in Butler township March 12, 1856. He started in the business of auctioneering in the year 1888, afterwards taking into partnership his son, Frank Baber. They cried sales extensively in the northern part of Indiana and in Ohio and Michigan.

Th funeral was held from the Auburn M. E. Church, Sunday afternoon.

"A Thing of Beauty Is a Joy Forever"

This is one of the beauty spots of the Sesqui-Centennial International Exposition in Philadelphia. The exposition celebrates the 150th anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence. The view shows the tower of one of the main exhibit buildings rearing its head up from among the gorgeous landscape which artists have built around the giant structures which house exhibits from forty-three nations of the world. The Exposition continues until December 1.

A SERIOUS DECLINE IN CHURCH ATTENDANCE

An eastern educational journal declares the school enrollment in this country is now the largest in history. And right on top of that we read a press dispatch from the same city in which leaders in religious work are worried over the decline in church attendance in the smaller towns and rural districts. Figures gathered from all parts of the country indicate a falling off in religious interest during the summer, but the hope is held out that it is due to the auto and that fall and winter will restore it to normal again.

But there is still another agency to be reckoned with from now until the return of spring—and that is the radio set. If attendance is falling off in our churches it is a serious thing, and it is not good for the country at large. If radio takes up where the auto leaves off and continues to keep church attendance down, then radio is not going to prove the blessing we had hoped for. We believe every man, woman and child in St. Joe and the surrounding community can get enough enjoyment out of their autos and radio sets to still have an hour or so left for church attendance. We need such things as autos and radios, of course, but we need that and our radio sets without letting them interfere more. We cannot speak for other communities, but as far as our own is concerned let us see that church attendance does not lag. Let's show the balance of the country that we can enjoy our autos and our radio sets without letting them interfere with our religious interests. It will be a good example for other communities.

MEXICO VOTES DOWN EPISCOPATE PETITION

The Mexican Chamber of Deputies today formally rejected the Catholic Episcopate's petition for amendment of the constitution and adopted resolutions declaring that Archbishop Mora y Del Rio and Bishop Ascual Diaz have forfeited their rights to Mexican citizenship by opposition to the constitution.

Th chamber rejected all proposals for amendment of the constitution to meet the demands of the episcopate.

The resolution declaring that Archbishop Mora y Del Rio and Bishop Diaz have forfeited their citizenship declares that "under article eight of the constitution the right of petition is conceded solely to Mexican citizens.

"Archbishop and Mora y Del Rio and Bishop Diaz have stated openly that they do and will not observe the present constitution in accordance with instructions from Rome."

FORMER ST. JOE RESIDENT PASSES AWAY

John Hefty, a farmer residing in the St. Clair neighborhood three miles north and east of Auburn, passed away at his home Wednesday night at 11:15 o'clock following a long sickness. He has been in failing health since last April and for nearly three weeks he has been bedfast. Enlargement of the liver with heart and stomach complications were contributing factors causing his death.

Mr. Hefty came to DeKalb county when a small boy from Vermillion, Ohio, where he was born March 11, 1860, his age being sixty-six years, six months and eleven days. Forty-six years ago he was married to Barbara Crooks of near Waterloo. To them were born four children, three of whom survive, the other, a son who died twenty-seven years ago.

Besides the widow, the surviving children are Fred Hefty and Harry Hefty who live in the neighborhood where their father resided, and Mrs. Clarence Wiler of Garrett. One brother, William Hefty of Hicksville, Ohio, fifteen grandchildren and two great grandchildren also survive.

Burial was made in the Spencerville cemetery, Sunday afternoon.

BOOZE GETS ANOTHER INTO TROUBLE

Lloyd Zimmer of Harlan, was placed in th DeKalb county jail Friday evening at 5:30 o'clock following his arrest on a charge of driving an automobile while intoxicated.

Zimmer was on his way home from Defiance, but apparently got on the wrong road. He was driving towards Auburn at a point a half mile of Jackson Center when he was met by Fred Saylor of St. Joe. Zimmer occupied the center of the highway and when Saylor tried to pass him he got too close to the ditch with his car and went in. Zimmer tried to pull the Saylor car out and got his own machine into the ditch on the opposite side of the road.

Sheriff Wm. G. Morr arrested Zimmer. Both cars were rescued from the ditch.—Star.

HOG CHOLERA IS BECOMING ALARMING

A few weeks ago we related an incident concerning the seriousness of hog cholera in the vicinity of Rehoboth, and in conversation with Dr. Baumgartner, he reports the disease spreading rapidly to the south of this community and that many farmers are suffering from the loss of hogs. One case is reported east of Spencerville to date.

The weather conditions are favorable for the spreading of cholera being wet and dark and pens being musty and taking all in consideration is hard to combat.

Dr. Baumgartner reports that the serum is hard to get, because of the disease being general, the demands are greater than the factory supply.

NEIGHBORING PAPER GREATLY IMPROVED

Some time ago our neighboring paper on the west, the St. Joe News, added a linotype to the equipment of the plant.

As fast as the publisher, Mr. Leighty, has become familiarized with the machine and able to get a good output from it, a great improvement is steadily taking place in the publication.

Much more home matter is being set and hence the paper grows more and more interesting and valuable to that community and business center.—Hicksville News-Tribune.

INJURED PHEASANT IN CARE OF WARDEN

Frank Leighty, while on duty as game warden, Monday, came across a beautiful Mongolian Pheasant, near the road side and the torrent of rain that had just passed seemed almost to take it's life. Seeing it's condition he proceeded to capture the bird and it seemed poor and in a very weak condition.

Upon examination there seemed to be a growth under it's beak that prevented it from obtaining food. The bird was taken to Dr. Baumgartner for examination and they discovered that the supposed growth was the tongue. It had been injured in some way and the tongue protruded through the hole and had swollen and become hard.

An operation was performed and the wound closed, and special care is being given by the Warden. If it can be nursed to health again, it will be given it's freedom.

The bird was bedecked with beautiful plumage.

YOUR HEART DOES ALL YOUR WORK

Although your heart is no larger than your closed fist, and probably weighs less than a half-pound, it does work that would quickly wear out the most powerful engine. The heart is only a hollow muscle forming two separate pumps. Each side of it holds about two ounces of blood, and as your heart beats or pumps about 75 times a minute, it's easy to figure that 150 ounces go through each side of it during that short time. Think of it, more than a gallon of blood flows through each side of your heart every minute of the day and night!

This means that each side of your heart pumps 70 gallons every hour; 1,680 gallons every day; and 603,000 gallons every year—so both sides of the heart together pump a total of about a million and one-fourth gallons of blood every year of your life. This constant stream of blood flows through your arteries and veins at the rate of 621 feet a minute, 7 miles an hour, 168 miles a day, and 61,000 miles in a year, or 11,000 miles more than twice around the earth at the equator! No person in the world has traveled as far as his own blood has.

Start counting slowly and by the time you have reached thirty a drop of blood has been pumped down to your little toe, has flowed back through the veins to the heart again, been pumped to the lungs and purified, flowed back to the heart and then pumped to your little toe again.

Your heart is the most important muscle in your body. All the other muscles depend upon it to furnish them with healthy blood that enables them to move when your brain gives them the signal. Therefore, you should take good care of your heart.

But be very careful that you don't over-strain your heart. Unlike most of our other muscles, it doesn't get stiff and sore when it has been used too much in heavy work or exercise, although each unnecessary strain may weaken the heart a certain amount that it never regains unless it is given a needed rest. Whenever you feel your muscles getting tired you may be sure that your heart is also becoming tired, so that is the time to stop, or at least slow up your pace.

Athletics are the finest kind of exercise for the heart, but they are often carried too far. Distance running is especially dangerous for young folks, as it overstrains and makes the heart grow larger than it ought to be. "Athletic heart" is a rather common thing where boys or men allow themselves to overstrain their hearts with too much exercise. To take care of this great strain the heart enlarges so that it may pump more blood to assist the overworked muscles. Then, perhaps, later on athletics are dropped and the enlarged heart hasn't enough to keep it working at full capacity, so it gets weaker and weaker.

The secret of giving your heart the best and needed amount of exercise is to always stop when you feel the first sign of exhaustion.

Lesson for October 10

THE REPORT OF THE SPIES

LESSON TEXT—Numbers 13:17-14:45.
GOLDEN TEXT—We are well able to overcome it.
PRIMARY TOPIC—Two Brave Spies.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Two Against Ten.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—The Brave and the Cowardly Scouts.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Courage of Faith.

I. The Spies Sent Out (13:17-20).

Less than two years have passed since the Israelites were delivered from Egyptian bondage. They are now at Kadesh-Barnea within sight of the promised land. Moses urged them to go in and take immediate possession (Deut. 1:21).

The record in Deuteronomy 1:19-25 shows that God did not take the initiative in sending out the spies, but that the people because of lack of faith made the request. There was a threefold purpose in sending out the spies.

1. To see whether the land was as God had told them (v.18).

2. To see whether the people who dwelt there were strong or weak, few or many (v.18).

3. And to see whether the cities were made up of strongholds or of tents (v.19).

II. The Commission Executed (13:21-25).

They entered the land from the south and traversed it to its northern limits. On their return from the north they gathered some specimens of the fruit of the land.

III. The Spies Rendered a Report (13:26-33).

1. The majority report (vv. 26-29).

(1) The land floweth with milk and honey (v. 27).

As a proof of it they displayed the fruit.

(2) The people who live there are strong (v. 28).

(3) The people lived in walled cities (v. 28).

(4) The land is inhabited by giants (v. 28, cf. 33).

In comparison with the inhabitants of the land they saw themselves as grasshoppers. Furthermore, they saw the people so distributed—the Amalekites in the south country, the Hittites, Jebusites and Amorites in the mountains, and the Canaanites along the seacost—that it was impossible to conquer them.

2. The minority report (vv. 30-33).

In part this report agreed with the first. It did not ignore the difficulties, nor dispute the facts, but it did deny the conclusion of the majority. They did not minimize the task before them, but asserted with God's help that they were well able to get possession of the land, and urged immediate action.

IV. The Rebellion of the People (14:1-45).

This rebellion began by crying (vv. 1-3). They lifted up their voices and cried, and the people wept that night. They even wished that they had died in the wilderness or in Egypt. God took them back to wander in the wilderness for thirty-eight years.

2. Proposition to return to Egypt. (vv. 4-10).

Their crying was followed by a proposal to organize for the return to Egypt. They purposed to select a captain as their leader. Joshua and Caleb protested against this, which so exasperated the people that they were about to stone them. At this point God interposed in their behalf.

3. God's wrath upon the people (vv. 11-12).

Because of their unbelief He proposed to smite them with pestilence and to disinherit them, supplanting them with a nation mightier than they.

4. Moses' intercession in behalf of the people (vv. 13-19).

Moses plead with God against this judgment because the Egyptians would hear of it and blaspheme and this they would pass on to the other nations, saying that God was not able to bring them into the land.

5. The Lord's response to Moses' plea (v. 20-39).

He assured Moses that He had granted pardon according to his intercession, but told him that although He would bring them into the land according to His promise, yet with the exception of Joshua and Caleb the men of that generation should be debarred.

6. The presumption of the people (vv. 40-45).

Having in unbelief refused to go up at the command of Moses, now in presumption they go. Moses advised them against such presumption, saying, "the Lord will not be with you."

To the Point

"Censorship, or rather too much censorship," declared Tod Browning, famous director of crook and Oriental pictures, "is sapping the films of their vividness and vitality. Too many pictures today, owing to unintelligent censorship, are about as effective as the top sergeant from college who said to his men who were moving about in rank:

"'Gentlemen! You are supposed to be at attention.'"

FEELING LOTS BETTER NOW

Writes Ethel May Snider Who Used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Hartford City, Ind.—Doing housework and taking care of a sick woman proved to be too much for Ethel May Snider, R. R. 1 of Hartford City, until she started taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Overwork had so undermined her health that she had to give up all outside work, and when she saw this medicine advertised in the "Star" and other papers, she went to druggist and got a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. She took it regularly, was greatly benefited and now feels very much better.

Ethel May Snider's experience is similar to that of thousands of other women in all walks of life, who have sent testimonials to the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Company of Lynn, Mass.

Among those who praise the Compound are young girls who have been enabled to attend school regularly —working girls who have gained strength and endurance so necessary to them, housewives and mothers who have found that the t nic-effect of the Compound has enabled them to perform their daily tasks more easily.

Her face blazed dull crimson, the glitter in her eyes concentrated to flames of jealousy. Here was the real reason—aside from mercenary interest—for her revelation.

"How do you know he is in love with her?"

"How do I know?" She laughed scornfully. "Because I am a woman. Because I know Ted Baxter. Because I know that he never loved me, has never loved any girl. We've been amusements for him. But he's in love now. He couldn't deny it when I taxed him with it.

"Baxter's rotten, clean through. I'll tell you what your 'best friend' did. Not because you wouldn't lend him money—or couldn't. But because he saw a chance to do away with you as a rival and a chance to make money at the same time. He couldn't resist that combination.

"So he told her and her father all about your schemes, that you had made friends with them to cover your prospecting, your surveys and your photographing. It seems that one of their men, a Mexican, had been watching you. He saw you early one morning where you had been testing rock. He reported to Mr. Clinton and that made Clinton suspicious. The girl stuck up for you at first. But now—you know better than I do the kind of man Clinton is. But he was furious. He says you abused his hospitality, that you intended to desecrate the graves of his dead. He called you a Yankee spy. And he gave Ted Baxter a purchase option for agricultural purposes. Principally, of course, as a protection for himself against condemnation.

"Now Ted is laughing at you. The representative of the colony is in town. Ted takes him to Hermanos valley tomorrow. And you are the fool. Unless . . ."

"Unless what?"

"Baxter thinks he is going to marry that girl. I don't know what kind of a girl she is. She may take him on the rebound, if she was in love with you. But she won't marry him. Baxter is going to marry me."

"I thought you were going away."

"After he marries me. After he makes our child honest." The flame leaped again in her eyes. "He dared—he dared to pretend that he was not the father of my baby. And he knows—oh, he knows different. I was a little fool when I met him but—I was a good girl. I wanted fun—and I got it. But, if I pay, he'll pay, too. I'm not going to live with him. He's a liar and a cheat. My baby may inherit that. If it does I hope it dies.

"I've got to give up my position soon, the girls are beginning to notice things. I'll go away. I can get another place after it's all over. But I'll not go on his money. Even if he came through. Now, Mr. Warner, have I earned my fifteen hundred dollars?"

"You shall have it," said Caleb slowly. Resentment was swift, mounting to rage, within him but he kept a grip on himself—until he met Baxter. "You've earned your money. You shall have it tomorrow."

She saw little muscles bunched about his lower jaw, the clean, firmest line of it, light like that reflected from polished steel in his eyes. Into her own eyes admiration entered.

"You've got something up your sleeve," she said knowingly. "I'd like to watch your session with Baxter. Don't kill him." She laughed, off key, recklessly.

"I won't," Caleb promised grimly "How'll I get the money to you?"

She took out a pencil and a card and scribbled.

"Here's my address. Send it there. Now, let me go away first while you settle the check. It might spoil your reputation if we were seen going out together," she added, bitterly. "Good-by."

She parted the curtains and was gone as Caleb touched the bell. The waiter came promptly and he paid the bill and started for the street.

As Caleb entered the foyer the swinging doors from the main cafe opened and Clinton and his daughter emerged.

Automatically, without thought, he raised his hat. Betty Clinton was looking in his direction and she did not evade his glance. Neither did she answer it. But Caleb saw a faint color stealing up from neck to brow, saw her eyebrows contract in annoyance. Then her father saw him. Clinton's eyes blazed while Caleb bit his lips as he replaced his hat, furious at his action yet not certain that he would not have repeated it. He was unconscious of anything that he had done that should cause him to retract courtesies towards the Clintons. To do so would be an acknowledgment of a shamefacedness he was far from feeling.

"Go on and join Baxter," Clinton [illegible] voice to his daughter. She went through the open door held for her by an attendant. Baxter had been with them. He had gone ahead to the car. Baxter must have been sitting beneath the alcove where Caleb and Mary Morgan had held their interview. And Betty Clinton had seen the pale face and shrinking figure of the stenographer on the stairs behind Caleb. He was sure of that as Clinton advanced toward him threateningly while the thoughts shuttled swiftly through his brain. He faced Clinton coolly.

"You are impudent, sir," said Clinton, his breath almost fuming with the temper he held in uncertain leash.

"I have only one arm left, sir," went on Clinton, "but, if you have the impertinence to again salute me or my daughter, I shall find it sufficient to horsewhip you, you sneaking Yankee!"

Caleb did not flinch. His voice grittted.

"You will apologize to me some day, sir. I . . ."

"Pah!" Clinton wheeled, his straight, spare form marching with military precision through the door. Caleb watched him, his blood seeming to boil. Before he could follow Mary Morgan touched him on the elbow. He whirled, in no mood for her.

"Don't snarl at me," she said. "Snarl at Ted Baxter. I want to tell you something. That girl doesn't quite believe all she has heard. And the reason is, because she doesn't want to. Now go."

As Caleb crossed the street a car went by, Baxter driving. Clinton and his daughter were in the tonneau. Caleb's hands balled into fists, opened with clutching fingers. He ached to spring for the footboard and drag Baxter from behind the wheel. Baxter saw him standing to let them pass and shrugged his shoulders as he gave Caleb a short smile of gleeful malice. Caleb made the curb, trembling with rage. He had shaken before like that, waiting for the zero hour in the trenches, before he lunged over the top with righteous murder in his heart. If he had had the instant opportunity he would have smashed Baxter to a pulp or choked him. He swung off uptown, revenge deferred, anger master of his brain.

Caleb had no immediate means of tracing Baxter. But, sooner or later, the other must show up at the apartment-house to change his clothes—or at the club. Caleb went to the latter place first. He held only one fixed desire, to come face to face with his false friend and have a reckoning with him. Baxter's actions had been deliberate, despicable. Caleb might have passed over the land deal with contempt. It was shyster, underhanded business, but many might consider it merely smart and consider that Caleb should have protected his own interests. But, to treacherously use stolen knowledge from the Water company to undermine Caleb with Betty Clinton—her father did not seem to enter into the immediate problem—to proclaim Caleb as an abuser of hospitality—worse—to make him out a scoundrel in the eyes of the girl he loved—for Baxter to endeavor to gain for himself the love of that girl, was beyond all forgiveness. It clamored for punishment, physical, amply sufficient.
